FRANCE IS SAUCY.

Paris Papers Begin on Germany.

Free With Their Criticisms in View of the Entente With England.

Germany Evidently Will Line up Her Military Forces With Russia.

Anglo-French Story Causes Talk Among the Diplomats in London.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PARIS, Oct. 7.—A marked reaction in public sentiment has followed the Franco-German accord concerning the Morocco conference, many leading newspapers renewing their campaign of criticism against Germany. This is due principally to Chancellor Von Buelow's open statements, favoring a Russo-German rapprochement.

The Matin reviews the cricumstances of M. Delcassé's retirement from the Foreign Office, alleging that a number of sensational events occurred in connection with the change. M. Delcassé is represented as making a speech to the ministry, warning them that if they yielded to the German demands concerning Morocco the ministry thereafter would always be subject to German dictation.

The Matin further asserts that Great Britain conveyed definite assurances to France of her readiness to mobilize the British fleet with the view of adopting aggressive measures if Germany attacked France.

CAT OUT CAUSES TALK.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

LONDON, Oct. 7.—The Matin's disclosures purporting to give details in connection with the resignation of the French Foreign Minister, M. Delcassé, because of the Moroccan situation, and the sensational statement that "Great Britain not only communicated to France her intention of aiding France in the event of a war with Germany, but actually giving details of her intentions regarding the place for the landing of troops and the seizure of the Kiel Canal, created much talk in diplomatic circles today, and are published at length in all the afternoon newspapers.

In official quarters, however, no expression of opinion was obtainable. Foreign Minister Lansdowne was absent from the city, and consequently it was impossible to secure a definite statement regarding the actual lengths to which Great Britain went at the time of the crisis.

During that time the Associated Press secured a statement from a high official of the Foreign Office which, to a certain extent supports the assertions of the Matin. The statement referred to says that Great Britain would welcome a defensive alliance with France, because it would insure a long continuance of European peace by acting as a check to German ambitions.

NO CAUSE FOR SCARE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A part of the press has been making the most of the scare of a supposed German - Russian-French counter-alliance against the Anglo-Japanese, but it has not impressed serious observers, has no adequate foundation, and is self-evidently ridiculous. The new combination could not even hold its own in far eastern waters, and would find no possible rewards commensurate with the necessary sacrifice. Besides, it is daily clearer that the Anglo-Japanese alliance is weak for aggressive purposes, but impregnable on the defensive side.

Similar considerations are expressed this week with tearful candor by the Novoe Vremya, hitherto Anglophobic Finding no weak point in this hostile alliance, that journal now proposes to disarm it by securing the adhesion to its provisions of all the European powers.

MAKE NOISE FOR TAFT.

Secretary is Received at Sandy Hook With All the Honors That are Due His Position.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Big and little guns boomed today at the proving grounds at Sandy Hook and from Battery Hallock a shell from the twelve-inch mortar was hurtled high over Ambrose Channel, all for the delectation of the Secretary of War and the distinguished party that came with him. When all that could be shown the Secretary had been inspected, the latter said to a reporter for the Herald and The Times that the big sixteen-inch gun had impressed him most.

"The gun has been fired ten times, and has so far come up to the requirements prescribed for it. A gun that fires a 2400-pound projectile is a formidable weapon, you may believe. That the government has any intention of abandoning the construction of more of this kind is not true."

GRANT'S CHIEF OF STAFF DYING.

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Gen. William Thomas Clark, only surviving adjutant-general and chief of staff of Grant's Army of the Tennessee, is dying from cancer in St. Luke's Hospital. Dr. Curtis performed an operation, but the advanced age of Gen. Clark and the extent of the malady prevented him from rallying.

CRIPPLING AMERICAN TRADE.

Canada Unwilling to Alter Law Which Debars Vessels from Carrying Between Her Ports.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

OTTAWA, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] From a semi-official source it is learned that the Dominion government is averse to altering the law which debars United States vessels from carrying from one Canadian port to another.

There is a rumor in the West to the effect that grain exporters, in consequence of the Canadian vessel owners' decision to carry no wheat from Fort William or Port Arthur to Georgian Bay ports for less than two cents per bushel, will ask the Federal authorities temporarily to waive the clause in the international coasting law which prohibits a foreign boat from receiving a cargo at one Canadian port and delivering it at another.

Some shippers declare that even if they acquiesce in the carriers' demand for two cents per bushel it will be impossible, without the assistance of American boats, to export the required amount of the present season's immense yield of wheat before the close of navigation.

NORWEGIANS DEBATE TREATY.

LONG LINE OF TALK BEGINS ON KARLSTAD PACT.

Agreement Will Undoubtedly be Accepted by Overwhelming Majority, After Which Prince Charles of Denmark Will be Asked to Become King.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHRISTIANIA, Oct. 7—In the Storthing today the debate was opened on the Karlstad agreement concerning the dissolution of the union between Norway and Sweden. The Republican minority, which is opposed to the agreement, and which is supposed to number twenty votes, profited by the occasion to attack Premier Michelsen and Foreign Minister Loeveland and other Norwegian negotiators.

The discussion began in the morning and was adjourned late tonight. It will be continued on Monday and undoubtedly will result in the acceptance by an overwhelming majority of the government's proposal. Norway will then await a corresponding decision by the Swedish Riksdag and the notification of the powers of the dissolution of the union before electing as King Prince Charles of Denmark, which is expected to take place the last week in October.

Mr. Prehonsem, chairman of the special committee appointed to report on the negotiations, opened the debate. He said a more definite result might, indeed, have been desired in many respects, but that the house would serve the true interests of the country by adopting the agreement now.

The spokesman of the minority said that if the fortifications were razed Sweden would be able to develop an army and hinder Norwegian mobilization and render Norway powerless. The minority, he added, had hoped to secure the independence of Norway, but the agreement curtailed independence to such an extent that the minority would rather retain the union.

Premier Michelsen said the laurels won by the Swedish Chauvinists filled the Norwegian Chauvinists with envy. It had been the object of Norwegian policy to repress this Chauvinism. The whole of the north was grateful to the Swedish Liberals for combatting Chauvinism. All the powers, the Premier continued, had earnestly advised Norway to arrange the relations with Sweden to which the government's efforts were directed, and added that a majority of the experts consulted were of the opinion that the retention of the fortifications was not a vital question. M. Kastberg attacked Premier Michelsen, accusing him of undue deference to Sweden in disregard of the national honor of Norway.

Rev. Mr. Erickson, Socialist, proposed to submit the Swedish conditions to The Hague for arbitration. This was opposed by Foreign Minister Loeveland, Minister for Defense Olessen and Minister of Commerce and Industry Arctander.

MOSCOW FACES FAMINE.

Bakers Strike and Proclamations Assert That Event Heralds Another Phase of Revolution.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MOSCOW, Oct. 7.—The strike here has spread to the bakers. There is sufficient white bread to last only two days. The large crowds of strikers in the streets are assuming a threatening attitude. The employés of the street railways have joined in the strike.

AUTHORITIES UNEASY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 7.—The strike movement at Moscow is causing uneasiness among the authorities here, not only on account of the threatening nature of the demonstrations at Moscow, but also by the probability of their extending to St. Petersburg and other cities and starting a wave of labor troubles similar to that which followed in the wake of the January disorders.

There is a strong strike sentiment among the St. Petersburg printers and revolutionary proclamations are being distributed among the workmen, declaring that the Moscow events are the tocsin for another phase of the revolution.

VINDICATED OF EXTRAVAGANCE.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 7.—At the end of an all-night session of the United States Railway Mail Association convention, during which George A. Wood secretary and treasurer of the association, was vindicated of charges of extravagance, officers were elected and the convention adjourned. D. E. Burns of Wichita, Kan., was chosen president.

Hearst Afraid of the Socialist Nomination for Mayor of New York City.

Feelers Put Out Show That Overwhelming Defeat Would be His.

Citizens Who are Patriots Want to See Dist.-Atty. Jerome Go to Front.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It is taken for granted in New York tonight that Hearst is afraid to run for Mayor. He was put forward by the Socialistic element as their candidate and was tempted to take the bait, but the probability now is that he will decline the nomination. He has been putting out feelers and he finds that an overwhelming defeat would probably be his portion. He dares not get into the game. George B. McClellan is the only "regular" nominee now in the field. He is a stayer. Charles E. Hughes, the Republican favorite, has refused to run and probably will continue to refuse. The most earnest citizens of the patriotic type want to see Dist.-Atty. Jerome go to the front, but his fate as a petition candidate is in doubt.

That the nomination of Mr. Hughes was due to a desire to prevent the insurance investigation from "going too far" and in the hope of limiting its scope was widely believed today. Anticipating the declination of Mr. Hughes, the Republican leaders began to turn to Senator Nathaniel A. Elsberg as their logical candidate. Richard Young, nominated by the Republicans for Controller against his protest, persists in his determination not to run.

In each borough, the Republicans are being forced to depend upon their own resources. In Brooklyn, efforts to name a local fusion ticket failed and Maj. F. H. E. Ebstein, formerly a deputy police commissioner, was nominated for borough president. The McCarren machine nominated James W. Ridgeway. The fusion movement against Joseph Cassidy has been frustrated in Queens and Mr. Cassidy was renominated last night for president of the borough. Absolutely no plans have been made for the Republican tickets in New York county or the boroughs of Manhattan and The Bronx.

TAMMANY PREDICTIONS.

In Tammany it was positively predicted that Supreme Court Judges Ingraham and Gildersleeve will be retained and that Judge Newburger of the Court of General Sessions will be nominated for the third Supreme Court vacancy. It was stated in Fourteenth street also that in case Tammany finally decides not to indorse Mr. Jerome, James W. Osborne will receive the nomination for District Attorney.

Friends of Hearst said yesterday it was unlikely he would make any reply until after the notification committee of the Republican convention tells Charles E. Hughes officially of his nomination for Mayor by the Republican convention and Mr. Hughes' definite answer.

There is considerable basis for the opinion that if Mr. Hughes consents to run, the Municipal Ownership League will indorse the Republican ticket and will devote all its energy in that direction. Members of the Municipal Ownership League were considering the result in case Hearst should decline to accept the nomination. Trouble is expected in case he should decline, as the followers of R. Fulton Cutting, president of the Citizens' Union, in out-voting the radicals in the city convention last Monday night on the question of nominating a third ticket, forced at least a third of the men who have been active heretofore in the city committee of that organization to bolt. These men went over to the Municipal Ownership League. In fact, Hearst was nominated by Simon Levy, one of the most insistent of the members of the Citizens' Union in favor of a third ticket at the convention on Monday and was seconded by Timothy Healy, Van Vleck, Augustus H. Stebbins and others who have always been active in the union.

WON'T GO TO PHILADELPHIA.

Fairbanks Has No Desire to Mix up in the Machine Politics of the Quaker City.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

INDIANAPOLIS (Ind.) Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Vice-president Charles Warren Fairbanks has determined not to get mixed up in the cesspool of Philadelphia politics this year and has declined urgent invitations to speak in behalf of the machine in that city. Having declined to serve the machine forces, he has also declined to take part in the State campaign, feeling that he could not well go to Pennsylvania to advocate the cause of the State Republicans and when there refuse to speak for the machine.

Mr. Fairbanks has said to friends, in discussing the invitation from Philadelphia, that he thinks he has done his part this year, meaning that he has made all the speeches that can reasonably be required of him.

KAISER FELICITATES PRESIDENT OF PEACE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—Representative Bartholdt of St. Louis, chairman of the American delegation to the interparliamentary conference at Brussels, presented to the President today a personal message of felicitation from Emperor William of Germany.

"Do me the honor," said Mr. Bartholdt, quoting the German Emperor, "to convey to President Roosevelt my highest personal regards."

Mr. Bartholdt, who had an extended interview with the President, said that the President is held in the most cordial estimation by the rulers of the European powers. The King of Belgium, Mr. Bartholdt said, was hanging in his bed chamber a handsome portrait of the President. He assured Mr. Bartholdt the portrait was the first object he saw every day.

Mr. Barthlodt assured the President that the sentiment in favor of the adjustment of international differences by arbitration is increasing materially in Europe. The Brussels conference was a most important step to arbitration, the participants being many of the prominent members of the legislative bodies of the world.

Referring to the acquiescence of the President in the desire of Emperor Nicholas to call the second peace conference at The Hague, Mr. Bartholdt said: "It was most graceful of the President thus to defer to Emperor Nicholas, and his action was cordially appreciated. I don't know when the conference will be held, but very likely it may be next spring. That it will accomplish a great and lasting good, I have no doubt."

SMOOT'S TRICK TOO PALPABLE.

APOSTLE-SENATOR WOULD PUT UP BIG BLUFF.

Knowing He Must Further Defend Himself at Washington in December, Mormon High Priest Refrains from Confirming Polygamous Peers, but Lifts No Voice Against Them.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SALT LAKE (Utah) Oct. 7.—United States Senator Reed Smoot, an apostle of the Mormon Church, who, in conference yesterday, refrained from voting to sustain the Quorum of Apostles and other authorities of the Church, today gave out a statement explaining his position. He said:

"I will not vote to sustain as members of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints John W. Taylor and Matthias F. Crowley until they have had some hearing by some competent authority in the church. I do not think it proper for us to vote to sustain them."

Apostle Smoot defined "competent authority" as a bishop's ecclesiastical court.

Apostles Taylor and Crowley are reputed to have taken plural wives since the promulgation of the Woodruff anti-polygomy manifesto, and for months past their whereabouts have not been definitely known. All efforts to subpoena them as witnesses in the Smoot hearing at Washington failed. At that time, it was reported that one of them was in Mexico and the other in Canada, but recently both were reported in Utah.

In the hearing at Washington before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections Senator Smoot declared that he would not vote to sustain them in the General Conference of the church. Senator Smoot did not attend the conference in April last. Yesterday, he refrained from voting, but did not vote in the negative or offer any protest.

HAVE NO FEAR OF FEVER.

New Orleans to Show the President That City Lightly Regards Visitation of Yellow Jack.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 7.—Report to 6 p.m: New cases, 29; total, 3176; deaths, 3; total, 419; new foci, 8; under treatment, 207; discharged, 2559.

At the close of the eleventh week of the struggle against yellow fever the health authorities summed up the situation tonight as full of encouragement.

Arrangements for the President's reception and entertainment are progressing, and every effort is to be made while he is here to convince him that in New Orleans fear of the fever has entirely passed. The route of the procession to the City Hall will carry him past the Lee monument, on the immense circular mound, about which there will be gathered several thousand school children armed with American flags. The streets through which the President is to be escorted are to be decorated on a lavish scale.

WAS NO GREAT "UPRISING."

German Government Receives Information from South Africa Relative to Boer Plot.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BERLIN, Oct. 7.—The government has received an answer from Gen. Von Trotha, commanding the German forces in Southwest Africa, to a cabled request for information concerning the reported Boer plot to overthrow German rule in Southwest Africa.

Gen. Von Trotha represents the newspaper reports of the incident as much exaggerated. He says a certain young Boer informed the Windhoek police that teamsters from Cape Colony who were in the German service had formulated a plan to attack a German wagon train accompanied by a herd of cattle which they meant to steal and drive across the British frontier. The police arrested four of the ringleaders of the plot and detained them pending an investigation. There was no evidence, Gen. Von Trotha says, that they were conspiring with the natives.

The dispatch makes no mention of Andrew Dewet, a nephew of the Boer general who was previously reported as being arrested with four other Boers, accused of plotting the overthrow of German rule in Southwest Africa. The date of Gen. Von Trotha's dispatch is not made public.

"BEEF TRUST" IS SUBTLE.

Puts in a Bid for Animal Meat for New York City Under a New, Harmless Name.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Through the daily meat bill of the animals at the Central Park menagerie is brought to light a new move on the part of the "beef trust" to control the retail market of this city. In opening the bids for the 225 pounds of "chucks" required daily by the chef of the animals at Central Park, the lowest bid was found to be that of the "Atlantic Supply Company." Though the Atlantic Supply Company's name is not found on signboard or wagon it is playing an important part in the retail meat business of this city.

The new company is simply a device on the part of Armour & Co. for reaching the retail trade without attracting attention. It quoted a price of $4.02 a hundred pounds to the museum to drive out a private concern which had been charging $5.39.

England and Russia to Negotiate.

Mutual Spheres of Influence in Afghanistan Now up for Settlement.

With Safety of India Guaranteed, Britain Wants an Understanding.

St. Petersburg Admits John Bull Holds Upper Hand in the Matter.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

LONDON, Oct. 7.—The negotiations respecting their spheres of influence in Afghanistan pending between Great Britain and Russia when the Russo-Japanese war broke out will be resumed, should Russia be willing, of which there seems to be no doubt. The British government is anxious that questions which caused uneasiness in the past should again be the subject of friendly discussions between the diplomats of the two governments. Great Britain has already taken steps to this end.

An official of the Foreign Office informed the Associated Press that it was rather premature to speak of the negotiations, but he intimated that the government had taken the initiative in looking to a resumption of the exchange of views. The government had always hoped, the official added, that the negotiations would be resumed and realized that the present was the most opportune time as the peoples of the two countries recognized that it was to their mutual benefit that the questions in dispute be amicably settled.

The negotiations which are about to be resumed have a particular reference to Afghanistan, where each desires that the other government guarantees not to extend its sphere of influence. Russia has shown a desire to reach an understanding by curbing the aggressive policies of her border governors. This has created a good impression in Great Britain.

Respecting the report that Great Britain is willing to recognise Russia's special privileges in South Turkey in return for Russian assurance of non-aggressive policy on the Indian frontier, the Associated Press was given to understand that the question has not been discussed officially. It is possible, however, that Great Britain is waiting for such a suggestion to come from Russia, when it might receive favorable consideration.

Great Britain's policy in regard to Constantinople is dominated by consideration for the security of the highway to India. With the safety of India guaranteed by the Anglo-Japanese treaty and an understanding with Russia, there will be no reason to fear the presence of Russia on the Bosphorus.

Great Britain has also to offer in exchange for the further security of her Indian possessions her support in obtaining free commercial access to the Persian gulf.

CHIVALRY CONSTRAINS SLAVS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] One of the cleverest diplomats in St. Petersburg, summing up the situation, today, said:

"A thorough understanding between England and Russia today is necessary, but it is impossible that the first move should come from Russia.

"England must take the initiative and say: 'Russia, this is our programme. Do you approve of it? If so, let us arrange matters.'

"England can and must do this. She holds admittedly the upper hand; ordinary chivalry necessitates her making the first advances. Should England do so, it is certain Russia will meet her more than half way."

Governor Deneen made the presentation speech, and was followed by United States Senator Foraker of Ohio, who delivered an address on "Salmon Portland Chase."

DEMOCRATS DO BUSINESS.

Those of the Bay State Put up Gen. Bartlett.

Platform Praises Action of President Roosevelt.

Windy Bill Bryan is Turned Down Hard.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BOSTON, Oct. 7.—Gen. Charles W. Bartlett of Boston today was nominated by the Massachusetts Democracy for Governor. There were no contests for any of the places on the ticket.

Up to the time that James E. Cotter of Hyde Park arose to place before the convention the name of Gen. Bartlett as the gubernatorial candidate, it was believed that there would be a contest. Former Mayor John H. McNamee of Cambridge had announced that he would make a struggle for the honor of leading the party in the coming campaign.

Just before adjournment, Gen. Bartlett and Mr. Whitney entered the hall and were given a tremendous ovation. Both made brief addresses. Gen. Bartlett closed by saying, in reference to the November election: "When the votes have been counted sombody will learn that there has been a fight."

The only drawback to unanimity in the voting at the Democratic State convention at Faneuil Hall, in this city today was the possible entrance as a candidate for Governor of former Mayor John H. McNamee of Cambridge.

The State committee had arranged a slate headed by Gen. Charles W. Bartlett of Boston, as the candidate for Governor, and Henry M. Whitney of Brookline for Lieutenant-Governor.

Efforts had been made to induce Mr. McNamee to withdraw. He seemed determined, however, to go into the convention because he had been given the support of the delegates from Medford and Cambridge, and of some from the western part of the commonwealth. The remainder of the ticket as agreed upon included Henry M. Little of Newburyport for Secretary of State; John P. Leahy of Boston for Attorney-General; Patrick J. Ashe of North Adams for Auditor, and Daniel J. Dougherty of Westfield for Treasurer and Receiver-General.

The platform to be presented by the Committee on Resolutions was understood to contain a plank favoring mild or gradual municipal ownership, a declaration against Federal supervision of insurance companies and a reciprocity plank, almost identical with that proposed by the Committee of One Hundred of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, of which Henry M. Whitney is president.

Former Congressman John H. Thayer of Worcester was selected as permanent chairman.

PLATFORM PLATITUDES.

Chairman Howes of the Committee on Resolutions reported the platform, of which the following is an abstract:

The paramount issue at this time before the people of Massachusetts is relief from the tariff restrictions. The effect of this policy forged upon the dominant Republican party by the greed of great and selfish interests had been to cut Massachusetts from its natural markets of sale or purchase and to push the State toward the danger line of industrial decline. It is shown in trade reports, financial statements and census returns that, while the industries of the country as a whole have materially increased in the past decade, those of this State have remained nearly stationary. We believe that a sensible relief from these evils could be obtained without disturbance of business by placing upon the free list a number of the raw materials of our industries, such as coal, iron, lumber, hides, wool, pulp and by the immediate enactment of a dual tariff law which, while having the present tariff as its maximum, would give liberal reductions in duty rates to those nations that will accord to us favorable trade opportunities.

We believe that general laws should take the place of special laws in legislation relative to public service corporations; that all corporations should be prohibited from contributing money to be used for political purposes, that, as the tariff is the mother of trusts these offsprings should be deprived of the excessive protections by means of which they are oppressing the people; that United States Senators should be elected by the people and that pending the passage of a Constitutional amendment State legislation should be provided for their nomination by direct popular vote; that in all attempts made to regulate the business of the country through the medium of the national government care has been taken to respect the rights of the State governments and to prevent the creation of bureaucratic authorities capable, when treated in a distinct capacity, and when working without responsibility of overriding the wishes and destroying the liberty of the people. We believe that legislation should be enacted giving to cities and towns broader powers in the conduct and control of business which derives its profits from the necessities of the community having experienced and demonstrated that under favorable conditions and proper management the business of public utilities can be conducted by municipal corporations with profit to the people, both in price and service.

PRESIDENT PRAISED.

We believe that the revelations of life insurance corruption brought out by the investigation now going on in New York City, make it evident that there cannot be for these corporations too much or too close official oversight and we present against substituting a system of national control of more than questionable constitutionally for the question of State supervision. We heartily commend the diplomatic courage and sagacity of President Roosevelt in exerting the great influence of his office to bring to an end the terrible and bloody war in the Far East.

The platform as reported was adopted, although a substitute was offered by Delegate Watson, who in answer to a query from the gallery, said it was written by William J. Bryan of Nebraska. The substitute reaffirmed the financial views of Mr. Bryan and advocated municipal ownership and federal control of railroad rates and of great industrial corporations and insurance companies.

Gen. Charles W. Bartlett of Boston was nominated by acclamation, as candidate for Governor.

Henry M. Whitney, of Brookline was nominated for Lieutenant-Governor by acclamation.

The other names in the ticket were accepted as reported by the Committee on Ballots. The candidates were: Secretary of State, Henry M. Little of Newburyport; Treasurer and Receiver-General, Daniel J. Dougherty of Westfield; Auditor, H. J. Ashe of North Adams; Attorney-General, John P. Leahy of Boston.

Savannah Harbor Contractors Who Had Long Fought Extradition Leave Montreal in Company of Strong Guard of Secret Service Men—Have Kind Remembrances.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MONTREAL, Oct. 7.—The last chapter, so far as Canada is concerned, in the celebrated Gaynor and Greene case was closed today when the two men started for the United States.

A large crowd was at the depot to see them off, but the most notable thing about the departure was the large number of United States Secret Service men who were around. They were in charge of W. J. Flynn, head of the Secret Service Bureau of New York. On behalf of the Dominion government, Silas H. Carpenter, chief of the Montreal detective force, who kidnaped the two men from Quebec, and Inspector McMahon went with the party as far as Rouse's Point, New York, the boundary line being between Rouse's Point and La Calle, Canada.

The prisoners had been notified that they probably would be removed this morning and were ready when Detective Boyd of the United States Secret Service called for them in the Debtors Ward. The United States officers came with three cabs and the party left the jail a little after 7 o'clock. They drove immediately to the Bonaventure Station, where the prisoners ate breakfast in the station dining-room. Messrs. Boyd and White of the United States Secret Service remained with the prisoners while Chief Flynn and his other men remained outside, keeping an eye on the various roads leading in and out of the station, Chief Carpenter and Inspector McMahon of the Montreal force keeping them company.

At 8:30, the prisoners went to the train. First came Greene, accompanied by United States Detective White and Inspector McMahon, and next Gaynor, accompanied by United States Detective Boyd and Chief Carpenter. Around these two small groups, the other Secret Service men rallied until the train was reached. The prisoners went into the smoking compartment, with Chief Carpenter, Chief Flynn and Messrs. Boyd and White.

When asked if they had anything to say, Col. Gaynor replied that they were glad to go back at last and that they would have nothing but the kindest remembrances of their treatment in Canada.

Col. Gaynor's daughter-in-law was on board the train when the prisoners arrived and his son arrived at the station just before the train left.

On arriving at New York, the party will proceed straight to the Pensylvania Railroad station.

WOMAN AFTER WHALES.

Wife of Whaler's Captain Ships on a Two Year's Cruise and Will Navigate Vessel.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW BEDFORD (Mass.) Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Marian S. Smith, the plucky wife of Capt. Horace Smith, is the first woman skipper to sail on a whaling cruise and one of the few women in the world capable of navigating a ship in any waters of the world.

She has shipped as assistant navigator on the bark Josephine of which her husband is commander, on a two-years' cruise after sperm and right whales. She is on the regular crew list and draws a regular wage besides the "lay," or bonus, which is divided among the ship's company if the vessel is lucky in its catch.

On whalers no passengers are allowed, so in order to go to sea with her husband she studied navigation. She will do the actual navigation of the vessel and will figure out its daily position.

NOBLE BRITAIN OUT FOR BLOOD.

Earl of Kimberley Wants to Fight a Duel With Member of Norfolk County Council.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

LONDON, Oct. 7.—A sensational scene occurred at the meeting of the Norfolk County Council today. The Earl of Kimberley (son of the distinguished Liberal statesman of that name who held many Cabinet offices,) a member of the Council, accused a fellow member named Sapwell of underhand methods and challenged Sapwell to take a train for France where, he said, "we can fight it out under proper conditions."

The challenge was received with laughter and treated as a joke by other members of the council. After the meeting had closed the Earl renewed his challenge and Sapwell proposed to fight in a room of a nearby hotel. The Earl insisted that they must fight abroad, and said that if Sapwell refused he was a coward. At this point the other members of the council interfered and later the incident was declared closed.

LOSS TEN THOUSAND.

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 7.—The Woodbriuge Chemical Works were destroyed by fire here today. The principal business of the works was the manufacture of commercial fertilizer. The loss is practically $10,000.

FOREST FIRE BODES ILL.

Montecito and Summerland in Path of Fierce Wind-fanned Blaze.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SANTA BARBARA, Oct. 8. —2 a. m.—Fanned by a fierce gale, an immense forest fire threatens the fashionable suburb of Montecito and the town of Summerland, which contains hundreds of oil wells and tanks. Details at this time are lacking, but the heavens are bright with light and the flames can be seen high in the air. The beautiful estate of Dr. A. B. Thaw is threatened and in immediate danger of destruction.

MORE GRAFT ON KOREANS.

Ex-Minister Allen Said to Have Been "In."

Warship Scared Hermits Into Giving up Money.

President Roosevelt to Have Matter Looked Into.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

COLUMBUS (O.), Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Serious accusations implicating men high in political and financial circles have been made by Raymond E. L. Krum of this city, an expert engineer now in the employ of the Korean government, against Dr. H. N. Allen of Delaware, Ohio, former Minister to Korea. An investigation has been ordered, it is said, by direct order of President Roosevelt. Mr. Krum's charge in brief involves an alleged graft of $320,000 from the Korean government and is said to implicate ex-Minister Allen and the American contractors who built a street railroad in Seoul and a steam railroad running out of that city, under contract with the Korean government.

Upon Krum's recommendation the Korean government withheld $320,000, which was figured to be the difference between the contract price for a perfect road and the value of the road performed by the contractors.

Taking advantage of the internal unrest which prevailed in Korea in 1904, when Russia and Japan were in the midst of the quarrel which led to war threatening Korea's entity as a nation, it is charged by Krum that Allen made requisition upon the United States government for a warship to visit Seoul for the ostensible purpose of protecting American interests, but for the real object of intimidating the Korean government into payment of an alleged over-claim of the American contractors in whose enterprise he is said to have held an interest.

It is stated that the presence of an American warship so frightened the Korean authorities, already overwrought with fear from Russian and Japanese sources, that the claim was paid immediately. Thereupon, it is charged, the warship departed.

Mr. Krum filed his charges with the State Department, which were referred by Secretary Hay to Assistant Secretary Loomis for investigation, and the latter, it is charged, ignored them. Recently the matter was brought to the attention of the President and Secretary Root, and it is claimed to have resulted in the removal of Minister Allen by the "resignation" route.

GOLD GONE TO EGYPT.

London Bankers Incline to This View to Account for Shipment from France.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PARIS, Oct. 7.—Leading American shippers of French gold say they have not made any shipments to the United States out of the $5,000,000 recently withdrawn from the Bank of France. The report of the shipment to America grew out of Thursday's statement of the Bank of France, showing that the gold balance had fallen during the week from $592,414,434 to $587,981,323.

This unusual fall, $4,433,111, attracted the attention of the Bourse, where it was attributed to the needs of the monetary situation in London.

When the London bankers said they had not received any French gold the reduction was attributed to shipments to the United States. However, Lazard Freres, who are the chief shippers have not shipped the amount referred to and are not aware of any other shipments to New York. They incline to the view that the amount has gone to Egypt and other points outside the main markets, London and New York. The managers of the Bank of France say they are not aware of the destination of the shipments.

The European Economist calls attention to the movement of precious metals to the United States and gives a table showing that the French export of gold to New York since January 1 totals $5,070,513.

THE UNEXPECTED DEVELOPS.

Famous Portland Mining Suit Takes Startling Turn During Trial at Council Bluffs.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

COUNCIL BLUFFS (Iowa) Oct. 8.—An unexpected development has occurred in the famous Portland mining suit for the recovery of a million dollars, now pending on a motion for a new trial, through the surrender of a certificate for 2000 shares of stock and payment of $3300 dividends and interest by James F. Burns, defendant, to James Doyle, plaintiff.

It is claimed Burns has been holding this stock back for ten years, voting it as his own in meetings of the company and drawing dividends upon it. Doyle alleges that Burns has 238,000 shares belonging to the former, while Burns has heretofore denied that he had any of Doyle's stock in his possession. The verdict was in Burns's favor at the trial of the case last April.

Doyle secured information regarding the certificate for 2000 shares from J. R. Bishoff, former book-keeper of the Portland Mining Company and private secretary to Burns. Bischoff testified for Burns in the different trials of the case, but has now made a sensational affidavit charging that not only Burns, but his attorneys, knew about this stock.

SAILORS ALSO LAND GRAFTERS.

PORTLAND (Or.) Oct. 7.—Evidence was adduced during the trial of the Jones-Potter-Wade trial today that old sailors, as well as soldiers, were induced to make fraudulent entry on public lands for the benefit of the defendants. Other than this the prosecution confined itself to introducing evidence connecting Wade with the case. United States Senator C. W. Fulton of Oregon is expected to arrive in Portland Monday. The case is expected to last for another week at least.

PITH OF NEWS FROM THE MIDDLE WEST.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "It is Chicago fire weather." With this remark Chief Campion opened his desk at fire headquarters today, recalling a certain Saturday morning thirty-four years ago when the same dry tang in the air preceded the great conflagration of Oct. 9, 1871. Throughout the department the veterans are telling "the boys" that never has the city experienced a "dry spell" so like that which ushered in the big fire. And Chief Campion says they are right. The wind blew from the south today, with a consequent rise of the mercury. The temperature range was from 54 to 77 degs. Middle West temperatures:

DOCTOR GOES WRONG.

Infatuation with the teachings of Ottoman Zar Adusht Hanish were given as the cause of the desertion of Mrs. Minnie Dowd by her husband, Dr. Frank Dowd, in Judge Thompson's court today. Mrs. Dowd said she was unable to reconcile herself to the principles, "Subduing of personality and self," which her husband advocated after having joined the followers of Hanish.

Dowd, the wife testified, after nearly six years of happy married life, left her to go to California to promote the interests of the Sun worship cult. In one of his letters Dr. Dowd declared that he had reached such a high plane that he was "no longer a person." A decree was granted.

SANTA FE'S NEW OFFICER.

In selecting George T. Nicholson for the third vice-president of the system to succeed Paul Morton, the Santa Fé directors are preparing for a new campaign in favor of the settlement of the Southwest by the Middle West and eastern farmers. In the days when Mr. Morton controlled the freight traffic affairs of the system, Mr. Nicholson demonstrated his ability to care for passengers and he is now to show his capacity for the work of exploiting the industrial and agricultural values of Oklahoma, Kansas, New Mexico, Arizona and Southern California.

DOWIE IN TROUBLE.

The long expected trouble between John Alexander Dowie and the farmers from whom he bought 6500 acres of land now in the Zion City site, is coming to a head, due to Dowie's alleged failure to pay his debts.

The first man to take his farm back on an alleged violation of the purchasing contract by Dowie, is John P. Baker. After paying $9000 Dowie became lax and Baker has taken possession, also holding the money paid.

DUBUQUE (Iowa) Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Waving a red flag during a thunderstorm, Mrs. Peter Koenig saved a train from toppling through a burning trestle, and the officers of the Great Western road will give her a substantial reward.

The train was approaching at the rate of forty miles an hour and stopped about 200 feet from the point where Mrs. Koenig gave the signal.

EMMONS'S WIFE IN TEARS IN COURT.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 7.—The first step toward the final submission of the case of Former Senator E. J. Emmons, charged with bribery in connection with the investigation of building and loan associations, was taken this morning, when Charles T. Jones, associate counsel for the prosecution, opened his argument against the accused man, Jones did not finish his argument to the jury, but will take up his discourse next Monday morning when court reconvenes.

A rather dramatic incident was developed by Jones in the earlier stages of his argument, in which he broke the spirit of the wife of the accused former Senator from Kern, and made her, for the first time since the legislative scandal, shed tears in public.

Jones had been reviewing the weight of the testimony against the accused man, as the prosecution viewed it, and in the course of an impassioned address to the jury he declared that the wife of a man in the defendant's position, charged with such an offense as Emmons, should divorce him, to the end that "no progeny should spring up from his loins, to be marked as the offspring of a man who seriously offended."

Jones was in thunderous voice, and he hurled his broadside with all the vigor at his command. Mrs. Emmons was sitting in the seat she has occupied throughout the trial, at the back of her husband, and when Jones made his declaration, she burst into tears and it was several minutes before she could recover her composure and resume the attitude she has maintained from the very day her husband was first accused.

Jones opened his argument with the statement that he wanted to thank the opposing counsel, headed by Grove L. Johnson, for the fairness with which the trial had been carried on by the opposing side.

He took occasion to deny some rumors, which, he said, had been circulated to the effect that he was employed in the prosecution by the Continental Building and Loan Association, declaring that he had been engaged by District Attorney A. M. Seymour to act for the people.

Jones extolled Seymour for the action the latter took before the Senate investigating committee in refusing to permit any of the accused Senators to give testimony under oath, as to have done so would have been to relieve them of prosecution for the offense with which they were charged.

Jones then went into an analysis of the testimony adduced and at every point branded the defendant guilty, as charged in the indictment by the grand jury.

When the noon recess was reached, Jones had not finished, and an adjournment was taken until next Monday morning.

BANKER STILL MISSING.

Despite Reports to Contrary, Abraham Schiffer, Colorado Financier, is Not in New York.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—No information has been received in this city of the whereabouts of Abraham Schiffer, a missing banker of Alamosa, Colo., who was erroneously reported yesterday morning to be a member of the silk manufacturing firm of Pelgram & Meyer. He is not, and never was, in any way connected with the firm, whose sole members are Alfred and Herman Schiffer. Neither the silk firm nor any of its members has any interest in the Western Bank, which closed its doors last Monday.

Counsel for the firm of Pelgram & Meyer said yesterday that Abraham Schiffer came East for the purpose of obtaining funds with which to maintain the bank. "Whenever the members of the firm applied for asistance," he said, "Alfred and Herman did assist in financial aid. They had assisted the bank before, and Abraham came to New York for the purpose of procuring additional assistance which Herman and Alfred were ready to provide. They made arrangements accordingly, and Abraham left on Thursday to perfect these arrangements at Alamosa, but never reached there."

Romaine d'Aurignac to Make Second Attempt to Enter United States. Lawyers Busy on Case.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—Romaine d'Aurignac, brother of Therese Humbert, who was deported by the immigration authorities a few weeks ago, will probably make another attempt to land on American soil. He claims that the offense for which he was convicted and sent to prison in France is not an offense under laws governing corporations in this country, and that, therefore, his deportation was illegal. D'Aurignac's New York lawyers have notified him of the results of their investigation, and as soon as the letter reaches him it is believed he will sail.

Asked what d'Aurignac would do in this country, one of his lawyers said, yesterday: "He is uncomfortable in Paris or France. He was shut up in prison for two years over three. If he comes here again I think the Ellis Island authorities will be mighty careful how they act."

GASSAWAY DAVIS KIDNAPED?

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—The police of Munhall are of the opinion that Gassaway Davis, the young man who worked under the name of Oliver Hall as a fireman in the Homestead Steel Works' transportation department, has met with foul play, according to a dispatch to the Herald from Pittsburgh, Pa. Although his parents, who live at Davis, West Virginia, have not received any word which would lead them to think that he is being held for ransom, the detectives who have been looking over the ground in Homestead favor this idea. A large number of private detectives, employed by the young man's uncle, Henry Gassaway Davis, are working every possible clew.

GREAT FIRE IN NEVADA

Blaze Supposed to be Due to Incendiaries.

Entire Town of Purdy Goes Up in Smoke.

Citizens of San Francisco Want High License.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

RENO (Nev.) Oct. 7.—For three days past a fire supposed to be of incendiary origin has been raging at Purdy, a town on the Nevada, California and Oregon Railroad, north of Reno.

Five thousand cords of wood, six new box cars and every building in the town have been destroyed, while the fire is still burning in the immense piles of wood stacked up around the town. The people have no way of fighting the flames.

The heaviest losers are the Nevada, California and Oregon Company and Felix Vegliotti of this city. Their losses will probably amount to $50,000, while the loss on other property owners will amount to several thousand dollars more.

ST. PAUL WILL BE TOTAL LOSS.

Heavy Seas are Breaking Over the Boat—Lighthouse Tender Sinks in Columbia River—Steamer Alameda Goes on the Dock for Repairs and Will Resume Service.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

EUREKA, Oct. 7.—There is little doubt in the minds of sea-faring men who have viewed the wreck of the St. Paul that the steamer will be a total loss before a fortnight has passed. Heavy seas are now washing over the ship. No one has visited the vessel since it was deserted on Thursday night and the exact damage to the present time cannot be estimated. The steamer is still in an upright position and apparently has not listed.

The cargo and baggage have been damaged to such an extent that all hope of saving them has practically been abandoned. The cross arms and [illegible] on the masts have been washed away and the three life boats on the port side that were not pressed into service have been wrenched loose from the davits. Bits of railing, spars and tackle have been gathered along the shore and have even drifted far out in the ocean so as to be seen by passing steamers on their way up and down the coast.

[illegible] Aken, who accompanied Capt. Randall to within a mile of the wreck, says that the vessel is rapidly breaking up. Her cabin seems to be [illegible] and it is not believed that [illegible] can be saved.

Capt. Randall and representatives of the underwriters have started overland to the scene of the wreck. The crew will be taken to San Francisco tomorrow at the expense of the owners of the lost vessel. The steamer Alliance will sail for the North tomorrow for passengers who preferred to continue their trip rather than return to San Francisco on the Ramona.

LIGHTHOUSE TENDER SINKS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Oct. 7.—A special dispatch to the Evening Telegram from [illegible] gives particulars of the sinking of the lighthouse tender Manzanita in the Columbia River last night at the lower end of Puget Sound. The tender was proceeding down the river to the assistance of Lightship No. 50, which went ashore yesterday when the Port. Towboat John McCracken, towing the dredger Columbia was encountered. The Manzanita signalled that she would pass on the starboard side, but the dredge could not be moved fast enough and the Manzanita struck the projecting suction pipe of the dredge, which opened a hole in the tender's side, causing her to sink almost immediately. The crew of the tender escaped but lost their personal effects.

GREAT FIRE IN NEVADA.

Blaze Supposed to be Due to Incendiaries.

Entire Town of Purdy Goes Up in Smoke.

Citizens of San Francisco Want High License.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

RENO (Nev.) Oct. 7.—For three days past a fire supposed to be of incendiary origin has been raging at Purdy, a town on the Nevada, California and Oregon Railroad, north of Reno.

Five thousand cords of wood, six new box cars and every building in the town have been destroyed, while the fire is still burning in the immense piles of wood stacked up around the town. The people have no way of fighting the flames.

The heaviest losers are the Nevada, California and Oregon Company and Felix Vegliotti of this city. Their losses will probably amount to $50,000, while the loss on other property owners will amount to several thousand dollars more.

Because of lack of hydrants near the property the fire department could do nothing. The fire started in the steam beer department and gained considerable headway before it was noticed. It quickly spread to the mill house, stock house and packing room and reached the tower. Then the whole building was ablaze. The loss is fully $150,000.

President P. Max Kuenrich of the Los Angeles Brewing Company, who is also president and treasurer of the Humboldt Brewing Company, last night gave out the following correction of the foregoing dispatch:

"Only one building of the plant was destroyed. The total loss does not exceed $70,000. Insurance brings the net loss down to about $15,000. I shall leave for Eureka Sunday night, to direct the rebuilding of the burned structure at once."

WANT HIGH LICENSE.

SAN FRANCISCO SENTIMENT.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—The new high liquor license petition has been filed with the Election Commission. It is signed by 13,480 persons, which is nearly 3600 names in excess of the legal requirements. If the commission finds that the petition is in order then the voters at the coming election will have a chance to decide whether they want to have the retail liquor license increased to $500 per annum or remain as it is now at $84.

Today the examination of the names upon the petition will begin.

A big force will be put to work to see if the required number of names are on the Great Register. If the required number are there, then the petition will go on the ballot.

DAWSON WAS EGGLESS.

CONSTERNATION RESULTED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TACOMA, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] For the first time in years Dawson was eggless three weeks ago, when passengers now arriving, left Klondike. This peculiar circumstance resulted from the fact that it was just between the egg seasons. The summer supply of eggs was exhausted prior to the arrival of the winter supply, which the last steamers down river from White Horse were carrying. Dawson traders take care to send in their winter egg supply just as late as possible, thereby insuring freshness. Late comers say a wail of consternation went up in restaurants and hotels when orders for ham and eggs met with a response that only ham could be served. Last steamers down the river carried several thousand cases of eggs.

SLOPE BRIEFS.

License New Pasadena Bank.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—The Bank Commissioners have issued a license for the establishment of the American Bank and Trust Company at Pasadena, capitalized at $25,000.

Are Restored to Citizenship.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—Captain Zeader of the steamship Korea and Chief Mate Inayleg of the city of Sydney, whose naturalization papers recently were declared irregular, have been restored to citizenship, as their records had been clouded only by the accidental delay of a vessel.

Unger Jury Again Disagrees.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—In the United States District Court today the jury in the case of Cress Unger, former customs house seizure clerk, who was indicted on numerous charges of larceny and embezzlement, reported a failure to agree and was discharged by Judge DeHaven. On a former trial, the jury also disagreed.

McDermont Will Not Genuine.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—The Bridget McDermont will contest has been decided by the Supreme Court. It is held that the will presented for probate was not genuine, and the estate will be distributed according to the statutes governing the disposition of property left by intestate persons.

Injunction on Banks Dissolved.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Oct. 7.—The jury at Hawthorne, in the Mims-Sutro-Lang-Bleakmore case, returned a verdict of not guilty on the first ballot, after having been out three minutes. This frees Lang and Bleakmore and dissolves the injunction on all banks holding their money. The case attracted much attention and was the cause of several personal encounters.

BOY HUSBAND MUST BE GOOD.

If Willie Stays Out Late, He Will be Sent to Reformatory, Decides Chicago Case.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—There is one husband in Chicago for whom the iron gates of a reformatory will swing open if he stays out late at night or once departs from the straight and narrow path. This husband was paroled on probation yesterday by Judge Mack of the Juvenile Court. His name is William Costello. He is 16 years old and was married September 29 to Sadie Matthews, 19 years old, against the wishes of his mother, Elizabeth Costello. Mrs. Costello caused the boy's arrest and he was held to the Juvenile Court by Justice Hurley.

When the young husband appeared in court yesterday he faced his mother, who asked Judge Mack to send her son to the Juvenile Home for Boys, at St. Charles. Mrs. Sadie Costello pleaded with the judge to release her husband, declaring that she and William were happy together, and that he was able to support her.

"Your son is legally married, madam," said Judge Mack to Mrs. Costello, after examining the marriage license. "I don't see how I can send him to St. Charles. I am going to appoint a probation officer over this boy, however, even though he is a married man," the court added. "In the future, William shall report to Cornelius O'Meara once a week and it will be his duty to see that he behaves as a husband should.

"PAPER TRUST" JOLTED.

United States Judge Decides That Case of Government Against It Is Not Appealable.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. PAUL, Oct. 7.—Judge Vandeventer, in the United States Court, late this afternoon, decided that the case of the United States vs. the General Paper Company is not appealable. This decision relates to a motion for a stay of a previous order of the court, pending an appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

The court today ordered that the officers of the Hennepin Paper Company, the Itaska Paper Company and the Northwestern Paper Company must answer the questions asked before Special Examiner Taylor and that they must produce the books of the company.

O. P. Templeton, a powderman employed at San Rafael, was instantly killed there yesterday by a premature explosion.

SPECTACLE WILL CALM JAPANESE.

GRAND REVIEW OF FLEETS OF ENGLAND AND NIPPON.

With Togo's Triumphant Entry Into Tokio, Occasion Will be Offered to Divert Attention from the Treaty, Which is Considered in Many Quarters Unsatisfactory.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

TOKIO, Oct. 7.—The coming visit to Japanese waters of the British squadron commanded by Vice Admiral Sir Gerald Noel, commander-in-chief of the China station, will, it is expected, be made the occasion, soon after the ratification of peace, of a grand naval review which, with Admiral Togo's triumphant entry into the city, will offer a splendid occasion for diverting the people's attention from the apparently unsatisfactory terms of the treaty. It is believed that the authorities will do everything possible to utilize these events to demonstrate the fact that the peace of Asia is guarded by the two powerful allies. American warships are expected to be present at the naval review.

Many of those who allowed themselves to be carried away by the tide of dissatisfaction which set in when the peace terms became known here are gradually becoming reconciled to the situation.

TO COLONIZE FAR EAST.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 7.—Realizing the advantage of retaining in the Far East a stock of sturdy and energetic colonists, and at the same time desiring to reward veterans of the war, the ministries of the Interior and Agriculture have worked out a draft of a homesteading glow under which officers and soldiers are entitled to preëmpt free within two years farms ranging from 135 acres with a bonus of $50 for enlisted men to 14,000 acres for the higher officers and a loan of from $250 to $2500 and exemption from taxes for five years. The law will affect all the unoccupied lands in Siberia, a large amount of which is now valueless on account of the lack of communication, but which will be opened to settlement if the railroads connecting the Trans-Caspian and Trans-Siberian systems for which private companies are now seeking concessions, are built.

EXAMINE SITE FOR LOCKS.

COLON, Oct. 7.—The members of the Board of Constructing Engineers of the Panama Canal and the American officials who accompanied them, on arriving at Bas Obispo, yesterday afternoon, closely examined the site selected by the French engineers as suitable for locks. They afterward crossed Chagres River and proceeded to study the suitability of the Mamboa district for a dam. The party returned to Colon yesterday afternoon and later boarded a tug at Christobal and went up the canal as far as Mindi.

FARLEY MAY GO TO CUBA.

ROME, Oct. 7.—The Vatican has been urged to appoint an apostolic delegate to Cuba and Porto Rico to succeed the late Archbishop Chappelle of New Orleans. Pressure has been brought to bear to have Archbishop Farley of New York chosen apostolic delegate to Cuba and Porto Rico, pointing out that the Archdiocese of New York disposes of funds sufficient for the position and because steamers for Cuba start from New York. For similar considerations, the Bahama Islands belong to the Archdiocese of New York. The appointment is considered a most important one, being, it is believed, a step toward the delegate's nomination as a Cardinal.

TO LOOK AFTER BABES OF POOR.

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—Several philanthropic women are organizing a society to be known as the Infants League of New York, and controlled entirely by women. The object of the league will be to look after the welfare and comfort of the thousands of helpless infants born yearly in this city whose mothers are too poor to do so themselves. Women leaving the Maternity and other hospitals will be furnished free with a sanitary crib, linens, bedclothing, nursing bottles, and a supply of milk for their infants' use. Sanitary outfits will also be sent to private houses on application of the attending physician.

WILL BE ETERNALLY "DRY."

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Louisville, Ky., says: "A new town has been laid out in Southern Indiana, in Dubois county and it bids fair to occupy a unique position, as one of the conditions to property ownership is that no fermented liquors or intoxicants shall ever be sold within its confines. This means an eternally 'dry' community. The place is called Cuzco and is fifteen miles from French Lick Springs. Every deed issued contains a clause that if whisky is sold there directly or indirectly on the premises the lands shall revert to the original ownership, W. H. Nicholson, or his heirs."

Joseph Crutchfield, a colored veteran of the Civil War, 65 years old, committed suicide Friday night in San Francisco by shooting himself through the head. His body was found yesterday morning.

An Attractive Cafe.

Located at 532 Broadway within easy distance of the rooming-house district and convenient to most of the big European plan hotels of South Broadway, is the original Delaware Restaurant, now entirely remodeled and recognizable only by its name and location. Since the middle of August, at which time the new appointments were completed, it has been conducted under new management. Meals are now served, as at any first-class café, a la carte and, judging from the increased patronage the change has met the approval of the public.

While the interior of the café was made most attractive, an equally important change was made in the kitchens, where now, none but white cooks and assistants are employed. The food is well prepared and attractively served, the prices are reasonable and the success of the old Delaware bids fair to be rivaled by the present management. Adv.

Help for Mothers.

Mrs. G. Wolfe of No. 77 W. 93d street, New York, has made a discovery of infinite value to mothers. No nervous, exhausted woman can hope to bear and raise a sound, healthy child. Mrs. Wolfe has, in personal experience, learned how to nurse and raise remarkably healthy, robust children, and still keep her own health, strength and good looks without using any "tonics," drugs or stimulants. To all nervous, worn, exhausted women who send her a self-addressed stamped envelope, she mails free full particulars.

WILL FAIL OF RATIFICATION.

Anglo-Cuban Trade Treaty in Need of Change.

Is Not in Harmony With Interests of America.

Manila to be Made Second Hongkong Very Soon.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It is expected here that the Anglo-Cuban trade treaty will fail of ratification in its present form. Mr. Squires, the American Minister at Havana, pointed out to the Cuban government many weeks ago that it was not in harmony with the interests of the United States in the island. As already has been proposed, he lodged a protest against its ratification. The Cuban government takes the position that there is nothing in the treaty prejudicial to the interests of the United States. It is now being considered by a sub-committee of the Cuban Senate.

The United States is now anxious to conclude with Cuba an agreement whereby American steamship lines between the United States and Cuba will have special privileges in Cuban ports. Objection is therefore entertained toward any treaty between Cuba and Great Britain which gives Great Britain the position of the most favored nation, which would entitle her to privileges equal to those accorded to the United States.

LIEUTENANT REBUKED.

CALLED CAPTAIN A CUR.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—The papers in the case of Second Lieutenant Clarence B. Ross, Artillery Corps, who was recently tried by courtmartial at Fort Rodman, Mass., have been received at the War Department. Lieut. Ross was found guilty of disrespect toward his commanding officer and conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, and was sentenced to be reprimanded by the reviewing authority and to be reduced ten files on the lineal list of second lieutenants of artillery. One of the specifications in this case was that Lieut. Ross referred to Capt. Willoughby Walke, commanding the post of Fort Rodman, in the hearing of an enlisted man in a contemptuous manner as being "like a baby with a new doll," with intent to cast ridicule upon his superior officer, and on another occasion referred to him as "that cur."

General Grant, commanding the Department of the East, approved the sentence and administered the reprimand called for by it.

MANILA SECOND HONGKONG.

PHILIPPINE COMMISSION'S PLAN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Philippine Commission is soon to pass an act abolishing the tonnage and port duties now levied on all merchandise in the effort to make Manila a center of Oriental commerce as great as Hongkong. The commission has authority to permit the erection of bonded warehouses and it is probable that this will be done by the civil government.

With the port duties abolished and Manila a free port, it is hoped that American and other merchants will store their goods at Manila instead of Hongkong. At present cotton, flour and general merchandise exporters carry large amount of stock in warehouses at Hongkong. The water front of Manila is magnificently adapted for such a system of warehouses and the geographical location is admirable.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS.

New Forest Reserve in Arizona.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—The President has established a new forest reserve in Arizona, which is to be called the Tonto reserve and is intended to protect the water shed of Tonto Creek, an important feeder of the great irrigation reservoir to be created near Phoenix. The reserve will contain 1,120,000 acres and will extend north and south, from the Mangellan plateau to Salt River and east and west from the Verde Valley to the White Mountain Indian reservation.

AFTER TOM LAWSON.

Supposed Friends of the System are Trying to Get the Scalp of the Writing Broker.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON (Mass.), Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Clarence W. Barron, the noted financial writer, one of the greatest financial authorities in America, has applied, through his attorney, Sherman L. Whipple, for a warrant for the arrest of Thomas W. Lawson, the copper stock raider and author of Frenzied Finance. Though details are withheld by the court, pending a decision on the application next Tuesday by Judge Wentworth, it is believed that the action is based upon Lawson's latest published attack upon Barron, in the last issue of Everybody's Magazine. A libel suit will probably follow.

It is an interesting coincidence that Horace J. Stevens, the leading copper authority and statistician, who is here from his home in Houghton, Mich., advocates in an interview that Lawson's Trinity copper stock be thrown out of the Boston Stock Exchange securities. Mr. Stevens, who in his Copper Handbook, severely arraigns the property, declares that Lawson is only mining in State street and not at his California property.

GOULD HOLDS RAMSEY SAFE.

OUSTED WABASH OFFICER CAN DO LITTLE HARM.

Young Wall Street Financier Has a Sufficient Number of Good Proxies to Control the Road—Charges of Fraud are Made as to How Voting Will be Done.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It is announced on official authority that George J. Gould already has secured a large majority of the Wabash stocks and bonds for use in the annual meeting in Toledo next Tuesday. His majority, in fact, is so large that should the St. Louis court enjoin the voting of the stock involved in the injunction proceedings, Mr. Gould still would be in position to elect his own directory by a comfortable margin. Accordingly, unless there is a change in the plan, the annual meeting will be held as advertised, and the Wabash property will remain in the Gould column.

This, however, will not prevent Joseph Ramsey, Jr., from making things lively in the Toledo gathering, which promises to be warm from start to finish. It can be stated also, with almost equal certainty, that unless A. C. Bird recovers his health sufficiently to return to his post, the position of the vice-president of the Wabash road in charge of the traffic, will be abolished.

CASE IN COURT.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TOLEDO (O.) Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Ramsey-Gould-Wabash controversy found its way into the Lucas county Court of Common Pleas today, when Joseph Ramsey, by his attorneys, made application for the appointment of three disinterested inspectors to determine the legality of the votes cast in an election of directors of the Wabash Railroad in this city next Tuesday, when there will be a contest. If, on Monday morning, Mr. Ramsey can prove he represents 10 per cent. of the stockholders, his request will be honored.

Mr. Ramsey's petition and affidavit are somewhat sensational. They intimate that illegal attempts to cast votes will be made and that fraudulent proxies will be offered; that questions will arise as to the eligibility of men to be voted for as directors and that the laws of Ohio as to corporate elections will be misconstrued and that people not entitled to vote will do so. The case was continued until Monday morning.

EXPRESS TRAIN STRIKES MOBE.

MIDDLETOWN (Ct.) Oct. 7.—A touring car in which were the owner, Walter G. Cowles of Hartford, and members of his family, was struck and wrecked by the Fitchburg express from New York over the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad at Taylor's Crossing in the vilage of Cobalt, tonight. Mr. Cowles's son, aged five, was so terribly injured that he died on a train while being brought here with his parents. Mr. Cowles and his chauffeur, Arthur Franz, were only slightly injured. Mrs. Cowles and Mrs. L. A. Keady, also of Hartford, were caught in the body of the car and badly injured, the latter probably fatally. Both have been taken to the Middlesex Hospital.

BEHRING EXPLAINS CONSUMPTION CURE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PARIS, Oct. 7.—At the closing of the international tuberculosis congress today Prof. Von Behring made a statement relative to his new curative principle for tuberculosis. It was decided to hold the next congress at Washington in 1908. The professor said: "In the course of the last two years, I recognized for a certainty the existence of a curative principle completely different from the anti-toxine principle. This new curative principle plays an initial role in the operation of the immunity derived from my bovo-vaccine, which has proved effective against animal tuberculosis during the past four years. This curative principle reposes upon the impregnation of the living cells of the organism with a substance originating from the tuberculose virus, which substance I designate 'T C.'"

Prof. Berhring then gave a lengthy, technical description of how "T C" was introduced into the cellular organism and said that already given showed marked results in the treatment of animals. He expressed the confident belief that his researches would permit similar curative results in humans.

Whatever may be the practical value of Dr. Behring's new treatment of tuberculosis, the Matin's announcement of his discovery has created a sensation both in scientific circles and with the general public. Dr. Behring complains that the Matin has not correctly interpreted his declarations. "The exact facts are," he says, "that I have been studying for a long time a new method of treating tuberculosis and think I have broken fresh ground. There are certain animals which contract this malady with great facility and have hitherto proved refractory to all attempts at vaccination.

"I have finally succeeded in rendering them immune, as regards the baccilius, and probably can even cure them when the disease is fully developed in them.

"The experiments on mankind have not yet been made, but there is ground for hope in this respect, the path I am following being totally different from those explored up to the present."

The American delegates were interested listeners to the statement. Later they were asked whether the present style of medical science held out the hope of a permanent cure of tuberculosis. Dr. Lawrence Flick of Philadelphia, said:

"The present state of medical science holds out a good prospect of a permanent cure for tuberculosis where the disease is taken in its early stages. This, however, is not through a specific remedy, but by proper alienation and open air life with exercise duly restricted. If the present knowledge concerning the means of preventing the tuberculosis was generally applied it is safe to say that tuberculosis would be stamped out of civilized countries within a few years."

The American delegates say the meeting of the congress in 1908 in Washington will be a notable gathering and probably will give an opportunity for definite determination of the question of curative specifics. It is the intention to organize for the delegates, excursions and visits to the hospitals throughout the leading cities of the United States.

The members of the congress dined with President Loubet at the Elyêe Palace tonight. President Loubet, in proposing the health of the congress of the states represented, said he hoped that the congress to be held in the United States in 1908 would add a fresh contribution to the civilizing and humanitarian work in which it was engaged, and that the satisfaction would be afforded of seeing the seed the congress has sown ripen.

A Record of Three Summers.

The following figures show the relative amount of advertising and circulation of THE LOS ANGELES TIMES for June, July, August and September during the past three years—a record of three summers:

Total volume of advertising printed in THE TIMES during summer months since June, 1903.

Month	Year 1903	Year 1904	Year 1905
June	2673 columns	2788 columns	3614 columns
July	2558 columns	2930 columns	3783 columns
August	2725 columns	2776 columns	3462 columns
September	2767 columns	2904 columns	3698 columns

Daily average circulation of The Times for each of the summer months since June, 1903.

Month	Year 1903	Year 1904	Year 1905
June	35,271 copies	35,833 copies	41,365 copies
July	35,212 copies	56,867 copies	42,243 copies
August	37,202 copies	37,713 copies	42,776 copies
September	37,064 copies	37,423 copies	43,470 copies

No other newspaper in the United States has printed so large a volume of advertising as the Los Angeles Times during the last four summer months named.

No other Pacific Coast newspaper has shown so great a bonafide increase in both advertising and circulation as The Times during the period covered by this statement.

GIVE BACK COIN IS MISSOURI'S ORDER.

State Superintendent of Insurance of "Show-me" State Threatens to Revoke License of New York Life. Lawson's Scheme.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

JEFFERSON CITY (Mo.) Oct. 7.—State Superintendent of Insurance Vandiver today sent a communication to President John A. McCall of the New York Life Insurance Company demanding that the $148,702.50 campaign fund contribution be replaced in the treasury of the company under penalty of revocation of the company's license to transact business in Missouri for failure to comply with the demand. In the communication Superintendent Vandiver also informs President McCall that the Missouri department of insurance will insist on a new president, vice-president and Financial Committee for the New York Life Insurance Company just as soon as the directors can possibly effect the reorganization. The letter in full follows:

"To. J. A. McCall, president of the New York Life Insurance Company: The recent startling disclosures in regard to the management of the funds of the New York Life Insurance Company, and particularly the testimony of yourself and other officers of the company, given before the investigating committee of the New York Legislature, makes it my duty as superintendent of insurance for the State of Missouri to communicate to your company the views and requirements of this State to the end that the policy holders in this State may not be defrauded of any portion of the dividends or surplus earnings that are justly due them on the premiums they have paid.

"The public has been very properly taught by yourself and other officials of great insurance companies that the funds of a mutual company constitute a fiduciary trust, held and administered for the sole use of those named as beneficiaries, many of whom are, or will be widows and orphans, and many thousands of people have taken insurance in your company because of this very fact, and the assurance that every dollar of assets belongs to the policy holders. That any portion of the policy holders' premiums, or profits on premiums could be diverted to political purposes or other uses not contemplated when the premiums were paid in, and not consistent with the avowed purpose of a life-insurance organization, must be considered by all right-thinking people as a gross violation of a sacred trust, if not embezzlement as defined by the statutes.

"This department holds, therefore, that all moneys taken by your order from the treasury of the New York Life Insurance Company and donated to any political campagn committee or to any legislative agent or lobbyist for aiding or defeating legislation, whether audited or unaudited on the books of the company, were taken without warrent of law or morals and without proper appreciation of your responsibilities as trustee of the funds committed to your keeping. And therefore, this department must insist that all funds so used by you or by your order, especially the sum of $148,702.50 which amount you confessed to having contributed out of the funds of the company to the Republican campaign committees for the years 1896, 1900 and 1904 must be replaced in the treasury of said New York Life Insurance Company within the next thirty days.

"Notice is hereby served upon the New York Life Insurance Company through its president that unless this requirement is met or assurance is given that it will be met without unnecessary delay, I, as superintendent of insurance for the State of Missouri, will proceed under the provisions of section 8022, statutes of Missouri, to cancel or revoke the license of the company to do business in this State.

"There are many other transactions disclosed by the investigation now in progress, particularly the payments of large sums of money to one Judge Hamilton without any accounting or auditing on the books of the company, and the occupancy of costly real estate of the company by members of your family at a rental so low as to be practically a gift of the property; and also the protection of a subsidiary company from the loss of many thousands of dollars by the use of policy holders' money, as well as the immense and disproportionate expense of the company in its mad rush for new business, all of which indicate the greatest impropriety and recklessness in management and may call for further investigation and official action. But from the facts already disclosed it is evident that the interests of the policy holders of the New York Life Insurance Company, as well as the public generally demand a change in the management of the company. This department will, therefore, insist that a new president and vice-president and finance committee be put in charge of the affairs of the company as soon as its board of directors may be able to affect the change.

"Very respectfully,
"W. D. VANDIVER."

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL

Few People Know How Useful It Is In Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the ocmplexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

I have been treated by Dr. Schiffman for years. I have tried all his different methods, and can say unhesitatingly no dentist or physician has ever operated with such success or skill. In extracting my teeth he did it without any pain to me. It is a great pleasure to me to recommend him and his method of treatment. MILO M. POTTER.

Ten years ago a reputable dentist of Virginia told me that a certain molar tooth could not be satisfactorily saved, and that it would probably not be of service for one year. It has not only served me for ten years, as Dr. Schiffman saved and crowned it, and comparatively speaking, without pain. I sing his praise.

LOFTY SITE FOR LIBRARY.

Eminence at Top of Angels' Flight Suggested.

Commanding Position for a Noble Building.

Idea for Public Library Only, Not City Hall.

Citizens have suggested the eminence at the top of Angels' Flight at Third and Olive streets as a site for a Public Library building. It is suggested that the city might condemn the street and the four corners, and thus secure a lot about 300 feet by 160 feet, ample in size for a classic building of noble proportions. The street is not used for traffic to a great extent, and it is urged by the proponents of the idea that an arrangement might be made in the design of the building and grounds which would be perfectly satisfactory to users of the street. An elevator might be built at the side of the Third-street tunnel, without interfering with the tunnel, as an approach to the building from the lower level. Those making this suggestion point out that a library on this commanding spot would be as picturesque as a castle on the Rhine and the talk of the country. Thus far the idea has not taken the form of a proposition; it is merely a suggestion put forward for discussion by the people. It seems to be worthy of the serious consideration of the City Council and the public.

The paragraph on the editorial page of this issue (written early last evening under a misapprehension) in reference to this suggestion, erroneously makes it apply to a site for a city hall, instead of a public library building. The proponents of the suggestion do not have a city hall in mind, but a public library building only. The free site offered on [illegible] Main street is still the only practical proposition for a municipal building.

VESUVIUS'S CRATER IS ACTIVE.

NAPLES, Oct. 7.—The northwest crater of Vesuvius is active. A great quantity of lava is flowing down the side of the mountain, and columns of smoke are seen ascending to an immense height, scattering red-hot ashes over the district in the vicinity. The stream of lava is assuming alarming proportions, and the eruption is accompanied by loud detonations, which shake the houses in surrounding villages. It is believed the eruption has some physical connection with the earthquakes which are now going on in Southern Italy, although their force is diminished.

UTAH PIONEERS TO SEE LOS ANGELES.

Men Who Blazed Western Trails Sixty Years Ago are to Come to Southern California as the Guests of Senator W. A. Clark.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SALT LAKE, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] On Monday evening twenty-six pioneer pathfinders—men who blazed a trail and built a road between Salt Lake and Los Angeles in the "forties" and in the early "fifties," will leave the capital of Utah for the Angel City. They are to be the guests of Senator W. A. Clark, though he is now in Europe. This time their mode of travel will differ very materially from that of more than half a century ago. Then, the trip was made by pack mule and wagon, now it is to be in Pullman palace cars which will run, singularly enough, over almost the exact course that their weary feet then trod. When Senator Clark promised the people of Utah he would build a road between this city and Los Angeles, he met some of these veterans and assured them when it was finished he expected them to make the trip over the new line out of complimnt to him, to see the transformation that civilization had wrought in the interim. At that time it was supposed that not more than a dozen such men were now living. But it transpired that there are two or three times that number. Not all, however, are able to undertake the journey, but those for whom reservations have been made are: W. C. A. Smoot, James A. Ban, Provo; A. L. Hale, Grantsville; Benjamin Cluff, Provo; W. W. Cluff Salt Lake; Henry Heath, Salt Lake; S. A. Ensign, Salt Lake; S. S. Worthington, Grantsville; Ruel Barrus, Grantsville; William Price Jones, Eureka; James Akley, Springville; William C. Mitchell, Parowan; William Robins, Scipio; Charles Crismon, Salt Lake; Alexander Gemmill, Salt Lake; I. N. Dunyon, Salt Lake; George Speirs, Salt Lake; A. Milton Musser, Salt Lake; Elliott Willdon, Beaver; George Harrison, Springville; Thomas Dallin, Springville; Hop Pender, Salt Lake; J. Lawson, Salt Lake; Nathan Tanenr, Granger; W. C. A. Smoot, Jr., Phil Margetts.

The last named was the first locomotive engineer that ever came to Utah. For many years he has been one of the leading actors of the State.

HILL GETS BUSY.

WILL EXTEND HIS ROAD.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Northern Railway announces that extensions are to be made at once from the main and branch lines to the international boundary. This is taken to mean that James J. Hill is preparing for an active invasion of the rich Canadian provinces north of his lines in North Dakota, Montana and Washington.

A glance at the map shows that Mr. Hill already has at least eight lines of railway pushed close to the boarder line, besides those which have invaded Canadian soil. Until recently, however, it has been understood that there was an agreement between him and the Canadian Pacific.

Four extensions lie in North Dakota, the first from Edmore to Sarles.

The Thorne extension will run from York forty-two miles to Thorne.

The Max Bass extension will run from Towner to Max Bass, forty-six miles. The Sherwood extension runs from Granville to Sherwood, in Minnesota, and another extension is being pushed from Three River Falls to Green Bush and Roseau, near the boundary line.

WON'T HAVE TAYLOR.

CALIFORNIANS START HOME.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SEATTLE, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] California dog owners have refused to participate in the field trials of the Pacific Northwest Field Trial Club, beginning next Thursday.

Californians had dogs entered in the British Columbia trials last month when J. M. Taylor of Ruthave, N. J., was judge. They claim Taylor did not give them a fair show, and that his judgment was bad on the performance of many dogs. The Northwest club is to start the dogs out after Bob White quail under the same official, and the Californains absolutely refused to contest again under his ruling. Entries that had been made have been canceled, and the dogs started home. The Northwest club today decided to go ahead, despite the protest against Taylor, though a big hole will be cut in the entry list.

SANTA FE CUT-OFF.

WILL SHORTEN COAST LINE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] With the incorporation in Texas of the Gulf, Santa Fé and Northwestern Railway, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railway has completed its plans for a new short transcontinental line between Galveston and other points in Southern Texas and on the Pacific coast.

The Gulf Santa Fé has an authorized capital stock of $475,000. It will extend from Brownwood, Texas, on the San Angelo branch to Texico on the Texas-New Mexico border, a distance of 350 miles, with a branch from a point in Lubbock county to a connection with the Pecos Valley division at or near Amarillo, Texas, an additional length of 15 miles.

This road will fill in the gap between the New Mexico lines of the Santa Fé and the Gulf division, and with the cut-off from Belen, New Mexico, to Texico, which will be completed early next year, with which it will connect at Texico.

The Belen-Texico cut-off is known as the Eastern Railway of New Mexico. Work on this line is progressing at three points. It will complete a through route, somewhat shorter than the present route via Trinidad.

BACHELORS ANXIOUS.

Dawson Miners are Hurrying Out to Civilization to Get Wives to Build Fires.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TACOMA, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Bachelors employed in the service of the Yukon Government at Dawson are stampeding outside to get married. They will not tell whether the extra salary of $25 per month paid to married men has anything to do with the matter. However, it is believed this pecuniary inducement is a strong one, to say nothing of the advantage of having some loving hand to light fires every morning when it is 50 below zero.

During the last few months Mulligan, Smilie, Genest and others of government service came out to United States and Canada for brides. They were so successful that nearly a dozen government employés recently started outside to get wives.

Side Talks by The Office Boy . . .

The easiest way to make a slow horse fast is not to feed him. I guess all the money dropped in speculation is dropped by men who are trying to pick it up. I don't believe poverty is a crime morally, but I guess it is matrimonially. Ma hands Pa a plexus every once in a while about Mrs. Brown getting a couple of new gowns or Mrs. Smith getting a lovely solitaire, and she can't understand how Brown and Smith can afford to buy their wives things that she can't have. It's a funny old world, isn't it? One half of the people think the other half are having more fun than they are and getting better things to eat and wear. Don't you know I often wish the old man was in the Dry Goods business instead of the Men's Goods. We sell a man an awfully good hat for $3.00, a woman can't buy a decent hat for less than from $10.00 to $40.00. We sell an awfully good shirt for $1.00, $1.50, $2.00 and $3.00, but a nice shirt waist costs from $3.00 to $10.00. We make in our Tailoring Department (Spring-st. store) an extra fine Tailor-made suit, elegantly tailored, at $30.00, $35.00 and $40.00 and $45.00, from high-class imported materials, still a high-class tailor suit made to order costs a woman anywhere from $75.00 to $150. I tell you if there were more stores run on the Silverwood plan, only the best goods at the very lowest possible prices, there would be more happy homes.

COW TALK

MADGE KENNEDY won the price for the Street Car ad., to go in the Los Angeles Inter-Urban and the Pacific Electric cars. I am having a reproduction made and it will appear in the cars about next Wednesday or Thursday, and Monday I will mail her a check. The contest continues the same this month on the ads. for the cars. Let me tell you something: Many think that the drawing that accompanies the ad. must be a pretty one; let me tell you that some of the best ads. that were ever written had funny, odd, drawings to go with them. It is the idea that counts; a drawing is not absolutely necessary; if you can think of a good catch phrase or a good headline, it will do as well. One of my friends wrote me last week asking if they could compete more than once in these contests; you can compete as many times as you want to, and win as many prizes as you can in either contest. Let me speak of the cow drawing contest now; do you notice that drawings from out of the city are winning a few prizes, and somehow or other the girls have been getting the best of the boys here lately; you must brace up and keep your end even. Now that school has really commenced, and the usual excitement that attaches the opening is about over with, and I will look for more drawings from you now.

WHOLESALE SLAUGHTER.

Three Persons are Foully Slain at Night.

Thugs Escape to Mountains in a Wagon.

Husband and Wife Engage in Pistol Duel.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MIDDLETOWN (N. Y.) Oct. 7.—A triple murder was revealed here today, when the bodies of Willis and Fred Olney were found in the woods half a mile from their home, at which last night was found the murdered body of Alice Ingerick. Both brothers had been shot.

Before night the crime is expected to number one more victim in Mrs. Georgia Ingerick, mother of the girl Alice. The mother, who was found unconscious in the barn of the Olney brothers last night, had not regained consciousness and was believed to be dying.

As soon as daylight permitted a search to be made for Fred and Willis Olney, who were missing from their home last night, where Mrs. Ingerick was found unconscious and her daughter murdered, fresh wagon tracks leading across a field to a woods near the house were traced. Just beyond them in the woods were found the bodies of Fred and Willis, lying on their backs, each with one arm across the breast. Their pockets had been turned inside out. Marks in the underbrush showed that the bodies had been dragged from the wagon to the place where they were found.

STRANGERS DISAPPEAR.

The police believe that the wagon which evidently carried the murdered brothers to the woods, is the same vehicle that several persons yesterday noticed in the vicinity of the Olney farm. Two strangers were in this wagon, which was seen going up the old road about 3 p.m., when it disappeared in the woods. At 11 p.m., several hours after the time when the murder was committed, the wagon was seen on the same road going away from the vicinity of the Olney farm and toward the Shawanogunk Mountains. The fact that an attempt was made to kill every person who was known to have been in the Olney house has caused the police to declare that there were other motives than robbery for the crime, and that the rifling of the Olney brothers' pockets was only a ruse to mislead pursuers. As yet, however, no plausible theory for the murder has been advanced.

The four persons in the house about dark yesterday, according to Lulu Ingerick, who left the place shortly after the tragedy, were Willis Olney, 62 years; Fred Olney, 58 years old; Mrs. Ingerick, the housekeeper of the two brothers, and her small daughter, Alice. Lulu, who is 13 years old, went to Middletown, returning in time for a late supper. Finding the house empty, the girl in fright summoned neighbors, who searched the premises. Alice was found dead in the cellar, her head beaten with an iron pipe. Her mother was found in the barn, apparently beaten by the same instrument, which was picked up on the kitchen floor by the searching party.

Willis Olney was a widower and Fred was a bachelor.

ROBBERY NOT MOTIVE.

Mrs. Ingerick, who had separated from her husband, had been employed as housekeeper at the Olney brothers' place only about a month. Her husband, Martin Ingerick, lived at Wurtzboro, not far from Middletown. In the house no traces of robbery have yet been found. The only articles of value known to have been taken from the two brothers in the rifling of their pockets were two silver watches. Considerable comment was excited here by the similarity of the position of the two brothers' bodies found in the woods, as each had the right arm crossed over the breast in the same position. Fred Olney's body had two bullet wounds in the right side, and an odd circumstance about these wounds was that they were under the right arm in such a position that the arm must have been raised high before the shots were fired. Willis Olney was shot through the right ear.

CROOK TURNS ON HIS PALS.

GIVES DAMAGING EVIDENCE IN ENGLISH COURT.

Brought Out of Prison to Testify in a Forgery Case, Witness, a Many Times American Criminal, and Now Serving His Third Term in England for Various Offenses, Speaks.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

LONDON, Oct. 7.—Charles Fisher, an American convict now serving a ten years' sentence of imprisonment in England for burglary, was the principal witness for the Crown at the Westminster Police Court today in a case against Talbot Bridgewater, describing himself as a medical specialist; Lionel Peyton Holmes, William Edward Shaw Kell and Elizabeth Foster, said to be Bridgewater's wife, charged them with conspiracy and forging the name of Marshal Fox, an American resident in London, to a check for $4095.

Fisher said he was born in New York and that he had served several sentences in America. He broke jail in Cincinnati in 1882 and escaped to England, but was rearrested and returned to the United States on an extradition warrant. The case against the defendants dates back to the summer of 1904. Bridgewater, it is charged, was the originator of the plot. He is alleged to have paid attentions to a lady, the secretary of Mr. Fox, and who is said to have installed Fisher as a boarder in her house at Streatham, a suburb of London.

Fisher, it is said, secured wax impressions of the keys of Fox's safe and the conspirators had a key made from this and got Fox's check book. Later Fisher was arrested in connection with an office-breaking affair and sentenced to ten years. The case has attracted considerable attention from time to time, as the prisoners were brought up on remand. Recently Fisher turned King's evidence and confessed his share in the Fox robbery to an inspector of police in the jail where he is working out his sentence.

Fisher's testimony today was an exhaustive disclosure of his alleged connection with the case on trial, and his career of crime. Since coming to England he has been convicted three times, including his present sentence. He testified that he was an accomplice of a gang working in London and shadowing rich Americans, and it is learned that he was indirectly connected with the recent robbery of a pearl necklace from Christie's. Fisher said he never moved about without carrying wax for the taking of impressions of locks, and while not admitting that he was connected with other big robberies, it was evident that he knew much about them. He said he had turned King's evidence because he wished to lead a new life.

The condition of Mrs. Ingerick remained unchanged tonight. A close watch is being kept on her in the hope that she may recover consciousness sufficiently to give some clew to the murderers. The physicians in attendance do not believe she can recover. Her husband, Martin Ingerick, from whom she parted several years ago, is at Wurtzboro, Sullivan county.

District Attorney Seever today offered a reward of $500 for the apprehension of the murderer or murderers, and it is probable that this amount will be increased to $2500 by the Supervisors of Orange county.

SHOOT EACH OTHER AT SIGHT.

HUSBAND AND WIFE IN DUEL.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—Denton H. Hopkins, a die cutter in Brooklyn, shot and killed his wife in a duel with her in the hallway of her flat, in Johnson street, Brooklyn, today. Although maried thirty years, the two were living paart, having quarreled over money matters.

Today, Hopkins called at his wife's flat, knocked for admission and when the door opened they began to fire at each other with revolvers. Mrs. Hopkins's sister witnessed the duel but was unable to say who shot first. Hopkins was wounded in the hand by a bullet from his wife's weapon and finally shot her in the eye. She died instantly. Hopkins was arrested and charged with murder.

The wife's name was Jessie S. Hopkins. Miss Jennie Bruyn, Mrs. Hopkins's sister, who witnessed the duel, said the conduct of the two indicated that they had agreed to shoot each other on sight. Hopkins afterwards declared that his wife fired the first shot. He said she was always nagging him about money and that he had refused to give her as much as she demanded. Miss Bruyn said Mrs. Hopkins had appeared frantic about her husband's conduct over money affairs.

RIVALS "JIM, THE PENMAN."

YOUTH UP FOR MANY YEARS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—The young man who was arrested yesterday at the San Francisco National Bank on a charge of having forged the name of D. S. Cartwright to a check, and who gave the name of D. R. Blossom, has been identified as Ambrosia Carpenter of Oakland. He belongs to a good family, but several previous charges of forgery have been made against him. When he was arraigned in the Police Court today he said he needed no lawyer, as he intended to plead guilty. Judge Morgan told him to reserve his plea for the Superior Court, and set his examinatoin for next Wednesday.

The crimes of which he has been accused are reported by the Bulletin to be as follows:

Forging the name of Augusta Rodgers to a check drawn on the Anglo-California Bank, for $1000.

Forging the name of Charles S. Wheeler of the firm of Bishop & Wheeler to check for $1300 drawn on the Central Trust Company.

Forging the name of John McLeod, contractor, to checks drawn on Wells, Fargo & Co. Bank, for $1700.

Forging the name of D. S. Cartwright to checks for $625, drawn on the San Francisco National Bank.

CONSPIRED TO STEAL JEWELS.

CONFIDANTE GIVES GAME AWAY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—Hyman Tells, 18 years old, an employé of a firm of jewelers, and Fred Langwell, 28 years old, are under arrest, charged with larceny and conspiracy to rob Tells' employers of jewelry. Both are said to have confessed guilt.

Langwell is a peddler, who had been a customer of the jewelry firm for several years. According to Tells' confession, Langwell proposed to him two months ago that he steal watches and jewelry and sell them to Langwell. Since then, it is estimated that Tells has taken about $3000 worth of watches and trinkets and delivered them to Langwell, who, it is said, intended to open a retail store and sell the jewelry stolen by Tells.

The police were notified of the conspiracy two weeks ago by Mrs. Kate Williams. It is reported Langwell had made Mrs. Williams his confidante, and that after a quarrel she divulged his plans.

MILLIONAIRE HART ARRAIGNED.

INSISTS GIRL SWALLOWED PILL.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—Oliver B. Hart, the millionaire's son, would-be suicide, and husband of a 16-year-old wife, was formally charged today with the murder of 10-year-old Irene Klokow, waif from an industrial school, whose father is a patient in an insane asylum and whose mother cannot be found.

The doctor, who is said to be addicted to morphine and cocaine, gazed stupidly at the walls of the courtroom when arraigned today and did not speak a word. He was represented by an eminent lawyer, who agreed to a continuance of ten days asked for by the police. Before going into the courtroom, Dr. Hart was questioned by police officials but he adhered to his original story, that the Klokow girl had swallowed morphine pills by mistake and that he had not attacked her.

The prisoner's father and father-in-law, residents of S. Louis, have both arrived in Chicago and are interesting themselves in developments.

Dr. Hart admitted today that he gave the child bromidia chloral. He said he gave the girl at least forty-five drops in his futile efforts to resuscitate her after she had swallowed a large number of morphine tablets, thinking, according to the doctor, that they were saccharine pills. He followed up the bromidia with at least eight hypodermic injections of strychnia sulphate.

Continuance of the case was set for October 14. The prisoner was taken to the county jail hospital.

CRIME BRIEFS.

Highbinders Ordered to Leave.

SAN JOSE, Oct. 7.—During the last few days the police squad in Chinatown has been double the usual force, as many outside Chinamen have been congregating here, among them several well known highbinders. Last night, the chief of police ordered all these men to leave the city, and accordingly some fifty of them have taken their departure.

Wanted East for Forgery.

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 7.—Gov. Pardee today issued requisition papers for the return of Harry G. Norman to New York, where he is wanted upon two indictments for forgery. Norman was arrested in this city upon a telegram from New York. He was twice released upon habeas corpus proceedings and finally arrested in Woodland, Yolo county, and held until the officers from New York arrived with the necessary papers.

WANT LYNCHING LEGALIZED.

Texas Citizens Who Ask That State Permit Mob Punishment Turned Down by Gov. Lanham.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Houston, Texas, says: "A petition from a number of citizens, headed by G. W. Knight of San Marcos, has been presented to Gov. Lanham, asking that the State permit mob punishment of negroes who assault women. The Governor is asked to indorse a policy of absolute unprotection to negroes guilty of assault, insuring them that they be given no trial by legal inquiry of any kind, and that they may be hanged instantly as soon as apprehended.

"Gov. Lanham's response principally is directed to the legal phase of the proposition. It is set forth that it is impossible for him to countenance the policy, in view of his oath of office and State legislation, which he is bound to protect."

FOOD AGAIN

A Mighty Important Subject to Everyone.

A Boston lady talks entertainingly of food and the change that can be made in health by some knowledge on that line. She says:

"An injury to my spine in early womanhood left me subject to severe sick headaches which would last three or four days at a time, and a violent course of drugging at the hands of old-fashioned physicians brought on constipation with all the ills that follow.

"My appetite was always light and uncertain and many kinds of food distressed me.

"I began to eat Grape-Nuts food two or three years ago, because I liked the taste of it, and I kept on because I soon found it was doing me good.

"I eat it always at breakfast, frequently at luncheon, and again before going to bed—and have no trouble in 'sleeping on it.' It has cured my constipation, my headaches have practically ceased, and I am in better physical condition at the age of 63 than I was at 40.

"I give Grape-Nuts credit for restoring my health, if not saving my life, and you can make no claim for it too strong for me to endorse." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

$1 FOR MACHIN TAILOR MADE Shirt Waists

To say that we had an immense business on Saturday expresses it very feebly, for the store's capacity was taxed to the uttermost. Lots of women bought two and three waists instead of one, and our invitation to the stout ladies brought many of them in who were fitted perfectly, and all these waists were sold at $1.00 each, not one of them worth less than $2.50 and some of them worth $3.50 and over. Really you can't afford to stay away from this sale if you have the least idea of economy. Remember sizes in all lines run up to 46.

Special attention is directed to a new line of belts just received. They come in black and colors, and also included are the new shirred belts, which come in white, black and colors. Choice for 50c. Worth up to $2.00.

See our swell neckwear 25c or 3 for 50c; also the fine embroidered stocks at 50c or three for a dollar.

CONFERENCE: WHY CALLED.

It is to meet and discuss the features of this problem that the conference of officials has been called. J. J. Byrne, general passenger agent of the Coast Lines, is already in Chicago, and General Manager A. G. Wells left last night in his private car to be present in person.

While this situation has been recognized in railway circles for some time past, it is believed that an actual consideration of the matter has been hastened by the recent aggressiveness displayed by the Gould interests in the acquisition of the Wabash, and the strenuous efforts on the part of the son of Jay Gould to perfect his transcontinental system with the completion of the Western Pacific into San Francisco. And in addition to this, there is to be considered back of all the eagerness of the great railway magnates the huge volume of trade with the Orient, which is expected to follow close upon the peace of Japan and Russia. This is the fat prize for which the railroads are preparing to scramble.

It is believed that the Harriman interests will prepare to meet this situation through the port of San Pedro as well as by way of San Francisco. The Gould system is concentrating its activities on San Francisco, and the Santa Fé finds itself forced to look well to its facilities in the northern port.

HISTORY BEING MADE.

In the meantime history is being made in the general headquarters of the system at Chicago. The creation of the new position of general traffic manager in charge of the passenger and freight traffic of the system and the appointment to that place of George T. Nicholson, formerly passenger traffic manager of the Santa Fé leaves the position of passenger traffic manager to be filled.

This position, it is almost certain, will lie between J. J. Byrne, general passenger agent of the Coast lines, and W. J. Black of Chicago, general passenger agent of the Eastern lines. Both are men of proved ability and merit, and each has a host of friends who are eagerly watching for the first news of the appointment, which must be announced in the next few days.

RAILROAD NOTES.

EFFECTS OF FAMINE.

With the temporary labor famine relieved, the Pacific Electric Railway is still considerably delayed in the completion of its Santa Ana line, on account of heavy shipments of rails being held up in transit between the eastern steel mills and the Coast.

So great has been the volume of freight business this season, not only to and from Coast points, but throughout the Middle West as well, that freight not perishable has been held up and delayed in favor of fruits and the movement of the grain crops.

Track laying toward Santa Ana has already passed the town of Artesia, and it is believed that the line will be opened to the public within two or three weeks at the latest.

The new city ticket offices of the Salt Lake route at Riverside will be opened the first of next month under the direction of J. H. Burtner, commercial agent. These offices are being fitted up in a wing of the Glenwood Hotel, and the furniture and effect throughout will follow closely the mission style carried out in the construction and equipment of the hotel. All of the furniture is being made in Riverside, and the passenger department of the road declares that these offices will be the finest and most artistic on the line, when completed.

General Manager R. E. Wells of the Salt Lake route left last night in his car on a ten days' trip to Salt Lake City.

W. W. King, general passenger agent of the Great Northern Steamship Company at Seattle, is spending a few days in Los Angeles while looking over the Southern California territory.

J. M. Greaves, ticket clerk in the city ticket offices of the Salt Lake, has been appointed city ticket agent at Riverside, and will leave the latter part of the month to assume his new duties.

Preserve the Indian Names.

The suggestion has been made that when Indian Territory shall become a State or part of a State the new State shall be called Sequoyah, in memory of the half-breed Cherokee who invented the syllable aphabet of the Cherokee language and who performed other noteworthy services for the people. Whether the suggestion is good or bad is not now to be determined, but certain it is that a conspicuous argument against the adoption of the name is unsound. It is argued that it is an Indian name and hard to pronounce. Mercy! A citizen of the United States to urge this as a reason against a geographical name in the United States! If there is anything in the power of precedent or the force of example, this is not an objection to but an argument for the name Sequoyah. For nearly 100 years we have been saying Massachusetts, Connecticut and Delaware and for a long time time have been pronouncing Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, , etc.—[Washington Star.

Exit the Kite.

The kite, according to ornithological authorities, is declared to be extinct, and it is practically so. But a Vigilance Committee has nevertheless been formed in Wales for the protection of the bird. A photographer recently traced one of the only pair of kites known to exist in South Wales to a cave in the mountains, and with a lucky snapshot secured a photograph. The home of the pair is being kept a secret.—[New York Tribune.

LOS ANGELES HAS CHEAPEST.

How Competition Helps Consumers of Refined Oil.

Distillates Cost Half San Francisco Prices.

Kerosene for Less Than in New York City.

BY ARTHUR R. HINTON.

In New York the consumer of kerosene or gasoline pays the Standard Oil Company 15 and 16 cents per gallon for the former and 20 cents for the latter. This is the average, with a number of higher grade oils bringing better prices.

In Chicago, the second city of the country, the commercial capital of the Middle West, the consumer pays 11 cents for kerosene and 14 cents for gasoline.

In San Francisco the Standard sells its bulk kerosene at about 13 cents. Pearl oil sells at 17½ cents, Elaine, 20 cents; stove gasoline, 22 cents in case; motor gasoline, 22 cents; No. 1 engine distillate, 14½ cents and No. 2, 13 cents.

In Los Angeles a good variety of bulk oil is delivered by tank wagons to houses in any part of the city for 7½ cents per gallon. In five gallon cans it can be had for 65 cents. Pearl oil brings 90 cents for five gallons, Elaine $1.35. Gasoline in five gallon cans sells for 80 cents with a higher grade for $1.25, engine and stove distillate, 6 and 7 cents.

Here we see the difference in prices where there is competition and where there is none. In San Francisco the Standard has the refined oil business cinched, so to speak, with the result that the consumer, the citizen who uses an oil lamp in his home, pays no less than 13 cents per gallon for the same oil that he gets in Los Angeles for 7½ cents delivered at his home. This, too, in the face of the fact that San Francisco is within a few miles of the Point Richmond refinery where the oil is manufactured, and Los Angeles hundreds of miles away. To bring oil to this city it is loaded in big steamers, brought South, unloaded at Redondo, loaded again into cars of the Santa Fé to be hauled to the city where it is again unloaded, yet the big monopoly sells it for far less.

Why is this the case? Why do the consumers of Los Angeles get kerosene delivered for a little over half what those of San Francisco pay. The answer is found in one word, competition. The fact that in Los Angeles there are eight refineries, insignificant in size and wealth as compared with the Standard, but nearly all striving for a portion of the trade, is what brings down prices to the consumer and gives him the benefit of cheaper oil.

For those who want the Eastern oils, such as the Elaine, the price is the same as in San Francisco, for in this there is, of course, no competition and there can be none, although there is oil manufactured here that is pronounced by competent judges to be equal to any that can be desired. The great majority of the people, however, do not demand this particular brand and so get the benefit of competition.

CONTRAST IN THE EAST.

The Times has caused inquiries to be made in New York and Chicago as to prices prevailig and the result shows a state of affairs that may surprise many persons. In New York City and vicinity the Standard has practically no opposition. The Valvoline Oil Company, with general offices at No. 11 Broadway, and agencies in the principal cities through the country, including Los Angeles and San Francisco, does considerabe business independent of the Standard, but it is believed that they have a working agreement, as there is no rate competition. Twenty cents a gallon is the prevailing rate for gasoline, and, except in some towns where a retailer has no competition and takes advantage of the automobilist to charge 25 cents, this has not varied more than a cent or two for over a year. Fifteen and 16 cents is the average price of kerosene.

In Chicago, on the other hand, there is some competition. A number of the independent refineries of the Middle West are doing business and kerosene retails at 11 cents and gasoline at 14 cents. The same rate prevails with some variations in the surrounding country.

IN REFINED FUEL PRODUCTS.

But it is not alone in the matter of kerosene and gasoline that the effect of competition is seen, nor is it here that it is seen to the best advantage, so far as the Pacific Coast is concerned. Here engine and stove distillates are used by thousands of people who in other sections would be using coal or wood. We speak not of crude-oil fuel, that is to all intents and purposes an entirely different line of business, and one that the Standard is doing comparatively little of, but of the fuel that is manufactured from the oil that is sold by the gallon, 50 cents worth of which is often equal to running a manufacturing concern for a day; that is used by hundreds of pumping plants through the country districts; that cooks meals for thousands; warms many houses and public buildings in winter, and operates machinery of every description where steam power is not desirable.

In both San Francisco and Los Angeles, and in every town in the State, even to the smallest rural community, these distillates are used. Hundreds of business men buy them, but the 'Frisco man pays 13 to 14½ cents a gallon, while his Los Angeles competitor gets his at 6 to 7 cents. In some places near here the competition has been unusually severe; it is sold as low as 3 cents. Before the fight between the Standard and Puente became acute prices were from 10 to 12 cents, competition between other establishments serving rates below those prevailing in San Francisco without completely destroying all profit in the business. In a year and a half they have fallen to their present level, but if the Standard succeeds in crushing local men, then look out for high prices. San Francisco rates will then be cheap by comparison, while Mr. Rockefeller makes up for former hard times.

NEAR-BY CITIES CONTRASTED.

At Santa Barbara, there is no competition with the Standard. The monopoly sells and delivers kerosene by wagon at 20 cents, gasoline at 17 and 18 cents. Elaine sells for 25 cents, and Star for 25; engine and stove distillates about 14 cents. Common gas engine lubricating oil sells at 50 cents, capital cylinder oil 75 cents, and extra cylinder oil 85 cents.

At San Bernardino there is competition between the great monopoly and the Puente. The latter is said to have but a very insignificant part of the trade, but that is sufficient to keep rates down to half what they are at the coast city. Gasoline is delivered in bulk, 90 cents for five gallons; in cans, $1.25. Kerosene is sold in bulk at 40 to 60 cents for five gallons, while engine and stove distillates sell as low as 5½ cents a gallon—a little over one-third what is charged at Santa Barbara, where Mr. Rockefeller reigns supreme. Engine and axle lubricants sell for 35 cents. This, too, in the face of the railroad haul to San Bernardino necessary while oil can be delivered at Santa Barbara by sea.

Bakersfield is the center of the greatest oil production on the Pacific Coast, but as the oil is a heavy fuel, the local refineries make only asphalt and distillates. The Standard has absolutely no competition in other lines. Elaine oil sells at its regular price of 25 cents; Pearl, in bulk, 20 cents, in cans 22 cents. Gasoline of 68 gravity sells for 30 cents, and that of 72 gravity for 33. Distillates, in which there is competition, sell for 6 to 7 cents.

Bakersfield prices are, no doubt, about the same as those prevailing in other valley towns. What a contrast with those pervailing in the south where there is competition.

A QUESTION FOR CONSUMERS.

Again, we ask you, Mr. Businessman, and you, Mrs. Housewife, do you want Los Angeles and San Bernardino rates to continue, or do you want those prevailing today in Bakersfield, San Francisco, Santa Barbara and New York to be in force? If you want to get fair treatment, reasonable prices for all time, all you have to do is to help keep up competition by patronizing local products. You are not asked to boycott the Standard, but to give the independents a chance, divide your patronage if you do not care to give them all. They are fair and ask only a fair show. Suppose it does cost a cent or two more, think of what this will mean in the end. It is hard to see how a person can consider any other proposition, especially when, as a rule, independents offer their product at the same price as the Standard.

Don't let yourself be mislead by the slanders the Standard is circulating about the local oil. When Mr. Rockefeller's men, whether they come openly or in disguise, tell you that local oil is poor or dangerous, ask them why it is that they only discovered this after their contract with the Puente expired. A company that sells an article for five years, and urges people to buy, and then denounces it as poor or unsafe brands itself as a deliberate falsifier, whose word cannot be trusted. A corporation that will do this and that will send around disguised emissaries to create a panic among housewives by deliberately lying about competitors' goods has placed itself outside the pale of respectful consideration.

QUICK DETECTIVE WORK.

Burglars Captured and Confess Within Three Hours of Time the Case is Reported.

Two burglars were captured in almost record time yesterday by Detective Shearon, and immediately after their arrest the thieves confessed. It had not been their fault that their booty was small, for the crime had been carefully planned.

When the proprietor of the Phillips Printing Company, No. 318 West Second street, arrived at his place of business at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, he found that the rear window had been forced open by burglars and his desk rifled. On the desk was found a broken corner of a screw driver. The thieves had also left a small screw driver on which were many stains of paint.

The case was reported to the detectives and Detective Shearon was assigned to it. Information he had received led him to suspect Andrew Williams, an employé of the place, who resides at No. 307 West Seventh street. In investigating the case Shearon found that there is a bicycle repair shop near Williams's home, and taking the screw driver and the broken piece of another to that shop he soon found that both had belonged there, and that one of them had been loaned to Williams.

The arrest of Williams was made before 11 o'clock, and he confessed his guilt and implicated Frank Newmiller of No. 530 Wall street, who, when arrested, also confessed.

Williams had seen about $200 in gold in the desk the day before, and thinking it had been left there over night he induced the other young man to join him in the burglary. The gold had been removed, however, and the thieves secured only about $8.

"POMPEII" DISPLAY.

Pain's Fireworks Show Will Begin Local Engagement at Prager Park Tomorrow Night.

Beginning tomorrow night, Pain's fireworks spectacle, "The Last Days of Pompeii," will occupy the Prager Park grounds, and will show nightly for the balance of the week.

This display is well known in the East, having been at one time a great feature of the Manhattan beach attractions. It is mounted upon an extensive platform, with a representation of Mount Vesuvius rising in the background. In front are groups of dancers, and representations from ancient scenes in Italy under the rules of the Caesars.

An amphitherter of seats is being erected for the accommodation of 12,000 persons, and the management asserts that it is planned to give the show in Los Angeles on an unusual scale.

At a single performance nearly 500 pounds of powder are discharged, along with the subterranean explosion of many sticks of dynamite, to get the various effects of a violent volcanic eruption and an earthquake.

A number of new protechnic pieces and firework effects will be introduced in the course of the show.

Including actors and supernumeraries, about 300 people appear in the various scenes and spectacles of the pageant.

RUBY'S LAWYER.

He Denies That J. J. Morgan Attempted to Release Himself from Miss Casselman's Bail Bonds.

The alleged effort of J. J. Morgan to get himself released from the bonds of Ruby Casselman, reported in yesterday's papers, is denied by the girl's attorney, S. P. Mulford. He said, last night:

"Mr. Morgan, in the first place, went on Ruby's bonds at the close of her preliminary examination as an act of courtesy, because it was 6 o'clock in the evening, and too late to hunt up someone else. The understanding was that by the first of the week I should secure another bondsman to take his place, as Mr. Morgan was soon to leave the city. I shall have the alternative ready on Monday, as agreed. That is all there is to it."

Ruby Casselman is under $2000 bonds for appearance in the Superior Court to stand trial for forgery. Others on her bonds are John Casselman, her uncle; Mrs. C. B. Bryant, and Mr. and Mrs. Martin, the girl's foster-parents.

Notwithstanding the lawyer's denial, it is a fact that Mr. Morgan appeared at police headquarters yesterday and made an effort to be released from the bonds. Mr. Mulford still refuses to divulge the whereabouts in the city of his fair client. "She is safe, under proper espionage," he said last night, "in the household where she was placed by me at the time of her release on bail. To save from annoyance the family that is keeping her, I shall keep their name secret."

On account of protracted ill health, J. M. Elliott, president of the First National Bank, will leave Monday for St. Paul to be absent for several weeks. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Elliott as far as Salt Lake City.

Pembroke Jones, of New York City, bearing a letter from the private secretary of E. H. Harriman, advising railroad officials that the bearer is a personal friend of the great railway magnate, left last night over the Salt Lake for the East after spending some time at Pasadena.

J. A. Gilman, secretary of the Honolulu Rapid Transit Company, and largely interested in the sugar production of the islands, accompanied by his wife and daughter, left last night for San Francisco after a week spent in and about Los Angeles. In Pasadena Mr. Gilman found what he considers to be the nearest approach to his beloved Honolulu, and he is thoroughly in earnest in his intention of purchasing a residence in that beautiful suburb, where he and his family may live on their frequent visits to the United States. The electric railway systems of Los Angeles especially interested the man from Honolulu on account of his connection with the system there.

THE ROOT OF THE MATTER

He Cured Himself of Serious Stomach Troubles, by Getting Down to First Principles.

A man of large affairs in one of our prominent eastern cities by too close attention to business, too little exercise and too many club dinners, finally began to pay nature's tax, levied in the form of chronic stomach trouble; the failure of his digestion brought about a nervous irritability making it impossible to apply himself to his daily business and finally deranging the kidneys and heart.

In his own words he says: "I consulted one physician after another and each one seemed to understand my case, but all the same they each failed to bring about the return of my former digestion, appetite and vigor. For two years I went from pillar to post, from one sanitarium to another, I gave up smoking, I quit coffee and even renounced my daily glass or two of beer without any marked improvement.

"Friends had often advised me to try a well known proprietary medicine, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and I had often perused the newspaper advertisements of the remedy but never took any stock in advertised medicines nor could belive a 50-cent patent medicine would touch my case.

"To make a long story short I finally bought a couple of packages at the nearest drug store and took two or three tablets after each meal and occasionally a tablet between meals, when I felt any feeling of nausea or discomfort.

"I was surprised at the end of the first week to note a marked improvement in my appetite and general health and before the two packages were gone I was certain that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets was going to cure completely and they did not disappoint me. I can eat and sleep and enjoy my coffee and cigar and no one would suppose I had ever known the horrors of dyspepsia.

"Out of friendly curiosity I wrote to the proprietors of the remedy asking for information as to what the tablets contained and they replied that the principal ingredients were aseptic pepsin (government test,) malt diastase and other natural digestives, which digest food regardless of the condition of the stomach."

The root of the matter is this, the digestive elements contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest the food, give the overworked stomach a chance to recuperate and the nerves and whole system to receive the nourishment which can only come from food. Stimulants and nerve tonics never give real strength, they give fictitious strength, invariably followed by reaction. Every drop of food, every nerve and tissue is manufactured from our daily food, and if you can insure its prompt action and complete digestion by the regular use of so good and wholesome a remedy as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, you will have no need of nerve tonics and sanitariums.

Although Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been in the market for only a few years, probably every druggist in the United States, Canada and Great Britain now sells them and considers them the most popular and successful of any preparation for stomach trouble.

The Largest Business College in Los Angeles.

Last year, at the height of the business college season, February, every desk in our Bookkeeping Hall was taken. This year, at the beginning of the term, that enrollment is nearly doubled. New desks—all roll-top office style—have been put in place, and additional bank and office elevations are completed.

In the Shorthand Department last year we had one hundred machines. This year we are adding twenty visible typewriters, of all the popular makes, and both double and single keyboards. This great expense indicates the growth of the school in that department. We have room on our great premises for still another hundred pupils, without crowding. Pupils have the use FREE, at home or at school, or in both places, of any make of typewriter they prefer.

Our Preparatory Department already demands the attention of three teachers and a separate building. This department makes it possible for all, no matter what their age or attainments, to receive a good English education, or take the business and commercial and shorthand courses.

Our GREAT ANNUAL RECEPTION of the public will take place Friday evening, October 13, from 8-12. Come and inspect the premises and meet the teachers.

Our Medical Journal

STRICTLY RE

Is just inside to the right of our street entrance. The way to find out all about our work quick and easy is to read our Journal. It is impossible to describe our kind of work in public print. In our Journal you will find the facts in plain language. Go and help yourself to one. If you live out of the city, write us and we will mail you one in a plain envelope.

Why are we successful in our business? The answer is a simple truthful one. Because we know our business. Our success in the place is based on a thorough medical education, supplemented by years of experience. Men cured by us go out saying only good thing our treatment. Our methods have done for them what others have to do. This has been accomplished by skillful work, and scientific ment aided by good practical common sense. Our knowledge of wh do and how to do it, is but the understanding of how to assist natu trying to throw off abnormal and diseased conditions. Our exper has taught us just the right help to nature. We give that: Nature the rest. It is ever our purpose to place ourselves before the publi true light. We do not care to occupy a false position in any part Our claims for superiority in the treatment and care of "Disease Men" are based on solid facts that speak for themselves. Our busin regular and legitimate. We tell the people what we can do, and ready to make good all we claim. We are always ready to prove selves by our work. All who come to us are received cordially, consultation and thorough examination free of charge.

Varicocele Cannot be Cured Without Detention from Work

No man was ever cured of varicocele without stopping his work to be treated. We want our patients one week to guarantee a cure, but we solemnly promise not to use a knife or any wide-open surgical operation. We remove the diseased tissue completely by a painless operation, known only to us. You can eat three times a day and sleep every night, while under treatment. We can show you a hundred business men who will tell you from personal experience if the above is true. We will examine you for nothing and show you the proof of our cures here in the city for ten years successful work without one failure.

Our treatment quired through twenty-one years' work, and is free from mineral contains no injurious drugs, the very core of the disease.

Vital Decline Can Be Cured

About 11 years ago here in Los Angeles, I wrote and published the first responsible information on the TRUE CAUSE and successful premature weakness. I pointed out the direct connection of the prostate weakness of the organs, and proved to the profession that my treatment these cases which heretofore had practically resisted all forms of treatment that time nearly all of the prominent specialists in the largest Eastern adopted my method, with marked success, while at the same time for vertisements have been continually copied, often word for word, by styled specialists all over the land, who know absolutely nothing of my treatment. By thoroughly understanding the true cause of this trouble I give desired result by removing the trouble by natural and scientific means.

Contracted Disorders

Of all the diseases peculiar to men, contracted disorders are the most cut-and-try, hit-and-miss treatment, administered by good friends, in general practice, and most of the would-be specialists. It is certainly to hear the story of the average patient telling his experiences with the kinds of so-called treatment he has been "up against." A large majority patients come to us with all the original diseases and part or all of the resulting from delay and mistreatment. We generally have to cure them or all of the following conditions have developed: Chronic discharge, of the chronic bladder troubles, diseased prostate, sores, swellings, etc. patient whose confidence and mind are also diseased through failure ment. Don't trifle with these disorders, go to a doctor who knows how it is the cheapest, surest and shortest way out. We have been 22 years ness.

TWO HOTELS ROBBED OF GUESTS' JEWELS.

Caskets Containing Nearly a Thousand Dollars' Worth of Diamonds are Stolen from the Van Nuys Broadway and Rochester.

TWO DIAMOND robberies, involving the loss of nearly $1000 worth of gems, were reported to the police yesterday afternoon and last night. In both cases the robbed persons were hotel guests, and in neither has any clew been uncovered. The Broadway Van Nuys was the scene of one of the robberies, the Hotel Rochester of the other.

The victims are Miss Hannah Mansfield, a prominent society girl of Tucson, Arizona, and Mrs. C. C. Riches.

Miss Mansfield's losses are two solitare diamond rings and one diamond-set locket, of the actual value of $650. Associations make them worth much more, however, to her. Mrs. Riches was robbed of two diamond rings, a diamond breastpin and a diamond-set brooth, to the value of $300. In both instances the gems reposed in caskets and the receptacles as well as the jewels were carried off.

SCOUTED ANY DANGER.

Miss Mansfield, who is a daughter of the late J. S. Mansfield, during his life one of the best-known business men of Arizona, arrived in Los Angeles several weeks ago with her sister, Miss Phyllis Mansfield, and an aunt. They took apartments at the Van Nuys Broadway.

The other two ladies urged Miss Mansfield to deposit her jewels in the hotel office for safe keeping, but she scouted the idea of possible theft and kept them in her rooms.

Last Tuesday Miss Mansfield went to a bureau drawer or her trunk, it is not clear which, to take out her jewel casket. It was gone. Though startled, she made no outcry, thinking she might have mislaid the precious case. It is a remarkable fact that nearly four days were allowed to pass before the police were called in. Miss Mansfield shrank from making notoriety. The hotel management gave every assistance in a thorough search of the premises, but without avail.

As a last and tardy resort the police were notified, and last night several detectives were detailed to work on the case. They have not the least clew to guide them. Miss Mansfield has adopted a cheerful, philosophical view of her loss. She says she feels sure the diamonds will be recovered, but can give no reason for her hope. Her uncle, Solomon Goldschmidt, left Tuscon last night for Los Angeles, in response to a telegram, to aid in the search for the stolen property.

HER BACK WAS TURNED.

The robbery at the Hotel Rochester was more daring, though perhaps not so mysterious, as that at the Van Nuys Broadway.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. C. C. Riches was sitting sewing in her room on the first floor of that hostelry. Her back was to an open window. Close to the window stood a bureau, in a drawer of which reposed a jewel case containing the gems described. At 3 o'clock Mrs. Riches had taken a diamond ring from the casket and placed it on her finger. Then, leaving the drawer open, and the casket in place, she had resumed her seat and her sewing.

Ten or fifteen minutes later Mrs. Riches was made uncomfortable by a draught. She rose to close the window. In passing the bureau she glanced casually into the open drawer—and was dazed to see that the jewel-box was gone.

She tried the door and found it locked. Then the open window suggested a solution. She ran to it and surveyed the corridor. It was empty. An alarm was sounded at once and a hurried search of the hotel was made. But no one was found to tell of having seen a stranger about. The police were then notified, but succeeded no better in unearthing a clew.

It is their theory, and seemingly the only tenable one, that the robber, in passing through the hallway, looked through the open window and saw Mrs. Riches go to the bureau drawer and take a ring from the case; and that he waited until she had seated herself ten feet away, with her back to the window, then thrust his arm through the windowplace, abstracted the casket (which was within easy reach from the sill,) and noiselessly slipped away.

GIRL AND REVOLVER GIVE BURGLAR RUN.

MISS D. SHUNK of No. 423 California street last night drove a persistent burglar from her home at the point of an ugly-looking revolver and then chased him four blocks till he broke into a run and threw away the mask which covered his [illegible]

Miss Shunk proved herself a heroine when the occasion demanded. She displayed nerve and tact which would do credit to a brave man, yet the whole affair was conducted quietly, and no admiring audience looked on the performance.

Shortly after 9 o'clock Miss Shunk was startled by a slight noise, indicating the raising of a window, which appeared to come from the bathroom. She resolved to investigate, but first of all she decided to arm herself in case of emergency.

Securing a firm grip on a revolver of no mean caliber, and which Miss Shunk can use with remarkable skill and accuracy, she opened the bathroom door. A sight here met her gaze which would ordinarily elicit a volley of screams from a member of the feminine sex.

With a black mask obscuring his features a burglar stood with one foot in the bathroom, just drawing himself over the window sill.

"Now, climb right out of that window," calmly cautioned Miss Shunk, "and please do not lose any time about it."

With a suppressed curse the invader sought to question the girl's authority, and found himself glancing down the barrel of the revolver.

"Raffles" decided to move, and with considerable rapidity. Without wasting any words with the girl who had proven more than a match for his cunning the man dropped to the ground below the window, and started away.

Not satisfied with having already saved her home from the visit of a burglar Miss Shunk hastily followed and, with drawn gun, hurried his departure from that vicinity.

A rapid walk of several blocks followed, and when a dark spot was approached the man hastily removed his mask, and throwing it aside, broke into a run.

Satisfied with her endeavors Miss Shunk deliberately returned home, and the police were notified.

A good description of the man was furnished, he being described as about five feet in height, wearing dark clothes, tan shoes, a black soft hat, and heavy black mask.

SEIZES PURSE AND VANISHES.

BOLD ROBBERY OF A WOMAN AT SAN DIEGO DEPOT.

Pocketbook Knocked from Her Hands Among Crowd Awaiting Departure of Train and Thief Eludes Capture—Mrs. Charles Julian Victim of Runaway Accident.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN DIEGO, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In the crowd at the depot on the departure of the regular noon train a purse containing $300, belonging to Todd's Second Regiment Band, Patriarchs Militant of San Francisco, was knocked from the hands of Mrs. George Price, wife of the solo cornetist of the band. A man snatched it, and disappeared among the freight cars which were in the yards.

The robbery occurred just before the train pulled out and a search was being made for the man when the train left. As it passed the upper end of the freight yard a man was seen to dash from behind a small building and jump onto the train, just behind the engine. This occurred in full view of all on the platform, and those who claim to have witnessed the robbery declare it was the thief who boarded the train.

The band and Mrs. Price left for the north anyway, as they had to make connections for San Francisco in Los Angeles, leaving the matter in the hands of the police.

The peace officers telephoned a full description of the thief to Oceanside, where the train was stopped, but no one answering the description could be found. When the train had pulled out a man was discovered riding in the cab with the enginere, who, it is claimed, tallied exactly with the suspect.

A description of the man was also sent to Santa Ana and Los Angeles, but the local peace officers received no word regarding the matter from either place.

The band had come down here with the Odd Fellows for the encampment. Beside the money the purse contained a gold watch, and Mrs. Price's railroad ticket.

HER NARROW ESCAPE.

Mrs. Charles Julian had a seemingly miraculous escape from death late this afternoon in a runaway accident. She was driving a spirited horse to a light open buggy, and as she turned into D street from Fourth the bit broke, and the horse dashed down D for a block and then swerved suddenly, throwing Mrs. Julian some distance through the air. She lit on her head, the blow rendering her unconscious, but she was revived by medical aid, and physicians say she will recover.

JOSEPH SURR DEAD.

Joseph Surr, for twenty-two years a resident of San Diego and Coronado, died at his home in the latter place this afternoon, aged 83 years and 9 months. A widow, three sons and a daughter survive.

BAY CITY BRIEFS.

The Chamber of Commerce has taken up the question of the permanent lighting in some attractive manner of the business streets of the city.

The visiting Odd Fellows took their departure for their northern homes today, and by night there were but a few stragglers left.

The Kelly codification liquor ordinance went into effect today. Nearly every liquor dealer in town has his application for a new license in, as a delay might mean the loss of the permit. There will be no more booze sold on Sunday anywhere in San Diego if this ordinance is enforced.

The second race for the Williams Cup will be sailed tomorrow over a course of eleven miles.

Because he had had trouble with his wife, Al Taylor, a street-car man of this city, attempted to commit suicide last night by taking arsenic. He took an overdose, and is all right today.

REMARKABLE NERVE.

Shrewdness of Davis Woman is Not Doubted Since Latest Identification of Diamond on Her.

If any doubt over the shrewdness of Mrs. Nellie Davis, the diamond thief, existed at the time of her arrest, it was dispelled yesterday when Miss Ethel Culver of No. 1374 Figueroa appeared to identify a diamond ring stolen from her home; she told a remarkable story to the police.

The entrance of the Culver home is believed to have been the most daring piece of work perpetrated by Mrs. Davis during her extensive operations in Los Angeles.

On the morning of September 23 Miss Culver was at work on the second floor of her home. For convenience she placed three diamond rings on a dresser in a front room, and went about her work, never giving a thought as to the safety of the gems.

Not until the afternoon did the woman have occasion to think of the rings, and when a search for them was made no trace could be found. The case was placed in the hands of the police, and yesterday Miss Culver identified one of the rings, which was found prominently displayed on the forefinger of Mrs. Davis at the time of her arrest.

The other two rings have evidently been disposed of, as a thorough search through the sixteen diamonds found on Mrs. Davis's person fails to reveal those belonging to Miss Culver.

It was necessary for the woman to pass through several rooms and mount a flight of stairs to reach the bedroom in which the Culver diamonds were left.

Despite the fact that Mrs. Davis undoubtedly spent several minutes in roaming about the Culver house she was not seen by any member of the family at the time. This prevents identification by Miss Culver, but the ring is unmistakably one of the number stolen from her.

With the identifications made by a number of other women whose homes have been burglarized in the same manner, a net is being drawn about Mrs. Davis which is apparently most secure. Officers at headquarters are awaiting the next surprise in the now highly interesting case.

CONSTABLE'S CATCH.

Met by Stolen Horses He Was Seeking, Finds Other Missing Animals, Lands Man.

Constable Robert Hicks of El Monte made what he believes is an important capture, yesterday, in Los Angeles, and one which he thinks will break up the horse stealings which have been grieving El Monte folk for the past few months.

For the past six weeks there has been a series of horse stealings in that community, and last Wednesday came the latest loss, when two valuable sorrels, the property of Mrs. Slayton, were taken from the pasture at the Harry Rose ranch.

Others of the El Monte neighborhood who had suffered recent loss in this manner were Mr. Comstock, Mr Sawyer and Mr. Garvey; and the constable decided that it was time to stop the business.

Accompanied by James Steele of the Rose ranch he came to Los Angeles and through information given by A L. Wilson of the City Employment Bureau, trailed the Slayton horses ever to East Los Angeles.

Just as the constable was going out Avenue 19, James Munsey came out from a horse yard on that avenue, driving the very horses for which the constable was looking for. An investigation showed the horse taken from the Comstock ranch in the Avenue 19 horse yard, and there were several others there.

Munsey explained that he had bought the horses from various Mexicans, but could give only hazy details of the alleged purchases. He was detained until a deputy sheriff went over from the County Jail and placed him under arrest, and he is now in jail. The case will come up for hearing tomorrow.

All six of the horses were taken to the Tallyho Stables, and today El Monte ranchers will try to identify their animals.

THREE HURT IN SMASH.

Passengers and Driver Slightly Hurt in Collision of Car and Wagon. Vehicle Demolished.

A westbound Ocean Park car struck an express wagon last evening at Frederick Station, cutting the vehicle in two and mixing its contents, beer and flour, in an indescribable mass. Fred Plath of Santa Monica, the driver, was thrown a considerable distance by the impact, and, when he was picked up, it was found that the bones of both thighs had been fractured. He was otherwise bruised, but it is believed his injuries are not of a dangerous nature.

Edward Kendall, a Los Angeles architect, and Miss A. B. Cavanaugh, also of Los Angeles, who were sitting on a front seat of the car, were painfully bruised. The front end of the car was smashed in.

Plath is said to have heard the warning gong of the car, but thought he could get safely over the crossing.

CAR STRIKES MESSENGER.

Frank Kellogg, a messenger boy, was struck by an interurban car on the San Pedro line at Twenty-eighth street and Vermont avenue at 6 o'clock last night. The bicycle which he was riding was demolished, and Kellogg suffered severe injuries to his back and right side.

OTHER MAN'S EFFECTS.

Two Newly-arrived Foreigners Become Separated on Broadway and Now Cannot Find One Another.

Somewhere, wandering about the streets of Los Angeles, is Volka Ramie, but recently from Switzerland, carrying all the personal effects of Emil Fireman, who hails from France, and recently made the journey to this country in Ramie's company.

Fireman appeared at police headquarters last evening with a friend, J. Dietsch, of No. 1538 Beal street, at whose home he is temporarily living. Fireman asks the officers to institute a search for his missing friend, as he is well supplied with the bundles containing property belonging to Ramie.

The mix-up occurred because the two men had become good friends while swapping stories aboard the ocean liner, and as they were both bound for Los Angeles they decided to make the trip from New York together. They became careless in handling their hand baggage, and while walking down Broadway yesterday became separated.

Fireman had arranged to become a boarder at the Dietsch home, and after installing himself there, sought the assistance of Dietsch in locating the missing man.

Neither Ramie nor Fireman are able to speak English in any but abbreviated form, and the latter is spending sleepless nights lest his newly made friend meet with harm, and incidentally disappear with his baggage.

DINWOODIE DISCHARGED.

William Dinwoodie, the former local preacher, who was arrested by the police under a disgusting charge on Friday, was discharged from custody yesterday after the evidence had been heard. Rev. William M. Sterling and other persons took the stand and testified to the former good moral character of the prisoner, and he offered in his own defense a plausible story, while the evidence of the policeman against him was not sufficiently positive and direct to show his guilt. He was discharged by Justice Austin.

BRICK SAVES LIFE.

J. A. Childers Owes His Escape from Death by Car to Most Peculiar Circumstance.

A brick placed on the car track at Thirty-third street and Central avenue is all that saved J. A. Childers, No. 844 Wall street, from instant death at 5 o'clock last evening. Childers was riding a wheel, and in attempting to cross the Vernon line a short distance ahead of car No. 341 was swerved in front of the car because the front wheel of his machine became fastened in the groove of the track.

The motorman had failed to slacken the speed of his car as the rider appeared to have ample time to cross. As the car was bearing down on the man at a lively speed his front wheel came in contact with a brick, evidently placed on the track by small boys, and he was thrown in such a position as to receive only slight injuries when the collision occurred.

CHINK LOTTERY KING CAUGHT.

Detectives Ingram and Riley received the biggest surprise of their lives last night when they raided the joint of Mock Chock, the king of lottery proprietors, at No. 336 East First street. Chock has faced the desk sergeant at police headquarters more times than any other Chinese lottery operator in the city, yet again his ceaseless vigilance against police interference was found wanting. Tong Wong and Tong Lee were arrested in the place, and taken to the City Jail, along with a huge stack of lottery tickets, and furnished bail for their appearance Monday. Chock was reclining on a bunk, enjoying a post-prandial pipe, and the paraphernalia was easily seized. Lee was fortified with a revolver, and was arrested on a charge of carrying concealed weapons.

ENGINEERS AND ARCHITECTS.

The Engineers' and Architects' Association held its annual banquet at the Bristol last night, between thirty and forty being present. President Campbell presided at the banquet, and Langdon C. Easton read a paper which had been prepared by Capt. C. H. McKinstry, who is in charge of the San Pedro breakwater. The subject treated was the character and details of construction of the three great breakwaters of the country—Delaware, Sandy Bay and San Pedro. The paper was of great interest and was received with enthusiastic approbation by the association.

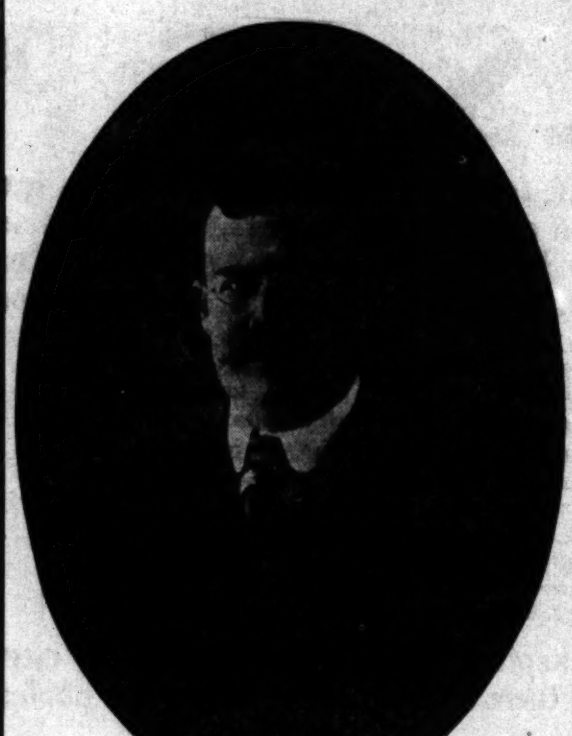
The Santa Ana Tin Mining Company

Located fourteen miles from El Toro in Trabuco Canyon, Orange County, California

Will start their mills this week for permanent work in milling and refining by the new Hydro-Metallurgical process, discovered by Mr. J. A. Comer, manager of the company. This is the only process ever discovered whereby the polyxene group of metals have been extracted commercially from ore, and is undoubtedly the greatest discovery known to metallurgy, and means the opening of a new era in the mining of rare metals in the United States.

By his process, Mr. Comer is able to extract over $500 per ton in gold, platinum, iridium, osmium, palladium, rhodium and ruthenium, besides by-products of tin, nickle, cobalt-uranium, bismuth, etc.; these later will more than pay expense of milling and refining.



GAIL BORDEN,
President of the Company.

Discovery of Untold Value to the World

The extent of this discovery is beyond comprehension, for it means a complete change in the world's production of these rare metals, 80 per cent. of which is produced by Russia. Mr. Comer is positive in the belief that within three years Southern California will produce enough of these metals to supply the world, and for this we are indebted to the untiring and physical efforts of Mr. Comer and the ready financial aid of Mr. Borden.

These mines were located four and a half years ago by Gail Borden, J. A. Comer and L. C. Comer, for the mining of gold and tin, and although Mr. Comer was convinced of the rich values in the ore, the six metallurgists employed by the company during the first three years, at a salary from $100 to $250 a month, each and everyone, made an absolute failure in extracting metals of paying value. Even this did not discourage Mr. Comer. The word "fail" is unknown to him. He believed the ore carried metals of rare value, and with his attained knowledge and that tenacity found only in men who can and will, he began to work out a method, and the bricks of platinum, iridium and osmium brought out in commercial form by him and certified to by the largest platinum refiners in the world (and also by Metallurgist C. J. Calahan of this city, the only man so far as they know who is capable of checking the work here) is proof positive that Mr. Comer was right in his belief.

MILL NO. 1, SANTA ANA TIN MINING COMPANY,

L. C. COMER,
Secretary and Treasurer of the Company.

Will Build a Larger Refinery

It is the intention of the company to build a larger refinery, and, in order to accomplish this, the net proceeds of present work will be used to that end. But to hasten the building of refinery the company has offered a block of stock at par ($100 a share,) and as soon as sufficient funds are in hand, either from ore refined or sale of stock, no more stock will be offered for sale at any price.

Much Work Has Been Accomplished

The company has been working in a quiet, unostentatious manner, making no comment upon their assays in order to sell stock or strengthen the confidence of their shareholders (although assays have been made, showing values even in the thousands of dollars to the ton.) The directors would not publish any information until the success of the mines was assured, and it can be said with great credit to the company that no stock was offered for sale by them (after the six metallurgists failed to get expected values from the ore) until the first of last month, when success was assured and the stockholders informed.

Not Dependent on Ledges

Another point of special significance is that the company does not depend on ledges; they have a large mountain all of high-grade ore, easy to mine, and absolutely inexhaustible.

J. A. COMER,
General Manager of the Company.

Mines Are Well Equipped

They have a complete ten-stamp mill, just remodeled for the new process of refining; large stream of water; electric light plant; houses for help; teams, etc.; in fact, everything in modern equipments for successful mining, the expense of all being about $150,000, most of which has been borne by the president, Mr. Gail Borden.

A Manufacturing Plant Possible

The company believes it a matter of but a short time until a plant for the manufacturing of platinum sheet or wire, platinum crucibles, dishes, etc., will be built in or near Los Angeles. The company has on display at its offices, 502 Laughlin Building, an eight-pound brick of platinum, iridium and osmium, and at the works as much more to melt, besides about fifty tons of solution containing in varying proportions the platinum group of metals—gold and by-products; considering that these metals are all worth as much as gold, from the foregoing the public can get some adequate idea of the value of the Santa Ana Tin Mining Company's holdings.

Vanderbilt and Pulitzer Nuptials.

WEDDING THE COMING WEEK TO UNITE TWO OF NEW YORK'S MOST NOTABLE FAMILIES.

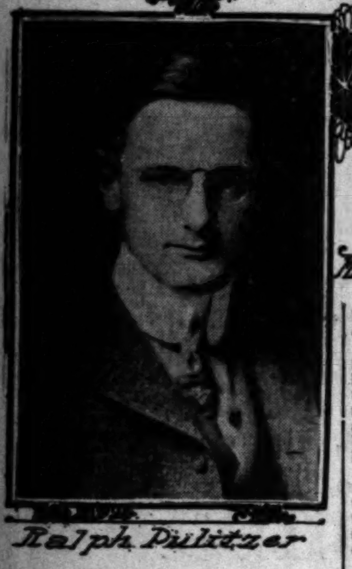
[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

THE Vanderbilt and Pulitzer lines are to be united in marriage.

Ralph Pulitzer, son of the proprietor of the New York World, is to wed Miss Fredericka Vanderbilt Webb, great-granddaughter of the old Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt, next Saturday.

It is a match to which much significance will attach. It lifts the family of the brilliant New York editor into a plane of highest social recognition. It unites the fortunes of two families whose money has been entirely self-made, for Pulitzer and Vanderbilt represent conditions peculiarly American, and their success would not have been possible in any other country.

When, more than forty years ago, Joseph Pulitzer, a young Austrian of frail physique, came to the United States, the grandfather of the girl his son is now to wed, then one of the richest men in the country, was soon to become the richest, and the great fortune he left was destined to be trebled by his son, William H. Vanderbilt. The latter was the father of Leila Osgood Vanderbilt, mother of Miss Fredericka, who is to be the bride of Ralph Pulitzer.



Ralph Pulitzer

Miss Fredericka Vanderbilt Webb

At that time nothing seemed more improbable than that the two lines should be joined in the short space of a generation. The poor immigrant now landing at Ellis Island friendless and without funds, would appear to have just as good a chance of getting into the Rockefeller family forty years from now.

The future editor of the New York World labored under more than the disadvantages of poverty and lack of friends. He was delicate to the point of weakness, and his sight was so poor that badly as the United States wanted soldiers to carry on the war against the South, it declined to accept him.

But the right stuff was in the young Austrian. Drifting to St. Louis, he managed to get started, and eventually became the editor of a paper. Making a success of it, he went to New York, and bought what was a dying, almost dead, paper. What he made of it, and how he built the New York World to its present condition of power and influence, is one of the most noted achievements of newspaper history.

When he brought the World to the front, he developed a property which had once been successful under the editorship of James Watson Webb. It was then known as the Courier and Inquirer. Only a few years before Pulitzer crossed the Atlantic it had been purchased by Alexander Cumming, and Mr. Webb installed as editor.

It is a startling coincidence in this marriage filled with the unusual, that the Webb under whom the paper enjoyed the only period of prosperity it knew till the Pulitzer regime, was a grandfather of her who is to be Mrs. Ralph Pulitzer.

This Webb, Gen. James Watson Webb, was a power in New York journalism at the time of the Civil War. He was the intimate friend of William H. Stewart, Secretary of State, and later in life spent a period as American Minister to Brazil.

His son, named for Secretary Stewart, married Miss Vanderbilt about twenty-six years ago, and since that time has profited by the prominence of both families to take an imposing social position.

The fortunes of the Vanderbilts and the Pulitzers and two names great in the history of the New York World, and its forerunner, the Inquirer and Courier, are thus to be joined.

In connection with the World, the name Pulitzer is likely to win further distinction, for unlike the other famous editors of New York, Pulitzer, Jr., has steadily planned for his son to succeed him in the conduct of the paper.

James Gordon Bennett forms the only parallel case. Here the son carries on the Herald, made famous by the father.

From boyhood Ralph Pulitzer has been trained with the idea of succeeding to the proprietorship of the World and in the five years that have elapsed since his graduation from Harvard, he has taken a considerable share of the burden from the shoulders of his father.

When the corner-stone of the present Pulitzer Building was laid, Ralph Pulitzer, then but a boy, took an active part in the ceremonies, and many will remember the eager-faced youth who, trowel in hand, took the first step toward identifying himself with his father's interests, and shared with him the glory of the fruition of the elder Pulitzer's dreams.

It is typical of the advance of the American spirit that the Vanderbilts, though they have progressed further into the social holy of holies, welcome the addition of the Pulitzers into their family circles. This is really only fitting when all the circumstances are taken into account, for the Vanderbilts only have the advantage of wealth over the Pulitzers by a couple of generations, and neither family boasts of an old line.

But it is often the case that those already numbered among the elect forget the days of their own climbing, and look askance at those not yet admitted.

The marriage of the young pair, whose destinies seem to have been bound together in the experiences of their forbears, will take place at Shelburne Farms, the big Vermont country place of Dr. and Mrs. Webb.

It will be in every sense of the word a country wedding, and the tenantry and hundreds of employés on the estate, most of whom have known the bride from childhood, will have an active part in the festivities organized for the occasion.

The Webbs will entertain a large house party in honor of the wedding of the daughter, at which the Vanderbilts will be conspicuously in evidence.

A sum of wealth will be represented in the combined holdings of that brilliant company, which would form a tidy fortune for any monarch of Europe. And yet only a few generations ago, both the ancestors of it, Vanderbilt and Pulitzer, were penniless and had to build all from nothing.

Mr. Pulitzer has known Miss Webb for about two years. He met her in the West, and her fine combination of talents, democracy and common sense soon won the regard of the young editor.

Miss Webb has ideals as to what wealth owes to the community, and her estimate of moneyed people is always based on what they do for that part of society that is less favored with wealth. Young Pulitzer finds these ideas fitting entirely with his own and those of his father, who has performed many acts of broadest and wisest charity in the most unostentatious way.

GERMAN DAY, THIS.

Will Celebrate the Founding of the First Settlements of This Nationality in America.

Today the Germans of Southern California will celebrate in Los Angeles with a grand "fest," the settlement of the German colonists in America. It is the two hundred and nineteenth anniversary of the location of William Penn, and his German compatriots in the Atlantic seaboard country.

A parade will be the feature of this morning at 10:30 o'clock, forming at Main and Seventh streets, and going north on Main to Court street; thence west to Spring, and on Spring to Ninth street, where it will disband. Cars will be taken for Chutes Park, where the celebration will be held.

The order of the parade will be as follows:

Police squad, Capt. Auble leading.

First division: Grand marshal, Otto Stinen; aids, E. R. Werdin, Tom Strohm, Louis Schwaebe, Jack Koebel, Herman Hauser, Louis Hauser, Fred Meyers, Charles Kern, O. R. Stoetzer, Jacob Schafer; Chiaffarelli's band; president of the German-American alliance, J. Blust, and aids, consisting of squadron of horsemen; officers of the German-American alliance in carriages; officers of the French colony in carriages; Arend's band, Turning Society Germania, active Turners, boys and girls' class, members of the society, ladies and members of the society in carriages; float representing Columbia greeting the German-Americans.

Second division: Marshal, Theodore Freise, with aids; Fidelia band, Maennerchor Fidelia, float of the Fidelia representing music; ladies of the Fidelia in tallyho, Helvetia society, Schwaben society, Baden's society, Saxony society, Plattdeutsche society, float representing "United we stand, divided we fall."

Third division: Marshal, W. Schmidt and aids; Los Angeles Military band, German Redmen lodge, German Warriors Herman Sons' lodge, ladies of lodge in carriages, Forester lodge, Court Germania; St. Joseph's society, float representing "A German home; German industry and art."

Fourth division: Marshal and aids, Anaheim band, Anaheim Turner society, German Ladies' Benevolent society, German Hospital society float representing "Liberty, Justice and History," carriages of German-American citizens.

At the park speeches will be made by Mayor McAleer, President Joseph Blust of the German-American Alliance, Isidore B. Dockweiler and Dr. Joseph Kurtz. Dr. Kurtz will speak in German.

The German-American Alliance is in charge of the arrangements for the celebration. Its officers are: President, Joseph Blust; first vice-president, E. Oder; second vice-president, Mrs. Y. Smith; recording secretary, N. Schwegel; corresponding secretary, C. Kalkenstein; financial secretary, R. Reasoner; treasurer, Louis Reeder.

AFFECTION FOR PASTOR.

Members of Boyle Heights Methodist Church Tender Reception and Make Handsome Gifts.

The friends of Rev. William M. Sterling, retiring pastor of the Boyle Heights Methodist Church, gave him and Mrs. Sterling and "Grandma" Drew a reception at the parsonage last night.

A party of several hundred gathered at the church, and went in a body to the parsonage, but the latter was so crowded that it was necessary to adjourn to the social rooms of the church.

Mrs. Reese, as spokesman for the crowd, presented to Mr. Sterling a handsome Morris chair, to Mrs. Sterling a handsome pedestal taboret and a silver meat fork, and to Grandma Drew several pieces of china.

A more formal address was delivered by Rev. J. M. Liscomb to which responses were made by both Mr. and Mrs. Sterling. The surprise was complete, as the elderly lady of the family was in the act of retiring for the night when the invaders took possession of the parsonage.

Much affection was shown for the retiring occupants of the manse, and the parting was characterized by deep feeling, particularly on the part of the young people present. Dr. Sterling took a supernumerary relation at the late conference, as has previously been published, but as yet has not announced where he will reside. He will preach his final sermons today.

MINES AND MINING.

INCREASE OF SIX MILLION.

Three Times as Much as in Previous Years.

Gold Output Three Millions More Than in 1903.

Petroleum is Second in Value, Copper Comes Third.

The State Mining Bureau has issued an advance sheet of the coming bulletin on the mineral products of California for 1904 in which the total value of these is given as $43,778,348, an increase of $6,919,298 over that of $37,759,040 for 1903. This is a greater increase than has been shown for many years past, the usual amount for the past ten years being about $2,000,000 a year. The largest increase for the year is in the gold output, which amounted to about $3,000,000 above the yield of 1903.

The total value of the metallic substances (including precious metals) for 1904 was $25,114,699, which includes gold, silver, pyrites, quicksilver, copper, lead, manganese, platinum and chrome. The silver is given in commercial value, or amount received for it by the producers. If given in coining value the amount would be nearly double.

The total value of non-metallic substances was $2,131,369. These substances include borax, coal, mineral waters, salt, infusorial earth, gypsum, magnesite, mineral paint, lithia-mica, fullers earth, mica, soda, tourmaline and other gems.

The total value of the hydrocarbons and gases was $9,257,434, an increase of $1,312,161. The hydrocarbons and gases include asphalt, bituminous rock natural gas and petroleum. The petroleum price is the average f. o. b. at wells or stations in each county. The number of barrels of oil produced was 29,736,003, valued at $8,317,809 as against 24,340,839 barrels in 1903, valued at $7,313,271. The increase in asphalt is also very large for the year, it now being made in the process of refining the California heavy oils.

The total value of structural materials was $7,274,846, an increase of $366,383 over the previous year. These materials include brick and pottery clays, Portland cement, lime and limestone, macadam, rubble and concrete rock, paving blocks, marble, granite, sandstone, serpentine, slate, glass sand and soapstone.

The relative value of the principal minerals of the State is as follows: First, gold; second, petroleum; third, copper; fourth, clays and their products; fifth, cement; sixth, rubble; seventh, quicksilver.

PRODUCTION BY COUNTIES.

The production of the various minerals and metals is divided among the several counties as follows:

Asbestos, El Dorado; asphalt, nearly all derived from oil, Kern, Fresno, Los Angeles, Monterey, San Benito, Santa Barbara and Ventura; brick clay, Alameda, Butte, Contra Costa, Colusa, Fresno, Humboldt, Kern, Kings, Los Angeles, Madera, Marin, Mendocino, Monterey, Orange, Riverside, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Diego, San Francisco, San Joaquin, San Mateo, Santa Barbara, Santa Clara, Shasta, Sonoma, Tehama, Tulare and Yuba; bituminous rock, Kern, San Benito, San Luis Obispo and Santa Cruz; borax, Inyo, San Bernardino and Ventura; pottery clay, Amador, Calaveras, Los Angeles, Placer, Riverside and Yuba; Portland cement, Los Angeles, Napa, San Bernardino and Solano; chrome, Calaveras and Shasta; coal, Alameda, Contra Costa, Monterey and Orange; copper, Amador, Calaveras, Fresno, Inyo, Madera, Mariposa, Merced, Placer, San Bernardino, Shasta and Stanislaus; fullers earth, Kern; glass sand, Amador, Los Angeles and Monterey; granite, for building and curbing, Madera, Nevada, Placer, Riverside, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Luis Obispo, San Diego, Tulare and Tuolumne; gypsum, Kern and Los Angeles; lithia mica, San Diego; lead, Inyo; infusorial earth, Santa Barbara; lime, Amador, Contra Costa, El Dorado, Kern, Los Angeles, Monterey, Mono, Riverside, San Bernardino, Santa Cruz, Shasta and Sonoma; limestone for beet-sugar factories, fluxes, paving, etc., Calaveras, Contra Costa, El Dorado, Kern, Monterey, Placer, San Bernardino and Santa Barbara; marble, Amador, Inyo, Riverside, San Bernardino and Tuolumne; macadam, Alameda, Contra Costa, Los Angeles, Napa, Riverside, Sacramento, San Benito, San Bernardino, San Francisco, San Mateo, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, Solano and Sonoma; mica, Ventura; mineral paint, Calaveras and Stanislaus; manganese, Alameda; magnesite, Fresno, Napa and Tulare; mineral waters, Butte, Colusa, Contra Costa, Fresno, Lake, Los Angeles, Mendocino, Monterey, Napa, Santa Barbara, Santa Clara, San Luis Obispo, Siskiyou, Solano and Sonoma; natural gas (commercially utilized) Sacramento, San Joaquin, Santa Barbara and Ventura; paving blocks, Riverside, San Bernardino, Solano and Sonoma; petroleum, Fresno, Kern, Los Angeles, Orange, Santa Barbara, Santa Clara, San Mateo and Ventura; platinum (in small quantities) Butte, Del Norte, Humboldt, Placer, Siskiyou, Stanislaus and Trinity; pyrites, Alameda; quicksilver, Colusa, Lake, Napa, San Benito, San Luis Obispo, Santa Clara, Solano, Sonoma and Trinity; rubble, Alameda, Colusa, Contra Costa, Los Angeles, Madera, Marin, Napa, Placer, Riverside, San Bernardino, Sacramento, San Diego, San Luis Obispo, San Mateo, Solano, Sonoma, San Francisco, Santa Cruz and Ventura; salt, Alameda, Colusa, Inyo, Los Angeles, Riverside and San Mateo; sandstone, Colusa, Los Angeles, Orange, San Bernardino, Santa Clara, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Ventura and Yolo; serpentine and soapstone, Los Angeles; slate, El Dorado; tourmaline and other gems (including hyacinth, beryl, topaz and kunzite) San Diego.

Gold was mined in thirty-four counties and silver in twenty-five out of a total of over fifty counties in the State. The names are not specified in the advance sheet.

LETTERS TO THE TIMES.

[The Times freely publishes the views of correspondents without holding itself responsible for writers' opinions. Be brief, write plainly, state clearly. Right on One Point.

LOS ANGELES, October 7. [To the Editor of The Times] Your editorial in The Times of October 6, entitled "Right on One Point," goes to the seat of a disease which has heretofore been incorrectly diagnosed by newspaper doctors of politics.

The average editorial denouncing the so-called legislative lobby betrays the disposition of the policeman to arrest and punish the wrong man. While a person who is held up by a highwayman ought, probably, to make a fight, the fact is that he does not, and the public generally concede that he shows the better part of valor by his discretion. Now and then a resident has lost his life and been called a fool therefor. So, also, where two or three train robbers make as many hundred passengers stand and deliver, nobody criticises their humility.

It is easy enough to say that insurance companies and other large interests whose financial welfare or very existence is regularly assailed by "cinch" bills in legislatures should take a noble and patriotic stand together and beat the graft; but as in the case of the railway passengers, it has never been found practical to secure a unity of effort. Human nature is about the same everywhere, and those whose property or persons are attacked by bandits will usually be governed by fear and the instinct of self-preservation as much as by large moral views. This is why even the high and mighty newspapers, which talk grandiloquently against every sort of abasement but their own, submit like spaniels to union-labor domination. Every one in California but the Los Angeles Times, and nearly every one in the United States is a groveller. And yet, to read their remarks about the duty of others one would think that they really own their souls.

It is not the legislative lobby against which the editorial writer should fulminate, but it is the condition which makes the lobby a seeming necessity. Most of the legislative lobbies are defensive and not offensive. Those who maintain them would gladly be rid of the trouble and expense, most of which would cease if the people would send to the Legislature the right kind of representatives.

In your editorial you put your pen exactly on the ulcer and designated the very point where the medicine should be applied.

Malta-Vita

"The Perfect Food"

Some food is good to eat but not healthful. Other food is healthful but not good to eat—Malta-Vita is both healthful and good to eat. It is all of the wheat and contains every element necessary to the sustenance of the human body. It develops and nourishes the brain, the nerves, the bones, the muscle and the blood. It fills all the requirements of a food and it is so fresh and crisp that it is just the best you ever tasted. It is absolutely pure grain and contains no foreign sweetening substance. Physicians recommend it as the most healthful food known. It's always ready to eat. At all grocers.

LETTERS OF PRAISE

Are being sent us almost every day. They come from people in all walks of life, including many prominent doctors and druggists. These people, having been cured by the Bitters, feel so grateful that they give their endorsement voluntarily, which is the best recommendation any medicine can have. Read their letters and get some idea of what this wonderful medicine has done and what you may expect it to do for you, too.

MR. W. C. JOHNSON, FRANKLIN, KY., says: "For several years I suffered with Indigestion, Bloating and other Stomach troubles without obtaining relief. My family doctor recommended your Bitters, and from the first dose found relief. I am now entirely cured, and heartily recommend it to all sufferers."

MRS. H. CHAPMAN, CINCINNATI, O., says: "Your Bitters saved me from undergoing an operation for my stomach and back. I was bed-fast for a long time, but after taking your Bitters my trouble began to disappear, and now I believe I am entirely well."

DR. FRANK HOGAN, BROOKLYN, N. Y., says: "Your Bitters has been prescribed by me for 25 years. I cheerfully recommend it as a first-class tonic, to restore the appetite and to cure stomach troubles."

MRS. M. FICHTER, JORDAN, MINN., says: "I have used your Stomach Bitters, and know from experience that it will do all you claim for it."

MR. E. H. SHAWAN, WHEELING, W. VA., says: "I have used your Bitters for Indigestion, Dyspepsia and other Stomach Troubles, and it cured me, even after doctors had failed. I willingly endorse it."

MR. G. W. HERZBERG, CHICAGO, ILL., says: "Your Stomach Bitters is without doubt the best for all stomach troubles. I tried many of them, but yours was the only one to effect a cure."

MR. H. I. GOODWIN, BOSTON, MASS., says: "For over four years I suffered from Stomach Troubles and Indigestion. I was unable to eat anything without being distressed. A friend, who had also been cured by your Bitters, recommended it to me, and after taking one bottle I noticed a great improvement. I am now entirely well, and desire to thank you."

The above letters ought to convince the most skeptical that they, too, can be cured and that for making the sick well and hearty and keeping them so there's no medicine before the public equal to the celebrated

HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.
The genuine is sold only in bottles like the above, and has our Private Stamp over the neck.

ANOTHER FACT.

As further proof of its merit we wish to remind you that it has stood the severe test of public approval for over 50 years and has established a record of cures of Stomach, Liver, Kidney and Bowel Troubles far in excess of any other remedy. It is the medicine you need and one bottle will convince you that this is the truth. Get it to-day from your Druggist and you'll be just as thankful as those mentioned above.

INSIST ON HAVING HOSTETTER'S.

THE BITTERS WILL POSITIVELY restore the appetite, assist the stomach in its work of digestion, keep the liver active and bowels open, also cure Flatulency, Heartburn, Indigestion, Bloating, Costiveness, Dyspepsia, Sour Risings, Chills, Colds, General Debility and Malaria, Fever and Ague.

Women and girls are also greatly benefited by taking the Bitters. It cures Monthly Irregularities, Cramps, Nausea, Headache, Backache, Insomnia, Dizziness and Fainting Spells.

Gathering of Delegates from Many Parts of the United States Here on Wednesday.

The tenth general assembly of the Church of th Nazarene will convene in the First Church of the Nazarene in this city, Sixth and Wall streets, Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock.

This assemblage will represent the various churches of the denomination in many parts of the United States. The church was founded in Los Angeles.

The Church of the Nazarene stands for the old-time doctrine of "sanctification," and it believes in a salvation which saves from the commission of sin. Because of its earnestness and simplicity it appeals to the people, and has had a wonderful growth in the past eight years.

Dr. Phineas F. Bresee is the general superintendent. He has lately returned from Chicago, where he organized the central district assembly. He also organized a church at Kewanee, Ill., and held camp meetings at Lewiston, Ill., and Howard, Kan.

The assembly which is to meet this week, will continue three days. It will be the most important of any ever held in the history of the church. Following the assembly will begin the annual home camp meeting, and many of the delegates will remain in Los Angeles for this event.

The camp meeting will continue for ten days, and among the ministers who will take part are Rev. J. G. Martin of Chicago, Rev. H. D. Brown of Seattle, Rev. R. Pierce of Oakland, Rev. L. B. Kent of Jacksonville, Ill.; Rev. P. G. Linaweaver of Berkeley and many others well known in the church work.

The musical feature will be of much interest at these meetings. The assembly and camp meeting will use for the first time the new song book issued by the Church of the Nazarene.

On Sunday, October 15, the tenth anniversary of the organization of the First Church of the Nazarene will be observed with a rally at this church. At this meeting a free-will offering will be taken to complete the payment of the tabernacle from which all the other churches of the Nazarene have sprung.

SPLENDID PROCEEDS.

Italian Benefit Turns Out More Profitably Than Was Anticipated—King Victor Emanuel Cabled.

The net proceeds of the Italian benefit concert given at Simpson Auditorium on Friday evening have proven much greater than the promoters anticipated. In all, nearly $1500 will be available to send to the province of Calabria, Italy, and the entire amount will be forwarded within two or three days.

Last night the following cablegram, signed by Mrs. Ida Hellman and Benedict Castruccio, was sent to King Victor Emanuel: "Majesty, our help will reach victims horrible disaster Calabre in a few days."

Italian people throughout Southern California have been interested in this movement.

[NEWS REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.]

DYNAMITE FOR PLOWING LAND.

SAN BERNARDINO FINDS THAT IS REDLANDS FACT.

Suit Filed Against Woman to Induce Payment for the Blowing of Holes in Her Orchard—Administrator's Claims Exceed Estate of Man Who Died Lonely Death.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN BARNARDINO, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Over in Redlands some people use dynamite instead of plows to loosen soil in their orchards. This fact came to light today in a suit filed by E. A. Bethrum against Mary E. Rousch for $88.75 for balance alleged to be due for dynamiting the defendant's orchard. The complaint sets forth that the plaintiff contracted to loosen the orchard for 75 cents for each hole drilled and that he drilled, loaded and discharged 285 holes before the orchard was sufficiently loosened to be plowed and trees planted.

FEES BIGGER THAN ESTATE.

A claim of $450 for administrator's services in caring for an estate valued, according to the administrator, at $325 was the peculiar item which gave Judge B. F. Bledsoe a start in the Superior Court this morning. The estate is that of the late Col. John N. Doyle, who died a tragic death in his lonely cabin in Sycamore Cañon last spring. The administrator is George R. Jones.

It appears that the estate, as appraised, is valued at $2500, the largest item consisting of 160 acres, 60 of which is set out to a bearing vineyard. This land is in the forest reserve, but Doyle had taken the preliminary steps to secure his first homestead papers on it when he died. Before that it was occupied by Mrs. James Wilson, who made all the improvements which are now on the land.

On the stand this morning, when Jones was proving his final report and account as special administrator, he testified concerning a claim of Mrs. Wilson to the property, she having recently notified him by mail that the ranch was hers. He accepted her word for it, and when the court directed him to specify just what part of the estate belonged to Doyle, the schedule he gave showed articles of the total value of $325, and upon this showing the court cut down the amount of the claim for services rendered.

Judge C. N. Damron, acting for the Public Administrator, filed a petition from Archie Doyle, brother of the late Col. Doyle, asking that the letters of administration issued be revoked. This petition will come up for hearing next week.

CHEMICAL WORKS BURNS.

The Woodbridge Chemical Works southeast of town were completely destroyed by fire this afternoon involving a loss of $10,000. The fire originated from a defective pipe leading from an immense tank of crude oil to the engine. The tank exploded with a roar that was heard for a great distance, completely saturating the frame building with oil. The plant was owned by T. A. Blakeley of Redlands, Dr. S. M. Woodbridge of Pasadena, and several local capitalists. It will be rebuilt. One man was painfully burned.

SAN BERNARDINO BRIEFS.

W. J. Cook, formerly at the County Hospital, was brought to the County Jail last night from Chino to serve ninety days for disturbing the peace. He had been originally arrested for robbery, but the complaining witness being absent when the preliminary hearing was held, the court agreed to accept a plea of guilty to the lesser offense.

David Porter, a resident of Colton, today secured a divorce from Rose Porter, known at Los Angeles as "the dizzy blonde," who has figured in several notorious suits.

The inquest over the remains of Frank A. Smith, who committed suicide here Thursday afternoon by taking carbolic acid, was held this morning. The local fraternal orders, which are caring for the body today, received a dispatch from the Masonic Burial Association of Newton Kan., directing that the remains be embalmed and held for further instructions.

REDLANDS.

WING FOR HOSPITAL.

REDLANDS, Oct. 7.—Ground has just been broken for the new east wing of the Southern California State Hospital building at Patton, which is being built by Taylor Brothers of this city. The estimated cost of the new addition is about $65,000. The central ward building is to be completed this month. At a meeting of the directors held last night the contract for the electric work was let to a Los Angeles firm for $1186. According to a report from the medical superintendent, the month of September was the lightest of the year so far as receiving patients was concerned. Only thirteen were received during the month.

NEW ELECTRIC OFFICERS.

A general shakeup has taken place in the management of the Redlands Gas Company. All officers with the exception of one placed their resignations before a meeting of the directors, and a new body was elected. George B. Ellis, who was president since the organization of the company, resigned and John B. Miller, president of the Edison Electric Company, was named in his stead. Halsey W. Allen vacated the position of secretary and it was promptly filled by W. L. Percey, while the First National Bank will no longer be treasurer; R. H. Ballard has the position. F. P. Morrison as director and vice-president and Henry Fisher as director, were the only ones who did not resign.

REDLANDS BRIEFS.

Mrs. Mae Henry, proprietress of the Bear Valley Hotel, who was recently arrested on the charge of having 215 mountain trout in her possession, has pleaded guilty to the charge and been assessed a fine of $20 by Justice Gifford of this city. The warrant was issued upon complaint of Deputy State Game Warden, H. I. Pritchard of Santa Monica, who found two jars of the fish in Mrs. Henry's home a few weeks ago. She first pleaded not guilty to the charge.

Today is Rally Day at the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, First Methodist Episcopal Church and the Congregational Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Jeffrey, who have been on a five months tour of the European countries, have returned and will remain in Redlands for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Montgomery, formerly Redlands people, and owners of the Baker House at one time, have disposed of the Los Angeles hotel business and have returned to Redlands to reside.

Walter J. Hartzell, the youth who was seriously injured at Claremont while erecting a class banner recently, is being brought home today. For three weeks he has been unable to leave his bed.

The G.A.R. and Woman's Relief Corps members are planning for a picnic to be held at Urbita Springs, October 11. The Pioneers, Sons of Veterans, Spanish-War Veterans and Confederate Veterans will also be in attendance.

COLTON.

HIGH SCHOOL DEBAES.

COLTON, Oct. 7.—At the Colton High School this afternoon there was a meeting of the High School Debating League of Riverside and San Bernardino counties, two delegates from each school being present. Schools were elected to fill the following offices during the ensuing term: President, Riverside High School; vice-president, San Bernardino; secretary, Redlands; treasurer, Ontario.

The first league debate will be held December 1. The schools will debate as follows: Riverside vs. Redlands; Ontario vs. San Bernardino; Corona vs. Chino; Perris vs. Hemet.

The question is: "Resolved that the granting of ship subsidies would be to the least interest of the United States."

Chino has just entered the league this year. Elsinore High School, also may take part in the debates. Perris and Hemet may drop out of the contest. Colton will not be a contestant this term.

BRIEFS OF A DAY.

Frank P. Carson yesterday let to J. W. Carroll a contract for the erection of the big packing-house to be constructed along the line of the Santa Fé near Fay's packing-house, by the Independent Fruit Company. The cost will be in the neighborhood of $2760 and, according to present plans, it will be completed by November 1.

One of the society events of the season was an "At Home" given last evening in the Masonic Hall by Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Brooks and Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Morris. There were about 150 guests.

HIGHLAND.

PLANT TREES AMONG ORANGES.

HIGHLAND, Oct. 7.—Highland orange growers are planting peas between the rows of trees, the vines to be plowed under later on and used for fertilizer. The grower plants from 50 to 100 pounds to the acre according to the nature of the soil. The seed costs about 3 cents per pound, but the necessity for this vegetable in the raising of oranges, during the past few years, has become more pronounced.

GOING FOR DUCKS.

A large number of Highland people will leave next week for Bear Valley to shoot ducks. A plentiful supply is reported. Gus Knight left Friday and D. R. Seeley and George Parsons will soon follow, to be on hand when the season opens, October 15. John Ellsworth, Percy Rogers and Elmer Ellsworth have made a canvas canoe to take with them to Bear Valley Lake in order to get out among the birds. They will leave the first of the week.

NOTES OF NEWS.

The first weekly dance of the season was held last Friday evening at the State Hospital at Patton and was well attended. These affairs are for the benefit of the patients, who are permitted to take part in the "square" dances only.

R. H. Swinney has been awarded the contract by the Arrowhead Reservoir Company for fourteen miles of new mountain road in the vicinity of the big reservoir under construction at Little Bear Valley. The work will cost about $15,000.

The directors of the Highland Well Water Company have levied an assessment of $3 per share upon the capital stock of the corporation.

The Highland Domestic Water Company have moved into its new offices on Main street.

The marriage of Miss Pearl Gleason and E. A. Norwood occurred on Wednesday at San Bernardino. Both are well-known young people of Highland, where they have lived for a number of years.

The Women's Pleasant Hour Club will hold the opening meeting for the year October 13, at the home of Mrs. D. C. Randall on Palm avenue. Mrs. C. F. La Follette will read a paper on "Wild Flowers of California." Mrs. G. W. Madden will talk of "Birds of California" and Mrs. F. Wood will take for her subject, "Minerals and Ferns of California," by current events at roll call.

ONTARIO.

CHEAP POWER ATTRACTS.

ONTARIO, Oct. 7.—The unique plan of Ontario to build up the town by furnishing power at extremely low rates to manufacturers and others has attracted two concerns, one of which is a woolen mill, entirely new here, while the other is an established electric heating company which is about to double its capacity. The promotion of other industries is being negotiated, with excellent prospects of success.

Large power rights owned by citizens under the name of the Ontario Power Company practically are under municipal ownership, for the Ontario Power Company is a sub-company of the San Antonio Water Company, which consists of all the irrigators and water users of Ontario.

At the power plant of the company, near the mouth of San Antonio Cañon, over eleven hundred electric horse power has been generated from the waters of San Antonio Creek during the present summer. This may be more than doubled during the rainy season.

During the past three years all surplus power from this plant has been sent over the wires to Los Angeles at a merely nominal price.

Now, largely through the work and influence of the Ontario Chamber of Commerce, a special effort is being made to utilize this power for the building up of the city and community on a good commercial basis by practically donating its use for a number of years to desirable manufacturing industries which will agree to establish plants here.

Charles Wondries, an eastern capitalist and manufacturer, has just purchased the large brick building, known as the A.O.U.W. Hall, at the southeast corner of Euclid avenue and Main street, and will build a three-story addition to it, extending down Euclid avenue to the Salt Lake Railway right of way. He is now organizing the Ontario Woollen Mills Company which will employ from seventy-five to one hundred hands and occupy the building above referred to.

The Pacific Electric Heating Company is also preparing to take advantage of this cheap power proposition; this company has been operating here for the past year, employing about twenty-five hands in the manufacture of electric laundry irons and other electric heating and cooking devices. It is proposed to immediately double the capacity of the plant and increase the number of employés to fifty or sixty.

REAL ESTATE ON THE MOVE.

The stir in manufacturing interests is having a marked influence on real estate. Cheaper properties are being rapidly bought up, many thousands of dollars worth of property having changed hands recently.

The Magnolia Villa Hotel built near the Santa Fé depot in 1887 has been sold for $7000 and is being pulled down. Several handsome dwelling houses are to be erected in its place.

HOME 'PHONE FRANCHISE.

A franchise for the installing of a telephone system in Ontario has been advertised for sale on Tuesday, October 10 by the City Trustees and there is likely to be considerable competition in bidding for it. Today, D. B. Wynne, president of the City National Bank of Norman, Okla., and J. A. Fletcher, a telephone manager from the East, were in town looking up the subject and are likely to be in on the bidding.

HANDSOME SIGN.

A handsome sign board, reading "Ontario, elevation 100 to 2500 feet, Population 4500, Electric Cars to mountains seven miles" has been erected by the City Trustees at the foot of Euclid avenue, facing the tracks of the Southern Pacific and the Salt Lake Railways.

ELSINORE.

PERSONAL NOTES.

ELSINORE, Oct. 7.—Among guests registered at the Hot Springs Hotel are Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Smith, Los Angeles; Dr. Daniel S. Smith, Long Beach; H. P. Walton, Redlands; J. F. Titley, Lamanda; W. G. Mingus and wife, West Branch, Iowa; E. J. Bartlett, Los Angeles; A. M. Lobaugh and wife, Long Beach.

Chesney Clark arrived from Los Angeles yesterday to visit his parents.

Robert Cline is here visiting his parents.

SANTA ANA.

LIQUOR DRUMMER FINED.

SANTA ANA, Oct. 7.—F. H. Norman, a Los Angeles liquor drummer, paid a fine of $40 in the City Recorder's court this morning for violation of the city prohibition ordinance. The law provides that any one soliciting or taking orders for spirituous liquors for use within the city shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Norman pleaded guilty and paid the fine. It is stated that this is but one of many similar cases, and officers expect to subject them to the strict letter of the ordinance in future.

COUNTY SEAT NOTES.

Mrs. Margaret Day Taylor, a well-known resident, has received notice from the Auditor of Morrison county, Minn., that she is heir to considerable realty there, held in the name of her deceased husband. Although Mr. Taylor died more than three years ago and his estate was probated and final decree of distribution of property issued, Mrs. Taylor know nothing of the existence of the realty until she received the notice today.

Two hundred feet of residence property on North Main street, on the west side just below Seventeenth street, has been sold by E. M. Smiley to A. J. Visel and C. F. Heil of this city. The reported consideration is $6000.

Miss Cecelia Graham, aged 16 years, was caught by the arm in machinery at the Santa Ana Steam Laundry today, the forearm being broken and bruised.

The local association of Rebekah Veterans held their monthly session yesterday at the home of Mrs. Mattie Titchey on McFadden street.

Rev. A. H. Carmen will occupy the pulpit of the Immanuel Baptist Church tomorrow morning.

About one hundred participated in a masquerade ball, given at Spurgeon's Hall yesterday evening by the younger set.

Committees of the Chamber of Commerce and the Santa Ana Realty Board will meet in joint session Thursday evening next to make preliminary arrangements for the celebration in commemoration of the arrival of the Pacific Electric road in this city. The project has been taken up by the Chamber of Commerce, which has appointed thirty-seven of its members to act as planners of the affair. A barbecue and automobile rides will be features of the day.

ANAHEIM.

NEW BANK BUILDING.

ANAHEIM, Oct. 7.—The newly formed German-American Bank closed a contract today with Mrs. N. H. Mitchell of Pasadena to erect a neat building, with plate glass front, on Center street, between the present Mitchell block and the Odd Fellows' building. The new banking room will have a frontage of forty feet and will extend back fifty feet. The paid up capital stock of the new bank was fixed originally at $25,000 but has been increased to $30,000.

The local cannery shipped a car of canned goods East yesterday.

Th Odd Fellows and Rebekahs are transferring their headquarters today to the new Odd Fellows' block.

Norwalk Circle Women of Woodcraft will visit Anaheim lodge next Wednesday night.

Miss Louise Thoemke and Fritz Gruenemay were married at the home of the bride's parents Thursday, and Manuel Ortega and Miss Francisca Feliz were also married at the home of the bride on Clementine street.

RIVERSIDE.

HALF-BREED VANISHES.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

RIVERSIDE, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Charles Beard, whose trial for assault of thirteen-year-old Ida Penprase is set for Monday, has disappeared, and Sheriff Coburn has sent a general alarm for his apprehension. He was out on $1000 bail. Should he fail to appear for trial on Monday, Beard will be the first man to break a bail bond in Riverside county.

This case has been a series of sensational surprises. Beard was arrested upon the complaint of Mrs. Louise Penprase of Casa Blanca. After his preliminary hearing, Mrs. Penprase offered herself and property as his security. Dist.-Atty. Evans said that public decency would not permit such a travesty of justice. Later the man secured bail through two of Mrs. Penprase's neighbors.

The girl was taken from the custody of the mother and placed with her married sister, Mrs. Henry Lague, of Highgrove. Mrs. Penprase then sought to get the girl under her influence again through habeas corpus proceedings before Judge Oster of San Bernardino county. The writ was refused.

Beard is about 31 years old and of very dark complexion. He has a fresh scar on his forehead, from the hair to the right eye. He is a half-breed Indian, although he looks like a white man.

AFTER THE ORANGES.

To handle the coming citrus crop, President E. P. Fay and Vice-president A. Gregory of the California Citrus Union were in the city yesterday looking after the interests of the organization. The firm of Moulton and Creen has been added to the union from which it was reported to have withdrawn. The union has established an office at Riverside, with W. O. Randolph as general manager of the district.

CORONA.

HOME GETS FRANCHISE.

CORONA, Oct. 7.—The City Trustees last evening sold a telephone franchise to A. C. Wood for $125, with bond fixed at $500. Wood, who was the only bidder, represents the local Home Telephone Company, which will soon incorporate with $25,000 capital stock. The incorporators will be F. A. Perkins, A. C. Wood, H. A. Prizer, J. C. Gleason and John P. Triolo.

The trustees voted to deny the application for the sale of an electric light and power franchise made several weeks ago by John Morton of Los Angeles who is generally believed to represent the Edison Electric Company. Morton is preparing a second application.

Trustee William Corkhill has been appointed to secure an expert to investigate the actual value of the Corona Gas and Electric Company's plant, upon which the city has an option.

The close of the first month of school shows an attendance of 397 as against 358 pupils for the same time last year. The High School had fifty last year while the present attendance is seventy.

Barth and Mac Gillivray of Corona will install a gas plant in Long Beach which will be the sixth plant this firm has placed in less than six months.

Miss Louisa Daniels is reported critically ill at the home of her parents, at Temescal.

Frank Perkins has gone to the Masonic Grand Lodge in San Francisco as a delegate from the local lodge.

E. C. Slaten left today for a two months' absence in Porterville, where he will act as foreman of the California Citrus Union's packing-house.

Mrs. A. M. Kimbell of Los Angeles, who purchased the Garfield ranch in the foothills, will erect a bungalow on the property.

Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Tucker have returned from several weeks' stay in Elsinore.

Mrs. Nellie Glass, who is visiting in Portland, is detained there by illness.

SANTA PAULA.

SENIORS OUT OF SIGHT.

SANTA PAULA, Oct. 7.—The "Senior hunt" of the High School was held last evening, the class hiding away so safely that the junior class was unable to find them after a search of an hour and a half. The seniors will be treated to a Halloween party at the expense of the juniors.

Mrs. D. H. Miller of Gridley, is visiting her brother, J. W. Turner, who is seriously ill.

M. V. Hatcher who was injured in a runaway accident a few days ago, is rapidly improving.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Teague returned from the North yesterday.

[NEWS REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.]

CHARGES WIFE WITH CRUELTY.

PASADENA HUSBAND'S PLAINT IN SEEKING DIVORCE.

Theodore Gittings Applies for Separation from Young Helpmeet—Water Company of Northern Suburb to Vote on Sale of Plant to City—The Shakespeare Club in New Home.

PASADENA, Office of The Times, No. 26 South Raymond avenue, Oct. 8.—Complaint was filed and legal papers were served, yesterday, in the divorce brought by Theodore Gittings against Edith M. Gittings, both of Pasadena. On account of the wide acquaintance of both the case is attracting considerable attention. It seems another case of the usually disastrous attempt to unite December and May. Gittings is sixty-one and his wife is twenty-three—she was but eighteen when she married him.

Cruelty is the charge in the complaint.

Theodore Gittings has been connected with the management of Hotel Green for the past twelve years. He is chief clerk at the great Pasadena hostelry, and each summer goes to Asbury Park, N. J., where he assumes the position at the Hotel Brunswick. Mrs. Gittings is a member of a prominent family of Jackson, Mich., but has no relatives in California. Her father died a short time ago, but her mother still resides at the old Jackson home.

Gittings was an old friend of the family, and when she was only eighteen years of age she was induced to marry him. It was the same old story. Almost from the first there was friction and incompatibility. During these five years of married life the couple have lived together under more or less strain. There was born to the union a son, who is now [illegible] years old. Both parents are very fond of the little fellow, but even this could not overcome the difference in temperament.

Two weeks ago Gittings returned from his annual visit to Asbury Park. During that period Mrs. Gittings had decided to make her home in Pasadena and there were only conferences in the presence of witnesses. It seems to have been understood that a crisis would occur upon his return, and Mrs. Gittings was not surprised, yesterday, when the papers were served upon her.

"It is simply a case of incompatibility," declared Mrs. Gittings, yesterday afternoon. "I shall not appear, and the case may go by default. Mr. Gittings cares nothing for me, and the sooner and more quietly the matter is ended the better.

"I shall not ask alimony. I have sufficient means of my own to live upon, and the idea of taking his money would be utterly repugnant to me. I expect to return to my mother in Michigan. Yes, of course, I expect to keep my child. That is the only thing I would fight for; but I do not think Mr. Gittings would attempt to take him from me.

"I suppose girls never will learn wisdom. There is always trouble when there is such disparity in ages; but, of course, in my case I thought it would be different. There is absolutely no charge either in the complaint or personally by Mr. Gittings, except that of cruelty. Of course, I mean mental cruelty. I don't think anyone will think I have been guilty of pounding him."

On account of his position at Hotel Green Mr. Gittings has an acquaintance extending all over the United States. His wife has been a favorite in Pasadena circles, and is well known, being a musician of merit and a brilliant conversationalist.

VOTE ON SALE OF PLANT.

The vote of the stockholders of the North Pasadena Land & Water Company on Monday on the question of selling their plant to the city for $80,-[illegible] will settle one of the fiercest contentions which has ever been waged in the councils of a local corporation. Charges of mismanagement have been freely made, and counter-charges of [illegible] have been flung back at the [illegible] directors and stockholders. The company's secretary, D. W. Lewis, is said to be the central figure in the fight, and one faction of the directorate, headed by Thomas Stone, accuses Secretary Lewis of attempting to "dicker" and to coerce holders of stock into voting for the transfer when they, [illegible]ties," believe the city's figure is too low.

[illegible] will be held at the company's office on North Fair Oaks avenue.

SALARY HELD UP.

[illegible] the various warrants drawn on the City Treasury to pay city officials their salaries reached the [illegible] yesterday, one was found to [illegible]. It was Treasurer Munson's warrant. He hastened before Auditor Karnaghan and found that, under the ruling of City Attorney Fitzgerald, the Auditor was obliged to hold up the Treasurer's pay for the reason that Mr. Munson has failed to make a report of the moneys received through his official capacity. Munson claims that the city charter requires no monthly report from his office. He will take up the matter with the Council next Tuesday.

REAL ESTATE ACTIVITY.

It is announced that Senator Stephen [illegible]'s plan to subdivide several [illegible] acres of ground occupying the [illegible] mesa into high class residence lots, is about to be realized, and the property will be placed upon the market soon. Purchases completed for the syndicate include nearly all [illegible] used to be termed the Grogan [illegible] and embrace practically all of the [illegible] lying between East Pasadena and the mountains.

[illegible] syndicate, headed by John B. [illegible], and other prominent local capitalists, has been organized for the purpose of assisting persons of moderate means to build homes, somewhat upon the [illegible] plan. This latest capitalistic concern will confine its operations to Los Angeles and Pasadena.

[illegible] of acreage at Altadena last [illegible] was made by Theodore Kretchmer, who sold to Mrs. Nettie A. Dewey of this city the six acres at Marengo and Highland road, for a consideration given as $3000. The sale was made for Mrs. J. C. Vaughan, a resident of Chicago. It is the new owner's [illegible] to build a bungalow and otherwise improve her purchase.

DEDICATE CLUBHOUSE.

[illegible] three hundred members of the Shakespeare Club gathered yesterday at their beautiful new clubhouse for the first meeting of the year, and to dedicate the new club [illegible]. Dainty fall costumes and fetching hats added glowing bits of [illegible] to the handsome reception room, [illegible] informal reception preceding the programme was held. Here the [illegible] of the club proper and the clubhouse association received the de[illegible], many of whom had not seen the building during the three months of its erection.

Later the formal dedicatory ceremonies set the entire building apart to the educational, philanthropic, civic and social work of the club, which includes in its membership close to four hundred of the leading women of the city. Rev. Malcolm James McLeod offered prayer. Mrs. Emily P. Webb, poet laureate of the club, read an original poem written for the occasion, and Miss Anna L. Meeker, as president of the Club House Association, with the keys of the building in her hand, recited the meanings of the word "key," and the many things of which it is the symbol. In closing Miss Meeker gave credit to the chairmen of the committees which had worked so faithfully to secure the new home for the club, Mrs. Ellen B. Farr of the Building Committee, and Mrs. Frank Welles Parker of both the Subscription and the Furnishing committees.

In the name of the club, Mrs. W. D. Turner responded happily, and then gave her annual president's address. Mrs. Minnie Porter Baldwin closed the programme with a solo, accompanied by Mrs. Charles Henry Stearns, with a violin obligato by Mrs. Guy Bliss.

Refreshments were served in the tea room by a committee consisting of Miss Mary Gates, Mrs. Fred Austin, Mrs. Edmund Barry, Mrs. Samuel Sanborn and Mrs. Alice B. Fuller.

Of the bungalow type of architecture the large, low building on South Los Robles avenue, is from the outside, attractive and pleasing in its strong lines and brown tints. The shingled sides are stained a shade darker than the natural color of the wood, with dark trimmings, and the roof is a moss green. Heavy square buttresses at each corner of the front and at the porte cochere give an added touch of dignity to the whole.

But the almost perfect arrangements and harmonious colorings of the interior promise to be constant joy to the clubwomen. The large auditorium is well lighted, without glare, is thoroughly ventilated by a double row of windows high above the possibility of draught on the audience. Here, as throughout the house, the heavy overhead beams and the finishing woodwork are in weathered oak stain, with the walls delicately tinted. The stage is sufficiently large for a moderate-sized orchestra, and the fine grand Chickering piano, which has just been purchased.

Two large rooms for social uses are at the front end of the building, separated from the auditorium by a broad hall, the cosy and convenient kitchen and ample dressing-rooms. The reception room is the larger of the two and is handsomely furnished with hangings and rugs of olive green, easy chairs in mission style and several fine paintings. The tea room, where refreshments are served, is similar in furnishings to the reception room, but is simpler. A number of gifts from club members, among them being a tall mission clock, several pictures and the stage furnishings, added to the beauty and effectiveness of the whole.

It was but three months ago that the corner-stone of this clubhouse was laid.

LESSER MENTION.

President E. D. Neff of the Tournament of Roses Association, urges all citizens to save their flowers, and get them in shape for New Year's Day, as the demand this year bids fair to become greater than ever before. Mr. Neff has received assurance that more than the usual number vehicles will enter the floral parade, thus creating the extra demand for blossoms. By properly caring for plants at this time an abundance of flowers will be available for the occasion.

Police Judge Wood yesterday rid the city of a nuisance in the shape of William Boyd, a crippled beggar, who was found on Colorado street late at night by Policeman O'Dell. Boyd was drunk, and when he pleaded guilty Judge Wood told him to get out of town as quickly as possible.

Policeman J. O. Reynolds, who was kicked in the abdomen by a fractious colt a few days ago, was able to be out yesterday.

Among the prominent visitors to Pasadena last week were former Congressman John T. Heard of Missouri, accompanied by Mrs. Heard. They are making a tour of Southern California. Another visitor, who is prominent in fraternal circles, is H. E. Don Carlos of Kansas City, who is president of the Fraternal Aid Association.

Dr. and Mrs. J. F. Chaffee have returned from a two months' visit with friends in Minneapolis.

Mrs. LaMotte Holmes and daughter, Mrs. William Tompkins of No. 325 Madaline Drive, have returned from Boston.

I. J. Reynolds and his "Minute Men" of the First Methodist Episcopal Church will have charge of the services at the Y.M.C.A. this afternoon.

Miss Emily Wheeler, noted in missionary circles, who was a visitor at the recent Congregational Association, will deliver an address before the Endeavor Society of the First Congregational Church at 6:30 this evening, and at 7:30 o'clock she will talk on the recent massacres in Armenia, at the Lake Avenue Congregational Church.

Henry J. Kramer will form a juvenile beginners' dancing class Saturday morning, October 14 at 9:45. Adult beginners' class Friday evening, October 13 at 7:45. References required. Elks' Hall.

LONG BEACH.

BULKHEAD IS PLANNED.

LONG BEACH, Oct. 7.—Residents of Long Beach residing along the bluff east of Alamitos avenue contemplate the erection of a bulkhead beginning at the Alamitos bath-house and extending east as far as there are any residences on the bluff. The idea is to build the bulkhead even with the mean high tide line, and to fill in the space north of this with soil and sow it in grass and mosses. The idea carries with it the expense of bulkheading all the streets leading to the water's edge, the expense to be borne by the citizens. The bulkhead is to be six feet high, sufficient to preclude the encroachment of the high tide. The subject is to be presented to the City Trustees on Monday.

DRIFT OF THE TIDE.

The young people of the different church societies held a union social at the First Presbyterian Church last night.

Mrs. Jane Mylod, for several years caretaker of the Park View Hotel, died suddenly last evening. She had been home from a hospital only a few days. Complaining of feeling ill, she lay down, and died almost instantly. The remains were taken to Calvary, in Los Angeles, for burial. Deceased was 80 years of age and a native of Ireland.

Members of the fire department will have a bronze name plate inserted in the corner-stone of the new firehouse, bearing the names of the first volunteer fire department.

M. T. Swearengen has resigned as manager of the bath-house bowling alleys, and is succeeded by E. L. Hemphill.

The master plumbers of Pasadena gave an outing to their employés and families today at the beach. The master plumbers of Long Beach were invited guests. Athletic games were enjoyed on the beach and many enjoyed the privileges of the plunge and surf bathing.

A committee of the Board of Trade will start out Tuesday to solicit subscriptions for the support of the Donatelli Band during its year's contract here.

The Home Mission Society of the First Methodist Church has elected the following officers: President, Mrs. B. P. Dayman; vice-presidents, Mrs. Dr. Bishop, Miss Jennie Lincoln; secretary, Mrs. Mina Fisher; treasurer, Mrs. E. T. Medlar.

Dr. Wesley K. Beans will preach his farewell sermon Sunday at the First Methodist Church. He leaves Monday for his new pastorate at Pomona.

On Saturday next the citizens of Long Beach and Alamitos will vote on the question of the annexation of a portion of the latter suburb.

MONROVIA.

CLUB OPENS SEASON.

MONROVIA, Oct. 7.—The sweetest vacation story that was given in response to the call of the Saturday Afternoon Club today at its season opening came from one of the summer's brides, who told of the scenes in which she had spent her honeymoon. Mrs. C. H. Anson, née Yetta Dexter, was the unwilling recountant brought laughingly before the audience of women who had been telling of where they had passed their holidays.

Mrs. Lawrence Wheeler, one of the youngest matrons of the club, and its new president, presided gracefully over a session in which a multitude of new business was crowded in addition to the social features.

A committee of the club will serve refreshments Tuesday to favorable voters at the election at which an issue of $24,000 will be submitted to the voters. Of this amount $18,000 will be devoted to buying a block near the city's center for a park. One lot in this block is to contain the $10,000 Carnegie library and if the remaining $8000 of bonds carry, the handsome Granite block will be purchased for a City Hall. The Saturday Afternoon Club is not the only body of women interested, as the movement has been warmly advocated by the Library Board, which has secured options on the park site property to hold for the result of the election.

Mrs. Homer Fort, chairman of the Entertainment Committee, exhibited season tickets for four entertainments planned for the clubhouse fund. A Japanese tea will be the first of the series.

ALL JOIN IN REVIVAL.

All Monrovia churches will close tomorrow for the tent services where union revival meetings will be carried on under Dr. E. J. Bulgin. This will be made a full day for Bulgin. He will preach to a mass meeting of children in the Baptist Church at 9:30 o'clock a.m., at 10:30 before a congregation in the tent. An address in the afternoon is one that has been delivered as a lecture in many cities, upon "Was Christ Divine; or The Man of Galilee." The preacher will close his busy day with a sermon at 7:30 in the evening, which will be the last of the tent meetings.

POMONA.

PUTTING ON CLEAN FRONT.

POMONA, Oct. 7.—Street Superintendent Slanker is commencing to clean up and put in better condition all of the north and south street gutters and culverts over the city preparatory to the winter's rains. He is also starting a campaign of general weed-cleaning on the streets and trimming of overhanging trees.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The city trustees have contracted for about 8000 barrels of oil for road oiling in the city.

The Board of rade banquet to be held at Hotel Palomares on Monday evening promises to be an enjoyable affair, many tickets having been sold.

Those who are to take part in the Elks' amateur minstrel show to be given soon are hard at work with rehearsals.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of Pilgrim Congregational Church held a banquet in the church parlors last night. This was the first affair of the kind arranged by the society. About 75 young people were present.

The guests at Hotel Palomares gave a hearts party in the hotel parlors last evening.

Cyrus Burdick is still critically ill at his home on Holt and Garey avenues.

GLENDALE.

INCORPORATION MOVE.

GLENDALE, Oct. 7.—At a called meeting of the Glendale Improvement Association at I.O.O.F. Hall Friday evening, a majority of representative citizens expressed themselves in favor of incorporating Glendale as a city of the sixth class. Attorney Baker of Los Angeles answered the many questions propounded as to the effect incorporation might have upon different sections of the territory proposed for incorporation. The petition to be presented to the Supervisors asking that an election be called was signed by most of those present, and Chairman Leavitt appointed Messrs. Taylor, Woodberry and Goode a committee to secure the remaining number that will be necessary before the petition can be acted upon.

Asa Fanset, George U. Moyse, Wilmot Parcher, C. A. Walton and J. F. McIntyre were nominated for the Board of Trustees; George B. Woodberry for City Clerk; J. C. Sherer for Treasurer, and O. A. Patterson for Marshal. If elected these officers would serve only until April of next year.

OCEAN PARK.

CRUSHED UNDER LUMBER.

OCEAN PARK, Oct. 7.—W. C. Howard of Hill street, a laborer at the yards of the Consolidated Lumber Company, near Sunset avenue, met with an accident at noon today and it is thought he cannot recover. While seated between two high piles of lumber eating his luncheon, one of the piles of boards suddenly swayed and toppled over, jamming him against the other and burying him under a weighty mass. The shrieks of the crushed prisoner called fellow workmen to his assistance and he was rescued, faint, bleeding and bruised. It is feared his spine is fractured and that he has sustained internal injuries. Small hopes are entertained for his recovery. Howard is a single man about 30 years of age.

THREE-STORY BUILDING.

The Home Real Estate Company of Los Angeles made the announcement today that it would at once begin the erection of a three-story brick building on Ocean Front, just north of Pier avenue and opposite the Casino.

SOLDIERS' HOME.

ASSISTANT INSPECTOR COMES.

SOLDIERS' HOME, Oct. 7.—Lieut.-Col. A. W. Wadsworth, assistant inspector, N.H.D.V.S., has arrived at this branch on the semi-anual inspection tour of national and State homes. On Sunday at 8:30 a.m. will be inspection and review of members; afterwards inspection of hospital, and on Monday inspection of barracks.

Col. Wadsworth who is the youngest inspector that has thus far visited this branch (being not over 40,) was until October 1, adjutant and inspector of the Mountain Branch, Johnston City, Tenn., when he was appointed to succeed Col. Richards, who was recently appointed governor of the eastern branch, at Togus, Me.

During the Spanish-American War, Col. Wadsworth served as captain of the Sixth United States Immunes in Porto Rica and afterward as captain in the Forty-first United States Volunteer Infantry in the Philippines.

AROUND THE BARRACKS.

Miss Marcks, for seven years a valued nurse in the hospital here, and who left for the North, on leave, a few weeks ago, sends a letter announcing her resignation. She was married September 27 and now signs herself Mrs. James Morrissey, Tacoma, Wash.

Assistant Surgeon T. V. Parker left yesterday on a thirty days' leave, which he will enjoy in a visit with his parents in Pennsylvania.

John A. Martin post, and the W.R.C. of that post, held a reception in Memorial Hall yesterday.

Extra duty men and civilian employés were paid under "Post-fund" head on Wednesday.

Rev. A. E. Johnson of the Sawtelle Methodist Episcopal Church will preach in the Protestant Chapel here at 10:15 a.m. Sunday.

MUSTERED OUT.

Albert Heyne, late Company E, One Hundred and Sixty-third New York Infantry, a native of Germany, admitted from Los Angeles in 1890, died in Los Angeles October 1; aged 68. He was burried in the Home cemetery.

Joseph Frazier, late Company D, Thirty-fourth Iowa Infantry, a native of Indiana, admitted from Whittier, Cal., September 12, 1905, died October 5; aged 71. The remains were taken to Whittier for interment.

SANTA MONICA.

SCHOOLS' GREAT GROWTH.

SANTA MONICA, Oct. 7.—The first month of school is over and the records show an attendance of 1115, being an increase of 235 over the corresponding period one year ago. One additional teacher has been engaged and other additions will be made to the force as soon as the proposed new buildings are completed.

The High School has effected the organization of a debating society, officered as follows: Miss Geraldine Groche, president; Alfred Reed, vice-president; Miss Merle Hemingway, secretary-treasurer. The first debate will be held on October 20. The club will not affiliate with the Southern California Debating League.

A basketball team will be organized and tennis will also be taken up, but there will be no football aggregation.

ORIENT TRADE TALK.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. King are here from Seattle, guests at the home of his uncle, C. J. Clarke. Mr. King is the general passenger agent of J. J. Hill's Great Northern Steamship Company and is firm in the belief that the Pacific Coast's trade with the Orient is full of possibilities. The two new steel vessels, Minnesota and Dakota, placed in commission since the first of the year, are not adequate, he says, to meet the demands of the Oriental trade and he believes the development of the Philippines and Manchuria will require many vessels of this type.

EB AND FLOW.

W. I. Hull is in San Francisco, attending the meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars.

The Sunset Telephone Company is building a line into Santa Monica cañon and Port Los Angeles. Phones at both places will be in operation early in the week.

Mrs. O. H. La Grange of the Soldiers' Home entertained the ladies of the afternoon card club Wednesday. The prize winners on this occasion were Mrs. E. W. Dike, Mrs. Hendricks, Mrs. Force Parker and Mrs. Sweet.

WHITTIER.

JIMTOWN JOINT PULLED.

WHITTIER, Oct. 7.—Albert Leggee, proprietor of the "Jimtown Joint," on the Los Angeles road, two miles from Whittier, was arrested yesterday by Acting Marshal Bell of this city on the charge of selling liquor without a license. This place was closed by the election last April at which the Los Metas township went dry. Leggee has been selling "Ino," a drink that is alleged by sellers to be non-alcoholic.

FAREWELL SERMON.

Rev. Will A. Belts preaches his farewell sermon tomorrow at the Methodist church and will take up his duties at Long Beach the following week. Rev. S. A. Carroll of Pomona succeeds him here. When Rev. Belts assumed the Whittier pastorate, the church had a membership of 302, now it is 507. During that time $23,000 was raised for the new building and pipe organ.

COVINA.

TO INSTALL RECTOR.

COVINA, Oct. 7.—An unusually interesting service will be held in the Church of the Holy Trinity tomorrow at 11 o'clock, when the most Rev. Bishop Johnson, will install the Rev. Alfred Fletcher as the rector of the newly instituted parish. He will be assisted by Rev. Dr. Trew and Rev. E. W. Meaney of Los Angeles. The charge was formerly a mission of which Rev. Mr. Fletcher has had charge for the past three years. The visiting clergy will be entertained during the day by the ladies of the Guild.

BROUSE-KELLER.

The marriage of Miss Stella Ethel Kellar, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Kellar, to Otto Brouse, occurred yesterday afternoon at the home of the bride. The young people will reside at Tropico.

VENICE.

BRIEF NEWS NOTES.

VENICE, Oct. 7.—The bridge soon to be built by the Los Angeles electric line to span the Grand Canal will be a two-span structure.

William Van Tress has demonstrated his prowess at the harpoon by impegning and bringing ashore a thirty-one pound yellowtail. The scene of the capture was on the Windward pier.

Rev. L. M. Walters of Chicago will occupy the pulpit at the Auditorium Sunday morning, speaking on "The Mygsterious in Ancient and Modern Religions."

EL MONTE.

SALES AT BASSETT.

EL MONTE, Oct. 7.—Land around Bassett continues to sell rapidly. E. J. Baldwin recently sold, through Service Bros. agency, the following tracts in the La Puente ranch: To A. Congdon of Santa Ana, 20 acres at $185 per acre; to Elmer Cook of Santa Ana, 40 acres, consideration named $7000; to A. C. Newton, 36 acres, consideration stated $5250.

H. F. Coffin sold in Walnut Place at Bassett, 5 acres to J. Eagen of Los Angeles at $175 per acre; also 5 acres to W. Lewis of Los Angeles, at $175 per acre, reported prices.

Elmer Cook is building a $2000 barn on his property at Bassett.

THE PALMS.

WIND TUMBLES NUTS.

THE PALMS, Oct. 7.—The harvest of English walnuts is well under way and the yield promises well, although the high winds of ten days ago shook down many nuts. Messrs. Clark and Conger have delivered their first load of 2400 pounds to the Los Angeles market.

FARMING LANDS OF IMPERIAL VALLEY.

In the reclamation of the Arid West, nothing so surprises the average eastern visitor as to learn that the Colorado desert is not only being made to "blossom like the rose," but is comfortably habitable.

Andrew Davis of Coachella is in the city, looking the picture of health. He chanced to meet a visitor from Illinois, and the eastern tourist was exceedingly interested in the story of Mr. Davis's experience at successful farming in the former terra incognita.

"Why, before I always supposed that it is insufferably hot there, beyond the power of human endurance, to say nothing of working," said the Illinois man.

"I have worked out all summer, and not only was not prostrated by the heat, but was not particularly uncomfortable, and have never been sick a day in a residence there of nearly three years," answered Mr. Davis. "I like the country well. For eight months it is not extremely hot, though in midsummer it is at times pretty warm, the mercury rising to 120 degrees occasionally, but I do not think we suffer from heat much more than you do in Illinois, with your extreme humidity."

"Where do you get water for irrigation?" asked the visitor.

"There are two sources. In our section every man has his own artesian well. Such wells are easily made, and each will irrigate from ten to twenty acres. The water doubtless comes from the snows of the San Jacinto and San Bernardino mountains, is 99 per cent. pure, and as soft as rainwater. Down in the Imperial country they depend on a canal fed by the Colorado River, but the intake dam has been cut away and the river is rushing into the valley in a torrent 300 feet wide and twenty feet deep—beyond control. Salton Lake is rising an inch a day in consequence; it is about 100 miles long and forty feet deep. This rise will lessen after the flood season has passed. It may take a couple of years to fully repair the break, and then a large area of the lower valley will be reclaimed and more of the desert will bloom, as you say. We had about twelve inches of rainfall last season, and it is possible that evaporation from the Salton Lake had something to do with it, as such rains are unusual."

PRODUCTS OF "THE DESERT."

"What does your reformed district produce?" asked the astonished visitor.

"Well, for instance, we shipped 300 cars of cantaloupes from our little station this season. We grow fine alfalfa, about ten crops a year, a ton per acre each crop. We already have cut about six. We raise fine grapes and some other fruits, and it is the true land for sweet potatoes. Such potatoes we leave in the ground all winter, where they keep in fine condition. Our region is a paradise for poultry. My neighbor, A. O. Hayward, cleared $1800 from ten acres of cantaloupes the past season, and has 1200 fine turkeys ready for market, worth about $3 each, or, say, $3500. He has made fully $350 a month this year, net profit."

"That beats some of our small banks East!" broke in the Illinois man.

NO INCUBATOR NEEDED.

"The dry, even warmth of our climate is so favorable to certain plant and animal life that I'm almost afraid to tell you the truth for fear you will think it a yarn," continued Mr. Davis. "But I will risk two illustrations, and assure you they are veritable facts. One of my old hens laid eggs under a shed and some of them rolled down where she could not set on them. In due course the natural heat hatched them out, and the chicks are doing well, using the place where they 'sprouted' for a home. Fifteen months ago I planted a willow tree where it was well watered. It is now fully fifteen feet tall and five inches in diameter—a growth apparently impossible until you remember that our trees grow all the year around."

"Making that 'Death Valley' turn green and become the homes of prosperous communities is the most astonishing thing I've seen in all my travels," remarked the man from Illinois. "What is your rejuvenated desert land worth?"

"Improved, from $100 to $150 per acre. All the good land in our section is taken up and anyone desiring a farm must buy it."

"The things you do out here in the West sound like fables. If I hadn't seen a lot of it I could not fully credit it," remarked the eastern tourist, as he went his way.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED.

SOME DATA REQUISITE FOR MINING REPORTS.

Prof. W. L. Watts Gives Pointers as to What Should be Ascertained and Inquired Into Before Investment—Amazing Credulity of Public in Mining Matters.

Many people think it is an easy thing to find a good mine, and many are willing to risk their money on the report of someone "who is supposed to know," who has just looked at a mine, taken a few specimens therefrom and had them assayed. It is astonishing that people will accept very meager evidence concerning mines and invest thereon, and yet they carefully study and weigh every fact before investing in any other enterprise. The general result of credulity in mining ventures is failure, and this hurts the mining industry.

The first thing to be considered about a mining proposition is: Is it a mine or a prospect? If it is a mine, is it one from which ore can be profitably extracted? If not a paying mine, all suggestions as to its being made to pay by further development should be very carefully scrutinized. If it is a prospect, it must be borne in mind that its value is prospective, and that such value is very much less than that of a mine in which the dimensions of a remunerative ore body have been ascertained.

As far as circumstances will permit, a report on a mine should cover the following points: The topographical and geological features of the mine and the district in which it is situated, and the character of the mineral deposit, both with regard to its structure and composition. The report should be accompanied by maps, cross-sections and photographs, showing the dimensions of the property, the topography, workings above and underground, the structure, and the known and probable extent of the ore body. Average samples of the ore body and of the different materials composing the ore body should be taken in a sufficient number of places and carefully assayed.

If the ore is free-milling, the relative value of the free gold and sulphurets should be given. In the case of other ores, there should be an analysis showing the composition of the ore, and the metallurgical process most suitable for treating it should be designated. In the case of smelting ores the question of fluxes must also be dealt with, and not only the analysis of the ores, but also of available deposits of limestone and iron, must be given.

The cost of labor, fuel and transportation, the supply of water and timber and the climatic conditions must be gone into. Moreover, the probable output of ore and the cost of mining and treating the same must be set forth.

HISTORY AND TITLE.

Lastly, the history of the mine and the title should be carefully considered, and the record of mines should receive attention which are situated on the same lead as the mine under investigation, or near-by, and in a similar formation to the mine reported on. In cases where the limited amount of development entitles a proposition to be classed only as a prospect, as many as possible of the points mentioned should be dealt with and especial regard should be paid to geological details. It is often expedient to make a preliminary reconnoissance of a mining property before examining it in detail; but it is unwise to invest in a mine without an extensive examination of the same, and, if practicable, having a mill test made on a large quantity of the ore.

AS TO PLACER MINES.

In the case of placer mines, a contour map of the territory should be made and the probable course of the channel or channels should be delineated. Wells should be sunk to bedrock, and sufficiently close together to demonstrate the general character of the gravel. Most of the wells may be drilled; but some of them must be dug, in order that the character of the bedrock may be ascertained. The material taken from the wells should be carefully washed, each sample speaking for three feet in depth; all changes in the character of the material should be carefully noted, and different materials should be washed separately. Results should be given in values per cubic yard; the available water supply at different seasons of the year; the heads that can be obtained; full information concerning dumpage, existing ditches and flumes, and the possibility and cost of making others should be clearly set forth.—[W. L. Watts, in the Mining and Scientific Press.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

For The Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

PILES 14 YEARS.

Terrible Case Cured Painlessly With Only One Treatment of Pyramid Pile Cure.

Free Package in Plain Wrapper Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

"I have been a terrible sufferer of piles for fourteen (14) years, and during all this time you can have an idea of how many kinds of medicine I tried. But I found no relief whatever. I felt there must be something that could cure me without having to undergo an operation which might kill me.

"Now, after trying but one treatment of your 'Pyramids,' I am free to tell all sufferers of this dreadful disease to try this medicine—the Pyramid Pile Cure. It will cure when all others fail. Sincerely yours, George Braneigh, Schellburg, Pa."

Anyone suffering from the terrible torture, burning and itching of piles, will get instant relief from the treatment we send out free, at our own expense, in plain sealed package, to everyone sending name and address.

Surgical operation for piles is suicidal, cruel, unnecessary and rarely a permanent success. Here you can get a treatment that is quick, easy to apply and inexpensive, and free from the publicity and humiliation you suffer by doctors' examination.

Pyramid Pile Cure is made in the form of "easy to use" suppositories. The coming of a cure is felt the moment you begin to use it, and your suffering ends.

Send your name and address at once to Pyramid Drug Co., 3471 Pyramid Building, Marshall, Mich., and get by return mail the treatment we will send you free, in plain, sealed wrapper.

After seeing for yourself what it can do, you can get a regular, full-size package of Pyramid Pile Cure from any druggist at 50 cents each, or, on receipt of price, we will mail you same ourselves if he should not have it.

Chronic indigestion, catarrh of stomach, belching of gases, stomach trouble of all kinds, no matter how severe or long standing the case, will make a complete cure. We mean a cure. Pepsin, soda, and the many dyspepsia tablets may relieve the symptoms, but they do not cure the cause. We want the very worst cases, those that can hardly eat the blandest kind of food, and are suffering with what they may think incurable stomach trouble.

"For the past 6 years I have been a great sufferer with catarrh of stomach, and no one will ever have any idea how I suffered. I was hungry, and could not eat. I seemed relieved when I could starve myself. After continued perseverance by friends I was persuaded to try Nau's Dyspepsia Cure, and after taking 8 bottles, I am happy to say I am cured. I hope this letter will encourage some of the many sufferers to try this wonderful remedy, Nau's Dyspepsia Cure.

"MRS. WM. MASTERSON,
"Lostine, Oregon."

"I wish to state for a period of 2 years I was an extreme sufferer from heartburn and indigestion. With first dose of Nau's Dyspepsia Cure, taken three months ago, I experienced a distinct relief, and I can now eat any kind of food without distress.

The Los Angeles Stock Exchange was unusually quiet yesterday, only 2300 shares and 2 bonds being sold. Associated Oil failed to improved its position, 2000 shares being sold at 58¾ and 58⅝. Mexican Petroleum was active, 200 shares changing hands at 67½, closing at 69. United Petroleum added a point and Western Union 5.

Johnnie Consolidated and Mitchell Mining gained fractionally.

Los Angeles Home Telephone bonds were in request at fractionally under the close of the day before, 2 being sold at 95¼. Corona Power and Water and Pasadena and San Diego telephone bonds lost fractionally.

Edison Electric, both preferred and common, went off from 2 to 3½ points. Pasadena and San Diego telephone securities declined in the buyers' terms. Los Angeles Home Telephone weakened, and Santa Monica Home Telephone hardened ½.

The Los Angeles Home Telephone Co. has delivered the first installment of the new first refunding mortgage 5 per cent. bonds amounting to $250,000.

CLEARING-HOUSE. The annual meeting of the Los Angeles Clearing-house was held yesterday afternoon, when Manager J. G. Mossin submitted his report for the fiscal year ending September 30, in which he showed that the exchanges for the year amounted in all to $449,963,129.94, as against $332,715,240.35 for 1903-04, an increase of $117,247,889.59 or 35.23 per cent. The balances for the same period were $58,530,240.95, as against $39,014,914.71 for 1903-04, an increase of $19,515,326.24, or 50.21 per cent. Daily average exchanges $1,455,677.94, daily average balances $190,652.21.

The clearances for eighteen years the period of the existence of the clearing-house have been:

1889	36,873,242.46

COTTON GINNED TO SEPT. 25. A Washington dispatch to the New York Journal of Commerce says: The report of the Census Bureau on the amount of cotton ginned from the new crop to September 25 was issued today, but is of little value as a basis of comparison with previous crops owing to the fact that it is the first crop report issued on October 2 in any year.

The total number of bales ginned to September 25 was shown to be 2,358,031. Of last year's crop 6,420,994 bales had been ginned by October 18. On the same date in 1903 the number of bales of the new crop ginned was 3,703,626, and on October 18, 1902, the number was 5,683,005. The report today indicates that the average number of bales ginned per week this year has been somewhat less than that of 1904.

From September 1 to October 18, 1904, about one million bales per week were ginned. During the present year the average per week has been under three-fifths of a million bales. In 1903 the average was about the same to October 18, and in 1902, the average gin outputs per week were less than those of 1904.

Today's report shows Texas leading with 777,416 bales, followed by Georgia with 600,212 bales, and South Carolina and Alabama with 330,000 bales each.

USE LYE TO PEEL PEACHES. The rejection by jobbers in this market of several carloads of 1905 pack California canned peaches has brought to light what is alleged in some quarters to be a serious condition due to the innovation of a new labor-saving process used by some packers in the preparation of the product. The rejections were made by several of the leading jobbers, out of deliveries recently received, and on the score that the fruit was not in quality up to the standard called for in the contracts. The fruit, it is stated, showed evidence of imperfect condition, the result of the "lye process" used in peeling the peaches.

This process, it is stated, is used by several packers on the Coast, and consists of spraying a solution of lye upon the fruit, which eats away the peel and saves the cost of labor incident to hand-peeling. After passing through the first stage, the fruit is cleansed mechanically, and, those who favor the process say, is none the worse for the operation.

The fact, however, that samples drawn from the packs of several packers by jobbers here on recent deliveries show the presence of lye or other "biting acid" is taken as an indication that the process is imperfect. One jobber, who rejected a carload, said the fruit he sampled was so strongly impregnated with lye as to cause a sharp biting of the tongue. This, he observed, would not have a very beneficial effect on the stomach of the consumer. A good deal of interest is centered in the development along the line of rejections as deliveries come forward. The agitation is being helped along by packers who still use the hand-peeling process.—[New York Commercial.

Local Citrus Movement.

The shipments of citrus fruits Friday were 1 carload of oranges and 4 carloads of lemons; grond total, 23,360, of which 4266 were lemons.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

The produce market was rather quiet yesterday, though shipping trade was about the usual stocks were in moderate supply and few changes weer made in the price list.

Ranch eggs were jobbing at 36 to 37 cents. The market was slightly weak in undertone owing to the quantity of Santa Ana storage eggs that has been brought here, and with the car from Petaluma, which is expected tomorrow, it is unlikely that the predicted 40 cent level will be made good the coming week.

Receipts of Valley butter were more liberal and all orders were filled though the market was cleared up.

Prices on raisins are as follows:

Standard seedless, Muscatels, 50S, 5½ cents; L. M. 2 Crown, 6¾; L. M. 3 Crown, 7; L. M. 4 Crown, 7½. London layers, 2 Crown, 1.65; 3 Crown, 1.75; fancy clusters, 4 Crown, 2.25; 5 Crown, 2.75; imperial clusters, 6 crown, 3.25; fancy seeded 16 ounces, 9¼; fancy, 12 ounces, 7¾; choice, 16 ounces, 9; choice, 12 ounces, 7¼; seedless Salinas, 50S, 6 cents; Thompson seedless, 50 cents; unbleached, 7½.

Fancy Bartlett pears were moving fairly well at 6 cents.

Grapes were plentiful and only in fair demand at 75 to 90 cents for Muscats; 75 to 1.00 for Black Moroccos; 50 for Mission, and 65 to 75 for Black Hamburgs.

Peaches were steady and in fairly good demand at 65 to 75 cents for locals; 1.00 to 1.25 for northern.

Strawberries were scarce and firm at 8 cents for Tropicos and 7 to 8 for Gardenas. Blackberries were 7 to 8 cents.

There was no change in storage plums.

Pomegranates weer in liberal supply and easy at 65 to 75 cents a picking box.

NEW YORK MARKETS.

SHARES AND MONEY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—The weekly bank statement offered a warning of the small reliance to be placed on yesterday's net decline in the call money rate as a reflection of the situation of the money market. Speculative sentiment was brought to the conclusion that a stiff money market was likely to continue for the immediate future, and there was selling of stocks in consequence. A group of industrial specialties, mostly among the railroad equipment stocks with American Locomotive a conspicuous leader were notable exceptions to the general downward tendency. The movement in these was of professional origin quite largely, but had as a substantial basis the extraordinary need of the railroads throughout the country for large increasing in facilities to accommodate the flood of traffic which is coming upon them. The strength of this handful of stoks, however, was of little effect in sustaining the general market, and the closing was easy at net declines, running to a point or over for many of the prominent active stocks. The decrease in cash shown by the bank statement rant to $8,454,700, considerably exceeding the largest of the preliminary estimates based on the known movements of money. This showing is regarded as a ratification in part of the unexplained increase of cash reported last week, though the full amount of the discrepancy is by no means accounted for. The showing strengthens the supposition that gold engagements have been figuring in bank reserves as soon as made, without waiting for their actual receipt. The effect of the decline in cash on the surplus was modified by the scaling down of the deposits through a contraction of $11,889,400 i noutstanding loans. The inroad upon the surplus was thus limited to $3,153 950, bringing that item down to $4,286,175. The loan contraction is believed to be due largely to the taking over if loans from the banks by out-of-town institutions, which have drawn on their New York deposits for that purpose during the week. Another withdrawal of $2,000,000 from the Bank of England for shipment to Egypt showed the drain upon the depleted reserve of that institution unrelieved and pointed to the maintenance of money rates in foreign markets.

GENERAL EASTERN MARKETS.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—Sentiment in the wheat pit was inclined to bearishness. At the opening December was off ⅛ to ¼, at ⅝@⅞, at 83⅞@83¾ to 85. One of the factors mainly responsible was the failure of the market at Liverpool to respond to an advance here yesterday. The reason for the comparative weakness at Liverpool, it was said, was a general belief in the likelihood of a most heavier movement of wheat from Russia within the next few weeks. Another factor in the initial depression here was ideal weather for the movement of new crop in the Northwest. From the start many small holders were eager to dispose of their lines. Commission houses also had selling orders. Before the end of the first hour, December had sold off to 84⅛@84¾. Lack of definite news regarding export business and considerable influence on trading. As a result of moderate demand from a leading bull, the loss was later all practically regained. December at one time selling at 85¼. During the last hour, prices fluctuated within a narrow range. The market closed steady, with December off ⅛@¼, at 84⅞@85. A steady tone prevailed in the corn pit. The volume of trading was very small. December closed unchanged, at 44¼@44⅜. The oats market was firm. December closed unchanged, at 28¼. Provisions held steady the entire session. At the close, January pork was unchanged, lard was up 2½ and ribs were up a shade. For December the highest point of the day was reached at 85¼. The close was steady, with December off ⅛@¼, at 84⅞@85.

The leading futures closed as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO MARKETS.

FRUIT, GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Interesting features were lacking in today's market for fruits, general trading in all departments being of a listless character. Apples closed weak at uneven prices under an indifferent demand, free supplies pressing for sale. Peaches were more plentiful, and while a few extra lots in carriers' hands brought top quotation, quantity of ordinary stock was available at inside rate. Pears were in free supply at quoted rates, while Bartletts were scarce and practically nominal. Figs were in oversupply and the market in a semi-demoralized state. Table grapes moved off well for local accounts. Isabellas were scarce and held at a sharp advance. There was moderately active trade in wine grapes at maintained prices. Melons moved off well at previous prices, the best sorts cleaning up quickly at top rates. Lemons continued easy at recent decline, with supplies heavy and the demand of limited volume. Limes were also easy, while oranges held steady under scant offerings. The usual end-of-the-week quiet prevailed in the market for potatoes, and in the absence of important business prices were without quotable variance. Offerings of miscellaneous vegetables were heavier, and values for several varieties eased off a trifle. A fine quality of tomatoes, less freely offered, commanded an advance. Corn was scarcer and higher, but eggplant, cucumbers and okra were cheaper.

Insurance Premiums—Heavy Loss.

Records in the office of the superintendent of insurance indicate that about fourteen millions in cash is annually sent out of the State in the form of life-insurance premiums. Some of the money may have been used for campaign expenses or in Wall-street manipulations. The Conservative Life is a California Company, invests and keeps the policy holder's money at home.—[Adv.

CALIFORNIANS IN PARIS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. E. T. Emerson of San Francisco is registered at the Herald Office today.

DESTRUCTION DISTRESSES POPE.

ROME, Oct. 7.—According to the latest official reports, 300 villages were destroyed by the recent earthquake in the province of Calabria. Reconstruction work, it is estimated, will cost about $30,000,000 and funds contributed up to the present time amount to $400,000. The Pope is much distressed because of the situation, especially now that the severity of the autumn weather is felt among the inhabitants of the stricken district. His Holiness today received Right Rev. Francis Bourne, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Westminister, in audience and thanked him warmly for opening a collection among the clergy of Westminister, adding: "All good Catholics throughout the world should imitate him."

DEAD HIGHWAYMAN IDENTIFIED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—All doubts that may have existed in the minds of the Oakland police as to the identity of the burglar killed last week by Officer LeStrange in Berkeley were set at rest today, when the Pinkertons National Detective Agency declared the dead man to be a notorious crook named Matt Kennedy, who was known throughout this country as a bank sneak and all round thief. Under different aliases, among them Kid McMunn, James Kelley and William Watson, Kennedy committed many crimes in this country and Mexico and served terms in various prisons.

HOLD COURT IN BAGGAGE CAR.

PADUCAH, Oct. 7.—On board the same train on which he was returned to the scene of his alleged crime, James Fowlkes, colored, charged with assaulting a white woman at Clinton, was tried, convicted and sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary. The court was held in the baggage car on an Illinois Central train because the authorities were afraid Fowlke would by lynched if he was allowed to be taken off at Clinton.

STILL KNOCKING THE JAPS.

ST. PAUL, Oct. 7.—The International Brotherhood of Railway Blacksmiths and helpers today adopted resolutions calling upon the Congress of the United States to pass an act prohibiting the employment of Japanese and Korean laborers on the Pacific Coast and through the northwest States. The resolutions also ask that the present Chinese exclusion law be so extended as to include Japanese and Koreans.

"AL" ADAMS BUYS MINES.

CITY OF MEXICO, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Al" Adams, the former policy king of New York, has purchased two old Spanish mines in Guanajauto and will come to Mexico to live. The mines are Jesus Maria and Villa Reina, and the price paid by Adams was $185,000 in gold. He says he will spend $200,000 in putting them in shape for further production. The mines have a recorded production of $20,000,000. Lawrence Adams, son of the "Policy King," is now at the mines in Guanajauto. A house will be built near the mines, in the mountains, and there the New York gambler will spend the remainder of his life.

FISHERS CATCH CORPSES.

American Schooner Reports Finding a Great Many Dead Japanese in Northern Waters.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—The schooner City of Papeete, arriving today from the coast of Siberia, brings a story of having picked up the dead bodies of numerous Japanese on the Kamchatkan coast, who had been killed by the Russians some months ago.

Capt. Stensland reports that the City of Papeete, which was engaged in fishing in the Okhotsk Sea in August brought to the surface in one of her nets the bodies of six Japanese who had been killed by bullets, evidently by the Russians. The bodies were immediately consigned to the deep again by the Papeete's crew.

Before the Papeete left the Kamchatkan coast eight other dead bodies of Japanese were seen by the crew lying on the beach, and another dead Japanese was seen floating off shore. These subjects of the Mikado were believed to have been members of a party of sealers who had boldly cruised along the Siberian coast and had been surprised by Russians who were on the lookout for them.

BANDIT TURNS UP HIS TOES.

WILDROSE (Wis.) Oct. 7.—One bandit was killed, two were probably mortally wounded and one other was apprehended tonight in a desperate fight with a posse of fifty armed citizens of this village aroused by the burglary of the postoffice and attempted looting of the State bank early this morning. The bandits were caught in a forest eight miles from the village and fought with guns for an hour and a half. The fourth man did not surrender until his companions were shot down. The Milwaukee agent of a casualty company offered $400 reward for the arrest of the burglars and has sent a detective to make an investigation.

LEWIS'S BIG NOTE MISSING.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 7.—In the Circuit Court at Clayton, today, Atty.-Gen. Hadley made the declaration to Judge McIlhenny that the note of E. G. Lewis for $146,375.43 given for a loan by the People's United States bank to Lewis, president of the bank, has disappeared and asked the court to issue an order to Receiver Fred Essen of the bank requiring him to bring suit against Lewis and his associates who endorsed the note, to recover it. "I am informed by Receiver Essen that the note is not in his possession," said Atty.-Gen. Hadley. The Attorney-General stated afterward that the absence of the note deprecated the assets of the bank to that extent.

RUSSIAN COUNTESS LOCKED UP.

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Marie Hayford, who said she was the Countess Baronovsky, a Russian, was a prisoner in the Yorkville court today, having been arrested yesterday for safekeeping. She was found seated on the stoop of a private house almost in a stupor from some drug or liquor. She told the police she was twice a widow. Her first husband died in St. Petersburg, and then she came to this country. Here, she said, she met George Hayford, a lawyer, of San Francisco and married him, he dying two years ago. She swore she had either lost or been robbed of $150 and her gold spectacles while in a stupor after partaking of some whisky.

OFFERED THE MEXICAN POST.

DENVER (Colo.) Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Philip B. Stewart, of Colorado Springs, has been offered the post of Minister to Mexico by President Roosevelt, and has the offer under consideration. Stewart and the President are close friends. They met at Colorado Springs five years ago. During the President's recent hunting trip, Stewart spent some time with him in camp.

MRS. WARREN HAMLIN, who has had years of experience in newspaper work and as a magazine writer, will open a class in literature and journalism in October. As there is a constantly increasing demand for the work of California writers, this opportunity should be embraced by those who contemplate making literature their profession. Mrs. Hamlin will be at the Westminster on Monday, October 9, to form a class, and will be pleased to talk with those interested. Instruction will also be given in parliamentary law.

Announcement....

The successful revolutionizing of Apartment House construction as the result of the introduction and use of our Patented Wall Bed Fixtures for Apartment Houses and Cottages, has led us to be constantly on the alert for fixtures other than those manufactured by ourselves, which would, in connection with our own, further the solution of space economy and lessen the burden of housework.

The result has been that after a careful and thorough investigation into the merits of the McDougall Kitchen Cabinet we accepted the agency of them for this State and are pleased to announce that we now have a complete line on sale at our Los Angeles and San Francisco offices, where we will take pleasure in showing and explaining in detail their workings and advantages.

The McDougall Kitchen Cabinet is an attractive and extremely useful piece of furniture. It is built for convenience and the lessening of the work of the house wife in the kitchen. It accomplishes both these and much more besides. To the woman the McDougall Kitchen Cabinets are especially attractive and interesting and none should miss seeing and investigating them. Every housewife in California should know and understand their great advantages and should own one.

The McDougall Kitchen Cabinet is sold by us under the personal guarantee of the manufacturers, G. P. McDougall & Son of Indianapolis, Indiana, and by our agreement with them, you may if, after 30 days' use of the Cabinet you are dissatisfied with it, return the Cabinet to us and we will refund the pur chase price to you.

A cordial invitation is extended to all to call and see the handsome line of these Cabinets which we now have on display.

THE CITY IN BRIEF.

NEWS AND BUSINESS.

He is De-lighted.

J. M. Dolph, assistant secretary of the Lewis and Clark Exposition, who has been spending a few days in Los Angeles, left for Portland on the 11:30 train last night. At the Angelus Mr. Dolph said: "I never enjoyed a visit so much in my life. I never was treated better. The Jonathan Club was particularly good to me. I am in love with Los Angeles. My folks are an old Portland family, but I would sell out all I own in Oregon at a sacrifice to come here and make my home. Good-night and good-by. You're bully people."

BREVITIES.

Announcement. In order to give each one of the numerous people who have made inquiry concerning the sale and price of lots in Chapman Park Tract, we desire to state that at present the property is not fully ready to be placed on the market; but to those who desire to secure a lot in the unfinished condition of our street work we have decided to place a limited number of lots distributed throughout the tract at a very much less price than they will be sold for when the property is formally put on the market. We trust most sincerely there will not be any disappointments. "First come, first served." We hope to have Chapman Park Tract ready to be placed on the market by November 1. It is due our prospective purchasers to say that the gateways to be located on the one-hundred-foot boulevard and eighty-foot streets, entrance to our property, are to be constructed of buff sandstone with tile roofing; these with ten-foot parkways and six-foot sidewalks and high grade restrictions, make Chapman Park Tract one of the most desirable in the entire city. Any further information will be freely furnished at the office of Chapman Bros. Co., No. 504-5-6-7 Fay bldg., C. F. Palmer, manager, or at office on the tract.

Times' "Liner" Advertisers—Important change in rate for Sunday classified advertisements. Commencing Sunday, October 1, 1905, and thereafter, the rate for Sunday "Liners" will be 1¼ cents per word for each insertion; minimum charge, 25 cents, as at present. This slight advance is amply justified by the present Sunday circulation of The Times, which averages over 60,000 copies. (When the 1-cent per-word rate was established in 1893, The Times Sunday circulation was only 14,000 copies.) The "Liner" rate for the daily—1 cent per word—will stand as at present.

Terrill, the dressmaker and importer, announces their fall opening at 338 and 340 S. Hill st., Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. The Misses Terrill have just returned direct from Paris, where they selected some of the choicest novelties for women's wear. Ladies who attend the opening will meet some surprises in the exquisite and exclusive exhibits of gowns and costumes that, for style cannot be duplicated this side of the Atlantic.

Elegant hats are most appreciated when becoming and price sensible. A Crank is a man who will not permit his neighbors to turn him.

We always welcome a crank on clothes—the man who insists on individuality in his suit. Such a man THOROUGHLY appreciates the Brauer-Krohn habit of building a man's individuality and personality into his clothes.

There are a lot of clothing cranks in Los Angeles. Men who want what they want just the way they want it. Most of these men wear coats bearing Brauer-Krohn labels. The $35 English Walking Suit we're making would probably interest you; made of the new Saxony grays we have exclusively displayed in our show windows.

AT THE THEATERS.

TODAY The Times dramatic department presents the second of its series of three articles on "The Stock Company."

As previously announced, today's dissertation is by Clarence Drown, manager of the Orpheum as a regular employment, and for his own diversion creator and manager of the Ulrich Stock company, which for half a year, every season, purveys thrills and sensations to the melodrama-loving public.

Laurette Taylor
Grand

On perusal, it will be seen at once that Mr. Drown speaks distinctly from his own standpoint—that of a man whose business it is to provide the common people with the plays they want, in the way that they want them. As he states, the secret of "popular" business in this country today is a "good show" for a reasonable sum of money, and in justice to Mr. Drown and his co-workers it may be said that no traveling melodramatic organization ever seen here has reached the home standard that he has set in intelligence of his personnel, character of plays presented, and scenery and costuming accompanying them.

Next Sunday John H. Blackwood, whose typewriter won him literary fame before his theatrical instincts were turned into monetary channels, will treat this subject in an original and amusing way. Mr. Blackwood will write upon "The Theatrical Shopkeeper."

BY CLARENCE DROWN.

The stock company is today the most satisfactory solution which we have been able to find for the never ceasing theatrical problem—a little better productions for a little less money.

The advantages of the stock company over the traveling company are numerous and easily recognized. Economy is probably the most important. There are no long jumps across country, no losing of a week or ten days on the road, no railway expenses, no advance agents, none of the thousand and one leakages which occur when a company is en tour.

It is this saving which has made popular priced houses possible and enabled the theater-going public to enjoy the very best plays, produced in a manner which is frequently superior to that of the original organization. And it is a fact that the very best plays in the market can be secured for stock productions, after a comparatively short season on the road, and the stock company, having the strong points as well as the weaknesses of the original production in mind, can very frequently improve upon it; this not merely because of the more economical organization, but because it is an indisputable fact that, as a rule, the average of the historionic ability in the stock company is much higher than that of the traveling organization. Minor parts, which were regulated to the background originally are brought out into the light of day, and the entire piece is brightened up.

This condition is not unreasonable after all, for usually in a traveling company nowadays you find one glittering star, around whom everything must revolve. He desires to see his satellites glow a little, but their light must not be great enough to detract attention from his sun-like halo. And not only does he "hog" the business of the play, but gobbles the lion's share of the pay sheet as well. There is, therefore, but one recourse for the young actor of talent, promise and ambition—but one place to which he can turn to make his living and at the same time develop—the stock company. In this way the stock company has become, not merely the refuge but the training school as well for some of the greatest actors of the time. In fact, it is acknowledged by practically all who have reached the top of the dramatic ladder, that stock company training is the best in the world.

And so we have the stock company, by reason of its economical basis and its more even distribution of salaries, producing the best plays at prices which enable people of small means, whose weekly or fortnightly outlay upon theatrical amusement amounts to only a dollar or two, to enjoy what would otherwise be outside their reach. It is not every man who can afford two, three or five dollars for an evening's pleasure.

Once a stock company is established with these things in view, its popularity is assured. It takes but a short time for friendly relations to spring up in the three cornered mutual benefit arrangement between company, management and patrons. And in the long run the patrons of the stock company get exactly what they want. It does not take a wise manager to eliminate the features which are manifestly unpopular, and it is a certain thing that the productions are going to be the best possible. When next week's business relies for its advertising chiefly on the popularity of this week's performances, this must necessarily be the case. There is no "soldiering" in stock.

These are some of the reasons that the stock company has been found to be a successful solution of the everlasting problem—a little better productions for a little less money.

Eugenie Thais Lawton, Leading Woman Belasco Theater

Harry Corson Clarke Orpheum

Seaside Theater.

William T. Wyatt's "Seaside Theater," the first regular playhouse in Ocean Park, will be formerly opened tomorrow evening. Miss Claire Washington, supported by her own company, will begin a short season, presenting as her first play, "A Matrimonial Engagement."

The Seaside Theater is a little smaller than the Los Angeles Casino, and is artistically finished and furnished.

—o—

The Oberle Benefit.

At the Oberle benefit, which will be given at the Belasco Theater on Tuesday afternoon, the Belasco Company will play the third act of "Heidelberg," in which Mr. Oberle himself will appear.

A large number of other attractions have been added, and a long and interesting programme seems assured.

—o—

Belasco.

Los Angeles theater patrons will get their first stage glimpse of Mary Johnston's "Audrey" this week. It is to be put on by the Belasco Theater Stock Company tomorrow night.

The presentation takes an added importance by the introduction of Eugenia Thais Lawton as leading woman. Miss Lawton was last seen here in the support of White Whittlesey.

As a play, "Audrey" is said to follow the book text very closely.

—o—

Burbank.

Lee Bascom's farce, "Three Men in a Flat," will start the show at the Burbank this week. It is in three acts, and its humor is said to be unusual, fresh and original.

The piece-de-resistance will be a premier presentation of Jack London's dramatized "The Great Interrogation." It is in one act. Most people have read the story, which tells of the quandary of a Klondiker over a love affair. Spurned once by a white woman in the States, he goes north, and is loved by an Indian girl. As they are about to be married the first love reappears, and begs forgiveness. Which?—that is the question.

—o—

Orpheum.

The Orpheum's novelty for the coming week will be the "Spook Minstrels," an aggregation of burnt cork spirits allegedly "so different."

Harry Corson Clarke, a well-remembered comedian, will make his first vaudeville appearance here, in "Strategy." Dave Genaro and Ray Bailey will present a sketch called "A Cigarette Case." Prof. Allinei, simian expert, will offer his acrobatic ape "Petro the Great," said to be an unusual wonder of his kind.

The holdovers are Julien Eltinge, female impersonator; Buckner, trick cyclist; Holcombe, Curtis and Webb, in their sketch; Jolson, Palmer and Jolson, and a new set of moving pictures.

—o—

Grand Operahouse.

Charles A. Taylor's dramatic company will make its first local appearance at the Grand today, presenting "Escaped from the Harem," a late play by Mr. Taylor.

This piece tells the story of an abducted New England girl, taken to India and immured in a harem, and escaping finally on a trained elephant.

—o—

Fischer's.

Tomorrow night the Fischer stock company will present a new musical burlesque in one act, called "The Stolen Mummy." It has been written and staged by Harry James, and is said to require more than the ordinary costuming and scenic effects.

The vaudeville programme for the coming week will be new, introducing Leora, aerial gymnast; Thomas and Fuller, comedians, and Downes, clog dancer. New motion pictures will be shown.

—o—

Unique.

New performers at the Unique this week will be Mustard and Cook, duettists; the Reeds, in a musical performance; Charles Almpn, monologue performer; Lazeta, contortionist, Crawford and Duff, in a comedy sketch, and other players.

Regular matinèes are given on Saturday and Sunday, with a ladies' souvenir matinèe on Wednesday.

—o—

Miss Barrymore's Engagement.

Ethel Barrymore will be seen at the Mason Operahouse one week from Monday night, in "Sunday," her new play. Bruce McCrea is still her leading man.

The Barrymore engagement is for three nights and a matinèe, and "The Girl from Kays" will conclude the week.

—o—

The Season's Plays.

The immortal bard of Avon and the playwrights of a generation or two gone would turn in their graves could they see the list of new plays offered this season. It is such a confusing and meaningless hodge-podge that everything is practically left to the imagination. Here is a sample: the first three named plays to be produced by such well-known stars as Maude Adams, Henrietta Crosman and Ethel Barrymore in the order named: "Peter Pan," "Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary," and "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire." How soul-elevating and thrilling! And the first and last named are from the pen of J. M. Barrie, hence they must be worth while, but why burden them with such veiled names? Are we to see the spectacle of Henrietta Crosman, she of Nell Gwyn fame, in a Mother Goose performance? The name of her play would indicate as much. Then we are to have "All of a Sudden Peggy," "Mary and John," "Our Girl," "The Toast of the Town," "How He Lied to Her Husband," "What Will People Say?" and "You Never Can Tell"—true, quite, quite true—you never can tell exactly what people will say. "The Pearl and the Pumpkin" is the euphonious title of a spectacular conglomeration which was served up in New York at the opening of the season and was swallowed in a single gulp, the weight of the plot not resting at all heavily on the mental digestion of New Yorkers, most of whom go to the theater to browse, not to masticate.

Over three hundred dramatic companies "opened the ball" with the beginning of the month. Add to these the 100 repertoire companies, the fifty stock organizations, the seventy extravaganzas, the innumerable vaudeville teams, and the large number of miscellaneous offerings launched in various parts of this gay, glad country of ours, and it will be understood that we shall not lack for amusement. And amusement, pure and simple, it is going to be for the most part. Serious plays are de rigueur, Shakespeare is out of fashion, classical plays are relegated to the background, dramatized novels have had their day. True, Richard Mansfield will include in his repertoire his two favorite Shakespearean plays, "King Richard III" and "The Merchant of Venice," and of course Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe will continue their productions of Shakespearean drama—their contract calls for it. Nat Goodwin had a whack at the bard of Avon a season or two ago, and now deserts him for low comedy.

The large number of "No. 2," "No. 3," and even as high as "No. 6" companies on the road is conspicuous this season. For instance, the play called "Dora Thorne," presumably a dramatization of Mrs. Holmes's novel by that name, opened simultaneously in six different towns, running the gauntlet across the continent from Pennsylvania to Oregon. There are five "Uncle Tom's Cabin" companies on the road, and the genus tramp seems to be a favorite theme, since two companies are playing "Aristocratic Tramps;" two others are producing "The King of Tramps," and "A Thoroughbred Tramp" and "Two Merry Tramps" are likewise absorbing the genius of traveling companies. Then there are the usual number of heart plays—"The Heart of a Swallow," "Human Hearts" (three companies of them,) "How Hearts are Broken," "Honest Hearts," and "Hearts of Gold."

NOTES OF NEWS.

Sam Bernard, at the close of his present engagement, proposes to take a long rest. He has worked steadily for the past two years.

Robert Fisher, as the Old Squire; Phoebe Davies, and all the old favorites are still members of the company playing "Way Down East."

Laurence D'Orsay, "The Earl of Pawtucket," is back from dear ol' Lunnon. He declares that his new Thomas play will prove a "corkah, by Jove."

Miss Rosalba Beecher, at one time primadonna of the McCall Opera Company and the original Rosalind in "Die Fliedermaus," in English in this country, is to return to the stage.

Mrs. Lily Langtry is to pay another visit to the United States, perhaps early next year. She is first to make a theatrical tour of South Africa, and then come to New York. She has, it is said, been offered a guarantee of $1500 a week by an American manager, name not mentioned. Miss Annie Russell is to present Bernard Shaw's new play, "Major Barbara," at the Court Theater in London in November. The play is devoted to a Salvation Army lassie, and was to have been presented by Eleanor Robson.

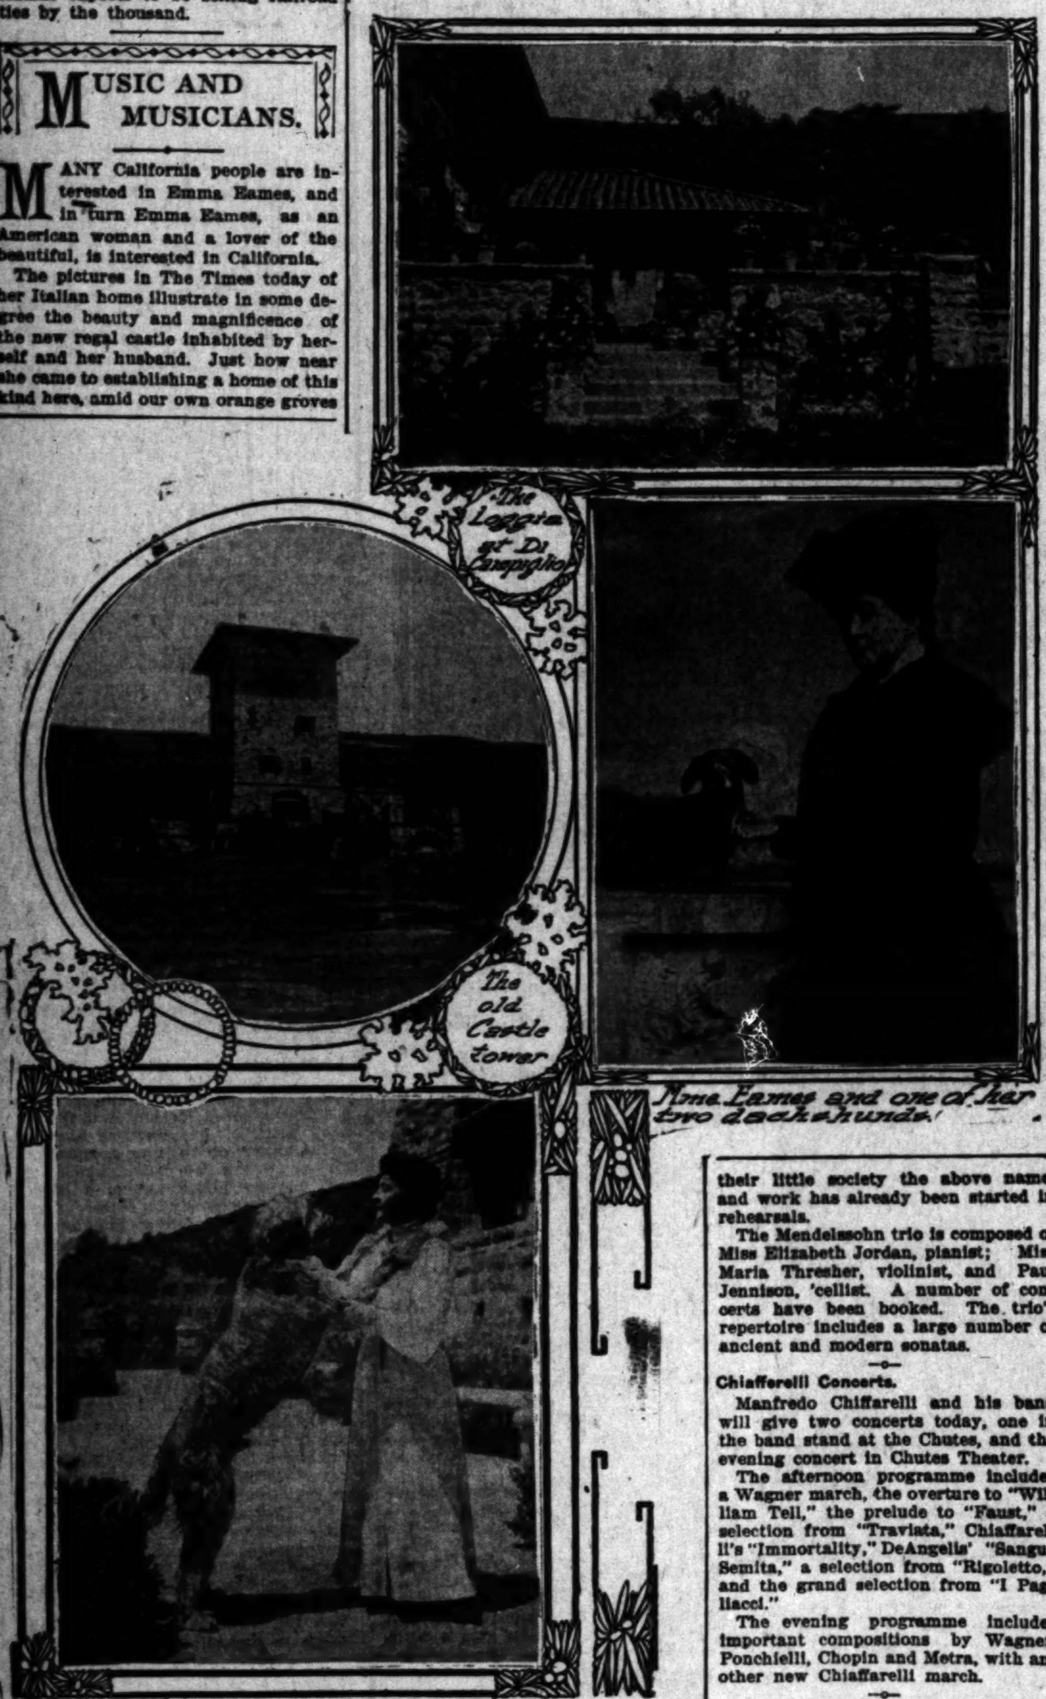
Maude Adams has placed an order with a Western nursery man for 200,000 young black locust trees, which she will have planted on the estate at Ronkonkoma, L. I. The land is to be worked systematically to aid the growth of the trees. Already 8000 of the saplings have been planted. They have been set out four feet apart, and are showing a gratifying rate of growth. Since Miss Adams, on advice of her physician, acquired the Long Island estate she has become an enthusiastic farmer. In a few years Miss Adams expects to be selling railroad ties by the thousand.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

MANY California people are interested in Emma Eames, and in turn Emma Eames, as an American woman and a lover of the beautiful, is interested in California.

The pictures in The Times today of her Italian home illustrate in some degree the beauty and magnificence of the new regal castle inhabited by herself and her husband. Just how near she came to establishing a home of this kind here, amid our own orange groves



The Loggia at Di Campiglio
The old Castle tower
Mme Eames and one of her two dachshunds
The Singer and the Shepherd dog

EMMA EAMES,
and her idyllic Italian home.

and olive orchards, only she and her artist mate will ever know.

It is a fact, not generally known, that at one time Mme. Eames intended to make this section of the country her permanent home, and also that she has just written to friends, telling them that her approaching visit here is looked forward to more pleasurably than any other in her manager's datebook.

But the husband of the American prima donna loves Italy better than any other place in the world, and so she went there to live. Many years ago W. W. Story, father of Julian Story, found the beauty of the Apennines to culminate in the stretch of land known at Vallambrosa. Even then the monastery of that name, founded in the tenth century, was in the hands of a few poor monks suffered to end their days under its roof on a tiny pittance from the Italian government. In this day the locality, long famed for its healthy atmosphere, offers peace and immunity from the world in a few hotels and sanitariums, and in a few isolated homes of American millionaires, reared upon the hill tops. Several Florentine families spent the hot season there, and the shooting park, which belonged to the Medici family, is now in the hands of Julian Story, Mme. Eames' husband. Campiglioni is their farm, and Torre di Campiglioni their home—which, being interpreted, signifies the abode of good-fellowship.

The Story house suggests a little court to the American. The building, with all its fifteenth century solidity, is as new as a frame dwelling on one of our new tracts in the western part of Los Angeles. Yet, every one of the rough stones that form the walls was taken from the estate, every bit of timber in the panelling and rafters from trees that grew in fields now cleared and cultivated. It was the original intention to drive through the wide doors that opened on the roadway directly into the great hall, after the manner of medieval days, but by degrees divans were introduced, book-shelves were put up, reading tables with big lamps were found, and the hall became the favorite lounging place of every one in the house. A broad staircase leads to the gallery which runs around two sides of the second floor, from which hang ancient silken banners and a few rare pieces of tapestry. The bed rooms open on this gallery, and are fitted up with an agreeable combination of new-world comfort and old-world elegance. The dining room and a reception room occupy the first floor of the tower, both of them set with quatro cento mantel pieces picked up by Mr. Story in the demolishment of an old Florentine palace.

There is another in the hall, fully ten feet high, and carved from solid stone with great care and delicacy. It was loaded on an ox-cart, and brought from the South in small sections. Several fine paintings hang upon the walls, and the library is stocked with operatic scores—but there is little evidence of the stage, either in adornment or equipment of these rooms.

Dogs are the particular delight of the owners of Il Torre. They are of all sizes, from one remarkable specimen built like a colt feathered like an ostrich and with the antics of a chimpanzee, to the little brown dachshunds who were the personal gift of Emperor William II, of Germany.

The life of the dwellers in Il Torre is delightfully normal. Breakfast and luncheon are simple, and the meals are served on the delicate green and white ware of the Cantegalli establishment in Florence. All the vegetables and fruits are raised on Mr. Story's farm, and the wine, of course, is made at home. Coffee is always served in the big hall, where the smoke of cigars and cigarettes will not affect the throat of the soprano. In the early hours of the afternoon a brief siesta is taken. Dinner is served informally, and the householders and their guests are not expected to "dress."

The Story farm is a financially paying establishment, in that it virtually keeps itself. In the farm buildings at the foot of the hills are the horses. The oxen live in the courtyard, and vehicles for elegant ox-driving are kept in the arch-way. Chickens have a home to themselves, farther down the hills, and the entire establishment is kept up with remarkable neatness. It is for this cleanliness in all departments that Mr. Story has made himself noted, and for which he has gallantly worked. He admits many discouragements in the conduct of his three farms, and says he finds frequently that his laborers have put aside modern American implements for the wooden plows and crude cultivators of Italy half a century ago.

The Storys entertain much, and dinner is the gathering time of all their guests and friends. The meal, served in the comfortable and simply furnished dining room, is not a season of formality, but of anecdote and narrative, with serious thought mingled with mild chaffing. Music comes in for a share, from the heaviest Wagnerian operas, to popular song hits of the American vaudeville stage, and the visitor is frequently entertained with sentimental ballads and bowery hits, laughingly gotten off by the great voice of a woman who will be remembered throughout musical history.

Chiafferelli Concerts.

Manfredo Chiffarelli and his band will give two concerts today, one in the band stand at the Chutes, and the evening concert in Chutes Theater.

The afternoon programme includes a Wagner march, the overture to "William Tell," the prelude to "Faust," a selection from "Traviata," Chiaffarelli's "Immortality," DeAngelis' "Sangue Semita," a selection from "Rigoletto," and the grand selection from "I Pagliacci."

The evening programme includes important compositions by Wagner, Ponchielli, Chopin and Metra, with another new Chiaffarelli march.

Musician Returns.

Miss Ethel Graham, who will return to Los Angeles this week after fourteen months in San Francisco and vicinity, has won much admiration in musical circles by her excellent soprano voice, and is regarded as a most progressive young artist.

While in Portland for a brief visit Miss Graham was the guest of Mrs. W. B. Hollingsworth.

—o—

Innes Removal.

Frederick Neil Innes and his band have removed their general offices from New York to Chicago, and the permanent home of the organiaztion is now in the Thomas Orchestral Hall. On October 15 Innes will inaugurate a series of concerts there, in his own words, "to establish a standard of artistic military band music, as Thomas established orchestral melody."

—o—

Seat Sale.

Seats are now on sale at Birkel's music store for the musical numbers of the Philharmonic course of entertainments, which will commence on October 19 with the concerts of the Heermans, eminent violinists.

Symphony Date Fixed.

At a meeting of the Symphony Orchestra directorate last Tuesday, a number of business matters were attended to, and the date of the first concert was fixed. It will be held on Friday, December 1.

Arend's Programmes.

Paul De Longpre conducted the rehearsals last week of his new descriptive piece, "The Tic-Tac of the Mill," which will be played this afternoon by Arend's Venice band. The arrangement of the number was made by Robert Messinger of Walter Damrosch's Symphony Orchestra, who has spent the summer playing at Venice. Other numbers on the afternoon programme are: "The Diplomat," (Sousa); waltzes from "The Tenderfoot," (Heartz); baritone solo, "For All Eternity," (Mascheroni); "Mexico," (Cole and Johnson); "Kate Kearney," (Fay and Oliver); overture from "William Tell," (Rossini); paraphrase on "Nearer My God to Thee," (Langey); selections from "The Mikado," (Sullivan); "Spring Song," (Mendelssohn); "Little Alabama Coon," (arranged by E. C. Kammermeyer); Xylophone solo, selected, Mr. Beesely; "Songs of the Fatherland," (Andauer); "Auld Lang Syne."

The evening programme will be as follows: "Jack Tar," (Sousa); "The Skaters," (Waldteufel); cornet solo, "The Venice Girl," composed by Robert Messinger especially for Mr. Stoudemeyer, "The Teaser," by Mr. Arend; "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," (Van Alstyne); "Parsifal," (Wagner); "Dance of the Hours" from "La Gioconda," (Ponchielli); Sextette from "Lucia," (Donizetti); "Orpheus," (Offenbach); "Old Black Joe."

Tamagno's Fortune and Vanity.

Tamagno is said to have left a fortune of 4,500,000 lire, or pretty close on to $1,000,000. This, it is said, might have been more had he not given all his Italian earnings to the poor during the last eight years. In his will he directed that his body be embalmed, placed in a lead coffin, and this be permanently deposited in a chapel to which his admirers were to have access, so that they might look upon his face as often as they pleased. To this end the cover of the coffin was to be made of heavy plate glass. The provision, it is said, is not likely to be fulfilled, for sanitary reasons. Some philanthropic institutions in Varese received bequests, but the bulk of the large fortune is left to his married daughter, to whom the tenor was passionately devoted. It was for her sake, says his German manager in an article printed in the Berlin "Tageblatt," that Tamagno was so niggardly in his expenditures. He would begrudge the toll which he had to pay on a telegram; but once, on hearing of his daughter's illness, he broke an engagement at St. Petersburg and hurried to her bedside in Milan, though it cost him 40,000 rubles.

The same writer makes some interesting contributions to the stock of stories touching Tamagno's parsimony. He sat with the tenor at supper at the Hotel Bristol, in Berlin, after the first performance of "Le Prophete" at the Royal Opera in 1897. Tamagno's order was two eggs and a bottle of water. To the latter he added some wine from a bottle which he drew from his pocket, and which he had carried away from a dinner given in his honor at Prague two days before. At a hotel in Moscow he became incensed because new candles were placed in his rooms every day, notwithstanding that the old ones were but little burned. He suspected that the scheme had been contrived by the servants in order to squeeze money out of him, and resolved to get even with them. Every morning he hid away the slightly used candles, and when at the end of his stay of four weeks the servants gathered about him to receive what they supposed would be princely tips he presented them with the candle ends—one twenty, another thirty, another ten, and so on, as he had estimated their various deserts. His frugal meals were not all due to his greed for money, however. He had simple tastes, and his manager relates that at a banquet given in his honor in Paris, which cost 11,000 francs, he ate a ham sandwich and drank vin ordinaire, while the other guests were eating the best that Paillard could provide and drinking Mouton-Rothschild of the vintage of 1858. Tamagno admired Wagner, but did not believe that his music could or ought to be sung by Italians. In private, however, he frequently sang the music of "Siegmund" and "Tannhäuser," and he admired Shubert and was especially fond of Brahms.

The vanity displayed by Tamagno in the ordering of his final resting place is characteristic of singers and may serve as well as anything to illustrate the effect upon his character of the flattery of the public. He who could wash his own socks in a Broadway hotel to avoid a laundry bill and carry wine from a banquet table to drink in public in a hotel restaurant two days later rather than order a fresh bottle, though he had just earned 5000 marks by singing a single evening, was nevertheless such an egotist that he thought posterity would desire to gaze on his dead features. His conceit prompted him to the wish to be his own monument. He dreaded to become merely a memory and a name. In a way he recalls the famous Caffarelli, who was the great Farinelli's successor in London in the first half of the eighteenth century. He, too, earned a fortune by singing, growing wealthy enough to buy an Italian dukedom for his nephew. For himself he built a magnificent palace, over the doors of which he put an inscription, modestly likening his powers to those of fabled Amphion.

Art and Artists.

Ars Servatrix.

(On Reading Wm. Morris's "Hopes and Fears for Art.")

We grow less worthy as the years roll by;
Our common life is an incarnate wrong.
We fight where victory is to the strong,
Ill is our good, and low alone is high.
Gold is our God, and whoso hath can buy
The land, the lives, the honor of the throng;
No ancient pride doth to our age belong;
Aimless we live, and therefore hopeless die.

Come, rich-robed Mistress, hid so long a while!
We look for thee stern-visaged, as is meet,
For well we know thy service will be pain
Till we have much renounced. Then thou wilt smile,
And in thy smile a stately life and sweet
Will rise, and Labor bringing Beauty in its train.

HENRY NORMAN.

Tolstoi's "What is Art?"

"Have I read Tolstoi's 'What is Art?' and what do I think of it?" the Lay Figure spoke in an irritated voice. "Yes, I have read, and reread it, and tried to bring myself to take it as something worth fighting, but I must own I cannot."

"Surely that is intolerant," said the Man with a Clay Pipe; "if it annoys you, it must do so either because it tells you unpleasant truths, or distorts truths to support a preconceived antagonism."

"How can one dispute seriously with a writer who says, 'People of our time and of our society are delighted with Baudelaires, Verlaines, Moréases, Ibsens, and Maeterlincks in poetry; with Monets, Manets, Puvis de Chavannes, Burne-Joneses, Stucks, and Boecklins in painting; with Wagners, Liszts, Richard Strausses in music; and they are no longer capable of comprehending either the highest or the simplest art?'"

"Exactly! it seems to me a fair argument that people who love highly spiced dishes lose their appetite for wholesome food." The Man with a Clay Pipe spoke as if he did not quite mean what he said to be taken literally.

"An excellently obvious argument," returned the Lay Figure, "but not obviously excellent. Why is Burne-Jones more 'highly spiced,' to use your own phrase, and therefore unwholesome, than Walter Langley's 'Beggar Boy,' or Millet's 'Man With a Hoe,' which Count Tolstoi praises? The book is merely the logical outcome of the morbid religionist who, whether in Charles Kingsley's 'Hypatia,' in the New England puritanism, or in certain sectarians today, would fain model or mould on his own conceptions of religion all his effort to save his 'dirty little soul,' to quote Kingsley. Mind, I do not dispute his right to his own view, but I dispute entirely his right to force it on me. If art be indeed a horribly obscene, vicious lure to him, let him spurn it, and we can respect his doing so; but I do not care to defame my ideals by allowing that he can be right. A diseased mind sees all things askew; but if we have not distorted views ourselves, we can forgive his honest, if wholly distorted vision, and even respect his courage in giving it words."

"But this is only counter-assertion," the Man with a Clay Pipe observed; "not a real argument. I wish you would take Tolstoi's charges one by one and refute them, or else own that they are irrefutable."

The Lay Figure laughed.

"Am I to prove concurrently that the earth is round not flat, that parallel lines never meet, that the present century began with 1901 not 1900, that to confuse didactic teaching with esthetic is mere nonsense? Why, man, the rest of human existence, if the argument were continued by each generation until the world became uninhabitable, would be too short to convince people who had taken the fallacy of each statement seriously."

"I think Count Tolstoi is worth less flippant treatment," he replied.

"Was I speaking disrespectfully of your equator? If so, I apologize humbly," the Lay Figure replied. "To me, the whole of the Russian nobleman's manifesto is on the level with that of the ranter at the street-corner. I think religion and art are both noble enough to be discussed with open minds. If before the case is brought into court your opponent says that a mass of hearsay evidence he has to submit must not be questioned but accepted blindly, that the law as it is written or practiced must be put aside, and the case argued on lines he prefers to lay down, why, then, a wise man does not go into court at all."

"Then you really wish me to believe that you, a mere nobody, deem an author of world-wide reputation too unimportant to confute," said the Man with a Clay Pipe.

"If you put it that way, all right," the Lay Figure replied good-naturedly. "At times one must even risk the charge of behaving like a cad. If my bootmaker discusses leather, I bow to his opinion; if he discusses art, I wait until he proves his incapacity, and turn the subject."

The Man with a Clay Pipe put it down and burst into a Homeric peal of laughter. "I quite agree with you," he said. "Count Tolstoi is——"

"An entirely honorable man, whom I respect most sincerely. A man that I reverence the more because pity is akin to love. But, as Robert Louis Stevenson said to Whitman, I regard him as a bull in a china-shop—a well-intentioned bull—but all the same not an expert to wrangle with, merely an admirable instance of vital energy in the wrong place."—[International Studio.

A Good and Gifted Painter.

In a review of a new volume of personal memoirs, "G. F. Watts; Reminiscenses," by Mrs. Russell Barrington, a writer in the New York Tribune says:

Watts was never a rich man, though for years the impression was widespread that he had private means, painted only to please himself, and lived, in short, like some happy poet, lifted above life's troubles and responsibilities in an ivory tower. The truth is that he seems always to have been in modest circumstances, if not at times actually cramped for money, and his daily habits, as Mrs. Barrington describes them, were not unlike those of an anchorite. The author of this book, who long lived in the next house, and helped him in his work, was wont to visit him with her husband in the evenings, reading to him as he ate his supper. "The meal was always the same," she says, "the cold remains of the dull little pudding made, without sugar, which had been hot for his dinner in the middle of the day and a tumbler of milk mixed with barley water; summer and winter, never any change. Even out of this very simple fare Watts, if he was tired, would evolve a tragic self-reproach. To have as much as that distressed him; and when he thought of all the people who were starving he could hardly eat it." The story is characteristic. Since the idea of painting for money was merely loathsome to him, the sale of a picture somehow getting on his nerves, no matter what the circumstances were, he got into the habit not only of eschewing luxuries, but of rubbing along in the simplest possible fashion, a dreamer, shrinking like a child from the hard realities of life. It gave his personality a curious aloofness, but it did not make him any the less lovable. On the contrary, his friends seem only to have cared for him the more in proportion as he confirmed himself in his detached, reflective ways. They called him "Signor," looked upon him as upon a being peculiarly apart from themselves, and entered his sphere, if not with bated breath, at all events with a consciousness that they were treading what was, in some sort, consecrated ground. A friend of his once said to Mrs. Barrington, "There is something about Watts which would make it impossible for anyone to say a coarse thing in his presence."

Mrs. Barrington has some interesting notes on her painter's methods. He did not care to work from models, though, of course, the experience was not unknown to him. At the same time, he was a patient and even assiduous observer of reality. He used to go in the afternoons to the aquarium. "It taught him much in his study of the human form to watch the acrobatic performances which took place there. He took an interest in Zazelle, the girl who was shot from the cannon, and painted a striking head of her." But mostly he got his inspiration from the Elgin m and from the greatest of the tians. "He told me," says Mr rington, "he was always in nature.' One evening, as standing on the lawn in hi at Little Holland House, and the light of late afternoon was

We are always coming back way to the personal side of th turesque figure in Victorian art, qualities which may not have him a great painter, but which, taken all together, somehow above the little men. Mrs. B throws light, as we have on his technical method. She how he dried the oil out of his

how he hated new brushes and

Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Boothe are again at home at No. 3824 South Bonnie Brae street, having spent the summer at Terminal Island. Miss Helen Boothe, Miss Sarah Boothe and Earle Boothe have just returned from a three-months' trip over the seas. They first went to Honolulu, and also visited Samoa and Sydney, Australia.

—o—

Groesbeck-Guenther.

Invitations have recently been received by friends to the marriage of Miss Margaret Guenther and Sayre Groesbeck, both known in Los Angeles. Miss Guenther is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Guenther of Chicago, and Mr. Groesbeck is a cartoonist on the staff of the Chicago Tribune, formerly on a newspaper in this city. Miss Guenther was here about five years ago and though the daughter of a capitalist, society pleasures palled upon her and she took the nurse's training in the County Hospital and graduated in three years. She was one of the most ambitious and best nurses ever in the training school. A beautiful girl, she won many friends during her residence here.

—o—

Spend Winter There.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Patterson are planning to spend the winter in their pretty Terminal Island home, and a number of other prominent Angelenos will be there. Mr. and Mrs. Roy Pinkham also intend making their winter at the island and Mr. and Mrs. E. Armstrong are there, while the Harry Callenders expect to stay until late in the season. Mr. and Mrs. C. Miller have taken the George J. Denis cottage for the winter.

Mrs. Boschke, who calls herself the "Grandmother of Terminal," is now on a visit to her son in Portland and expects to return the first of the week.

—o—

Guests at Box Party.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Otis, who have been spending the summer at Redondo, have decided to remain through the winter. Recently they entertained with a box party in honor of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Kingsbury of Tempe, Arizona, who have been staying at the beach resort during the summer. The Kingsburys have just returned to their home. They spend the summer here every year with their daughter, Miss Nona, who is a pupil at Marlborough School. They are charming people and have made many friends here during their visits.

—o—

When in Los Angeles Mrs. Hartzell gave addresses on Africa at Westlake and First M. E. churches, which were marked with intense fervor and religious enthusiasm, and her many friends may be pleased to know her present location, No. 150 Fifth avenue, New York City.

—o—

Return from Portland.

Mr. and Mrs. William S. Cross of West Twenty-ninth street, accompanied by their small daughter, Miss Estelle, have recently returned from a trip to the Portland Exposition and other points of interest in the north. Mrs. Cross and her small daughter spent the early part of the summer at Coronado and were home a few weeks before going North.

—o—

Prominent Girl's Engagement.

Society will be interested to learn of the announcement of the engagement of one of the favorite girls and a popular young bachelor.

Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Newell of No. 915 Westlake avenue announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Maude, to Phillip Wilson, the wedding date being set for November 8, at the home of the bride.

Last evening the formal announcement was made to a company of a dozen friends who were guests of Mr. and Mrs. David Edgar Llewellyn of No 1935 South Figueroa street at a beautiful little dinner given in compliment to the couple.

The table was decked with a graceful arrangement of creamy Maman Couchet roses and soft fern fronds and the color scheme throughout the room was cream color which merged into a delicate shade of pink. Place cards were heart shaped and contained the announcement in gold lettering and were tied with pale pink ribbons. Toasts were made to the couple, and wit and merriment flew high around the pretty table.

No more popular young people in society have been wedded of late and Madame Grundy takes a personal interest in these two. Miss Newell is a beautiful girl, with soft brown hair and eyes and dainty coloring and has the knack of always being stunningly gowned. Mr. Wilson is a prominent young business man and has been unusually successful in making money. He is a graduate of Stanford and was a member of the Sigma Nu fraternity and has always been greatly interested in athletics, having coached many of the Los Angeles football teams for the large college games.

Wild Rose Whist Club.

The opening of the whist season was celebrated by the Wild Rose Whist Club last Thursday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William Sale, 1365 East Washington street. The parlors were beautifully decorated, smilax, Marie Henrietta roses and geraniums being used effectively.

A musical programme was rendered by Mrs. Farnsworth and Mrs. Pierce. The first prize at whist was won by Mr. James Ritchie, while the consolation fell to Miss Holmes. After serving of light refreshments the club adjourned to meet at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Schofield Thursday evening, Oct. 19. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, Mr. George Rushton and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Torrie, Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Holden, Mr. and Mrs. Schofield, Mr. and Mrs. James Ritchie, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. McPherson, Mr. and Mrs. Fox, Mr. and Mrs. Farnsworth, Mr. and Mrs. William Sale, Miss Brown, Miss Holmes, Mr. Goodwin, Mr. Ellis.

To be Stunning Affair.

The directors of the Children's Hospital are planning to give a similar entertainment to "The House that Jack Built," which proved such a success recently. This time it is to be "The Toyshop," written by Miss Ganos, which is said to be as clever as "The House that Jack Built," and filled with catchy music and pretty costumes. The performance is to be given at the Mason Operahouse some time in January, and though no exact date has been set, ladies interested are already making grand preparations and society will be in this quite as much as in the other play. Miss Martin, who directed "The House that Jack Built," is on her way out here and Mrs. Stephen W. Dorsey, who so successfully engineered the other play, is again at the helm.

For Lovely Bride-elect.

Miss Lillian Harris, who is to become the bride of Robert H. Adams on the evening of October 11, has been the fêted guest at many pretty parties of late, and one of the most charming was the luncheon given on Wednesday by Miss Gertrude McCaffery at the Jonathan Club. The table was decorated with a beautiful arrangement of bride roses and maidenhair ferns, and place cards were daintily hand-decorated affairs. After the elaborate luncheon the guests were entertained at the Orpheum with a box party. Besides the fair bride-elect and hostess there were present: Mrs. Thomas McCaffery, Mrs. A. J. Copp, Mrs. Hezmalhalch, Mrs. Guy Barham, Mrs. Phillip Zobelein, Madame Josef Rubo and Misses Mabel Garvey, Anne Walker Nona Taylor, Edith Harris and Edith Pell.

Another enjoyable affair for this popular bride-elect was the informal musical given by Miss Edith Pell of South Grand avenue on Friday afternoon. The entire home was a bower of soft-hued blossoms, and in the dining-room, where a jolly luncheon was served, the table presented a glorious riot of dainty color. Pink gauze ribbons of varying shades formed a soft canopy, and lover's knots of the same added a pretty touch to the table which held a basket of pink flox tied with airy bows of the gauze.

Those who contributed to the musical programme were: Mrs. William James Chick, Mrs. O. L. Bailey, Mrs. Phillip Zobelein, Miss Gerta Hatch, Miss Harris and Miss Pell.

Other guests included: Mrs. Taggart, Mrs. W. J. Chick, Mrs. G. L.

Harris, Mrs. Hezmalhalch, Mrs. Zobelein, Mrs. Brailey, and Misses Gerta Hatch, Rose Zobelein, Anne Walker, Nona Taylor, Gertrude McCaffery, Edith Harris and Mrs. Morris.

Miss Clara Smith of West Twenty-second street, entertained on Thursday evening for Miss Harris and Mr. Adams with a lovely little musicale, and Rose Smith entertained at his home on La Salle avenue with a stag dinner on Saturday evening in compliment to Mr. Adams.

Miss Nona Taylor of No. 1443 Pleasant avenue was hostess on Friday evening at an enjoyable little evening affair given for the same popular couple, and she was assisted by Miss Janice Meredith of Berkeley, who is a house guest of Miss Taylor and who has come from the North to assist as bridesmaid at the Harris-Adams nuptials.

Music and games were enjoyed and the home was prettily decked with white roses and greenery. A jolly feature of the evening was the miscellaneous shower with which the couple were surprised. There were steins and pipes and other men's delights brought by the young bachelors present, and all sorts of dainty trinkets for the dainty girl bride.

Pretty Home Wedding.

A pretty home wedding was that of Miss Lillian Spear and George D. Barnett, the wedding taking place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Spear of No. 122 North Avenue 22. The home was prettily decorated for the occasion with white wedding bells and carnations and ferns. The couple stood beneath a canopy of ferns and floral wedding bells and the handsome bride wore an exquisite little gown of fine white Chinese linen, heavily adorned with hand embroidery and carried a shower cluster of white carnations. Mrs. Nettie Wass acted as matron of honor and was attired in a becoming costume of cream etamine. W. H. Dutton acted as best man and Rev. J. S. Forbes of the East Side Congregational Church performed the service. After the ceremony a dainty bridal supper was served in the dining-room which was decorated with a charming arrangement of pink wedding bells and ferns. Little Miss Zola Brackett, thirteen years old, rendered the wedding music. Only a few friends and relatives witnessed the ceremony and Mr. and Mrs. Barnett have gone on a short wedding tour after which they will make their home at No. 230B North Olive street. The bride's going away gown was of brown silk, with touches of Alice blue and blue turban.

The strength of every department of this great store lies in the sterling merit of the goods. Whether it be a coat or a costume; a waist or a suit; a hat or a glove; a corset or a stocking every lady patron is safe in the assurance that it is new and correct, crisp from the mold of fashion and sold as low as many lacking these pleasing merits.

Without a scrap of trash at any price, this great establishment offers to the ladies of Los Angeles and Southern California, the best of everything in four floors of fresh new Fall goods.

A Hint of Fall Suit Values

All wool English Tweed with a choice of plain and fancy mixtures. The new long-coat effect; the body and sleeves lined with silk; collar handsomely trimmed with bands of velvet lending an effect stylish and striking. Pretty grays in light, medium or dark shades. Equal in quality to any suits shown elsewhere up to $27.50 and in taste and fashion without a peer at double the price.

THERE'S REAL MERIT IN SUITS LIKE THESE.

Curtains at Half

What do you care whether we have two pairs or twenty, so long as you find the number you want in a pattern that pleases you?

But it makes a difference to US when we've only two or three patterns of a kind—we'd rather let them go at a loss than have the stocks cluttered up.

The collection arranged for tomorrow's selling offers a wide choice to wanters of really elegant curtains as well as in the moderately priced sorts named below:

New patterns in Irish Point, Brussels net, cross-striped madras, corded Arabians, etc., at just half what their duplicates brought.

to $4 cross-striped madras curtains in three color-combinations at $1 to $2 a pair.

Brussels Point curtains—plenty of heavy work—$7.50 quality at $3.75 pair.

to $6 Irish Point and corded Arabian curtains, $2 to $4 a pair.

Forty to fifty pairs of excellent ruffled muslin curtains—some of them slightly soiled from having been used as samples—dollar a pair; some of them were $2.50.

Splendid assortment of highly mercerized Portieres fringed top and bottom, in Oriental effects and rich color-combinations, $2.50 a pair; really worth $5.00.

22-inch floss-filled pillows, covered with pretty cretonnes, sateens, etc., fifty cents—would be unusually big values at twice as much.

Laces 15c

Values up to 50c

6 to 12-inch Net Top Laces of the grade we have to sell, when bought in the regular run of business, at 25c to 50c a yard can be had tomorrow at FIFTEEN cents.

The overloaded importer stands the loss.

(Main Floor, Right Aisle.)

Handkerchiefs

25c values, 6 for 75c

Along about Christmas time when you feel like buying a few dozen handkerchiefs, you'll find this sort selling at double tomorrow's prices:

Women's hdkfs. of sheer all-linen, hand-hemmed, and with hand-embroidered initials, 15c or 6 for 75c.

(Main Floor, Right Aisle.)

Antherea Lining Silks 58 Cents

"Antherea" needs no words of recommendation to users of lining silks—everybody, you might say, is ready to admit that there is nothing better at the price.

But to make sure that you get the real Antherea when you ask for it, see that the name is printed on the selvage.

And when anything is offered for LESS than 58c a yard you can be sure it's not Antherea—for the Antherea's price is set by the makers and must be maintained by every seller from Maine to California. No other store in the Southwest carries it in so many different shades as we do.

High Class Millinery

"Satisfying in every respect" is the unanimous verdict of all who view our showing of millinery.

Velvet, Silk and French Felt models vie so successfully with their trimmings of Waterfall or long French Plumes, the oval crowns and perfectly graduated brims, forming an ensemble of refined taste which marks them as "perfection in headgear;" the ingenious style touches lent by gold and silver flowers, or maybe an addition of gold braid—all go to vouchsafe that master skill in a choice of millinery for which this store is famous throughout the Southwest.

30c to 75c Wash Stuffs at 15c

And they're STAPLE stuffs—pretty striped madras cloths and ginghams, fancy white stuffs and a few plain linen suitings.

Not claiming that there are a great many 75c goods in the lot, but there ARE many 40c and 50c grades, and none of them sold, early in the season, for less than 30c.

Probably a thousand yards to be sold tomorrow at fifteen cents a yard. Wise women will anticipate some of next summer's needs.

Drapery Stuffs

Truly remarkable how cosily a house can be fixed up with a few dollars' worth of these stuffs:

36-inch colored curtain muslin on plain, barred, and lace striped grounds—pretty effects in pink, green, blue, yellow, etc., for bed spreads and curtains—yard, 15c, 20c and 25c.

45-inch cross-stripe silks in soft, rich color combinations that make them especially desirable for drapes and overcurtains—$1.00, $1.25 and $1.50 a yd.

50-inch cream figured madras—floral and conventional designs on fine, lacy grounds that will prove surprisingly durable—50c, 60c, and 75c a yd.

Yard-wide curtain Swiss of good durable quality in dotted and figured patterns, specially priced at ten cents a yard.

(Third Floor.)

Rugs Reduced

With unmatchably low prices on so many different kinds of Rugs it's no wonder we're enjoying Christmas-like activity in this department despite the hot weather.

30x60-inch double-sided Smyrna Rugs in Turkish and Persian designs—the sorts generally sold at $2.50, now..........$1.50

30x60-inch double-sided Smyrna Rugs of the extra heavy quality—handsome in design and coloring—the three-dollar grade, now $1.75

65 or 70 genuine Oriental rugs, mats and saddle bags ranging in size from 16x24 inches to 18x36 inches—the sorts generally sold at $5 to $6; here tomorrow at....$2.50

Larger Oriental Rugs—sizes 3½x4 ft. to 4½x5 and 6 ft.—the soft, silky kinds that generally bring $15 to $25 each will be sold tomorrow at $10.50

Best quality Bigelow Wilton Rugs, 9x12 ft., sold everywhere at $40, here at $29.75; size 8 ft. 3 inches by 10 ft. 6 inches at $27.50

Women's Hosiery at About Half

Women's fine lisle-thread stockings of the 50c, 75c and $1 grades buyable tomorrow at three pairs for $1—an offering made possible by our taking advantage of a misunderstanding between the German makers and the importers. They came too late for the Summer trade in the East, and were rejected. The makers turned the account over to the great banking house of Knauth, Nachod and Kuhne, who sold us the lot at practically half the import price. Included are: Lace boot effects, all-over lace effects, embroidered laces and plain stockings in white, black and every wanted shade.

Men's 35c to 75c Half Hose 25c

25c for men's fancy half hose of the grade and patterns sold throughout America at 35c to 75c.

The reason for it is found in the German maker's desire to make quick riddance of his season's samples. We took 2400 pairs at practically half regular wholesale rates.

Freight Charges Paid

On all purchases amounting to $5 or more, EXCEPT C.O.D. PACKAGES, we prepay the freight or express charges to any railroad station in Southern California within 100 miles of Los Angeles.

Mail Order Department

If you are anywhere near a postoffice you're within trading distance of this store. Write us about anything that can be classed as Dry Goods. No catalogue.

Undermuslin Sale

Sample Garments

At Little Above Half

The sample line from which this and many other high-class stores chose underwear for this season's selling.

No trash in the collection—a total absence of the skimpily cut, carelessly sewn and flashily trimmed garments such as are usually made up for "sale" purposes will be noted at first glance.

Undermuslins that appeal to the most particular dressers at prices that appeal to the economical—prices a third to a half under what we've been getting all season for the very same kinds.

50c Corset Covers	25c
$1 Corset Covers	50c
$1.50 Corset Covers	90c
$3 Corset Covers	$2.00

and so on up to the $10 grades at $6.

50c Drawers at	25c
$1.50 Drawers at	90c
$2 Drawers at	$1.10
$3.50 Drawers at	$2
$1 Gowns	50c
$1.50 Gowns at	90c
$2 Gowns at	$1.10
$5 Gowns at	$3.00

And so on up to the $17.50 grades now selling at $11.

$1 Skirts at	50c
$3.50 Skirts at	$2
$5 Skirts at	$3
$8 Skirts at	$5
$18 Skirts at	$12

Same rate of reduction on chemises.

25c to 40c Dress Shields 15c

Dress shields of the best quality stockinet have an established value all over the United States—25c to 40c pair.

It is only by some very unusual happenings in the wholesale market that we were able to get twenty gross of them at a price that lets us sell them at fifteen cents a pair. Sizes 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5.

(Notion Department, Left Aisle.)

Art Dept. Specials

With a wealth of French, English and American novelties for the Holiday trade pouring in, it becomes absolutely necessary to clear the stocks of all odd lots and broken lines. If you've any gift-gathering to do, a stroll through our Art Dept. will disclose many a chance to pick up sensible, useful gifts at a third or more under regular. A few of tomorrow's special offerings:

Drawn work sofa pillows made of heavy ecru linen with drawn-work designs in each corner—very effective, and easily laundered—each...$1.50

5 and 6-inch cut glass Bon Bons and olive dishes in many odd shapes and sizes—new designs and lustrous cuttings—$3 and $3.50 values at $2.50.

8-inch cut-glass salad and berry bowls—handsome designs, deeply cut—six dollar values specially priced at $3.50

Dainty dresser sets of blue and green cretonne, with trimmed edges—set consisting of dresser scarf, sofa pillow, shoe and laundry bag, paper basket, table cover, etc., specially priced by the set at.......$4

Sapphire Corsets

The dressmaker may have a good deal to do with the fit of your gown; but unless you let her work over a perfectly-fitted corset, she will be sadly handicapped. The "Sapphire" is the right sort—human hands can make no better corset. The new models, with high bust, long waist and long back effect are superbly made and possess a rare combination of beauty and comfort. Ask to be fitted with a Sapphire.

(Rear of Annex.)

Chiffon Veils 35c

Fully fifty dozen white chiffon veils of the sorts we've been selling all season at 75c and $1 are to be sold tomorrow at thirty-five cents each.

Full yard and a half long, and of extra fine quality.

Somebody is losing heavily, but it is not us, and it's not through any fault of the veils, so you may as well profit by the conditions.

(Veiling Dept., Near Elevators.)

Rare Values in Stationery.

"Irish Poplin"—a fabric finished paper of exceptional quality—at fifty cents a pound, with 50 envelopes to match. When you see it you won't wonder that the demand has been so great that our supply often ran short. White, blue and gray, in various shapes.

35 New Regal Models Just Received from the Regal Factories, and Ready to Try On This Week in All the Regal Stores

These new styles include a wider range of shapes than it has ever before been possible to make up and still preserve faultless every line and detail of the correct originals.

All you have to do is to find the model that suits your ideas and then have the salesman bring you the size that suits your foot.

Both easy enough in a Regal store but almost out of the question anywhere else. For among the thirty-five new shapes you will find the exact combination of leather and outline that a fashionable custom bootmaker would build up for you. And your size is simply a selection from 33 quarter-size lengths and 8 widths.

Three good reasons why your new Fall shoes should be Regals:

Quarter sizes make you sure of perfect fit—and you can't be sure of it with the half-size limit in the general shoe store.

The Regal is worn by the best-dressed people in the country—and everybody knows it. You are sure of all the made-to-order style that can be modeled into shoe-leather by good old-fashioned hand workmanship.

You are sure of all the long wear that can be built into shoes. Not one square inch of doubtful leather in a thousand pairs of Regals! One kind of sole-stock—genuine, solid live-oak bark tannage. Eleven kinds of upper leather to choose from—every one the highest grade produced. Silk stitching all through, and all the hidden inside parts as honest as the rest.

Six-dollar shoes (and better) at the wholesale price, sold direct from us to you,—"from tannery to consumer."

$3.50 (Special Custom Bench-Made, $4.) Some of the new Regals have been made up to meet a demand from many of our old and new customers for a shoe built in a little more expensive way than the regular Regal line—an evidence of the same desire for fine-finished apparel that creates the demand for full silk-lined overcoats. The advantages of the special $4 models over the $3.50 Regal are in their extra custom features. All of the leathers and other materials in them are the best of the best; they have little more handwork; a little more silk stitching; round-cornered tops; calfskin lining inside the hooks; wide, gold-lettered leather top facing; plain black strap; special custom-finish on the sole, etc. They are bench-made shoes that represent the finest handicraft of the most skilled New England shoemakers—and few genuine custom-made $12 shoes equal their handsome appearance. Their extra features are more than worth the small additional price.

MEN AND THINGS OVER THE SEAS.

What Some Great Navies Cost.

The growth of the navies of the world during the past fifteen years is on a scale of magnitude that the general public hardly realizes. The annual increases have been so gradual and insidious that the full jump made escapes notice. Only when we take the figures of two years separated by a considerable interval can the significance of the movement be appreciated. The year 1902-03 is the latest that permits of a general comparison. Let its figures of naval cost be contrasted with those of 1889-90, thirteen years earlier. Great Britain more than doubled her expenditure, raising it from $85,000,000 to $172,500,000; France increased hers by a full third—from $40,000,000 to $60,000,000; both Russia and Germany multiplied their disbursements by three times, putting up the total to $60,000,000 in the case of the former power, and $50,000,000 in the case of the latter; while the United States shows an only slightly smaller proportionate advance—from $30,000,000 to $82,500,000. And the upward movement still goes on; for example, in 1903-04 the United States spent $115,000,000 on her navy, and Great Britain no less an amount than [illegible].

The Contest of the Long Purse.

Will the next peace conference at The Hague do anything to arrest these alarming increments of expenditure? The lavish use of money is prompted by no actual necessity in the ordinary course of things, but simply by the jealousy or the distrust of the powers, each determined not to be left lagging behind the others in the struggle to maintain a position deemed necessary for its own security in face of the rapidly-increasing naval armaments of its possible antagonists. It is obvious that the present game is simply one of "beggar my neighbor." Which nation will be the first to be compelled by financial exigencies to throw up the sponge? This question suggests the extreme danger of the existing order of things. At present the contest is one of the purse rather than of the guns; but when the purse shows signs of giving out, the guns may be invoked as the last desperate gambler's throw in the ruinous contest. There is talk of the peace conference being delayed until 1907, but in face of such considerations it cannot assemble a day too soon.

Germany's Quest for Allies.

As the efforts to readjust the balance of power in Europe proceed, the position of isolation occupied by Germany becomes emphasized. All her efforts to draw France into a German-Russian combination have so far failed; as a recent dispatch from St. Petersburg sums up the issue, "France will refuse to enter any political combination in the Far East, of which Germany forms a part, on account of the French mistrust of the Kaiser's sincerity of action or intention." This attitude of France, brought about in no small degree by the German Emperor's brusque handling of the Morocco question, distinctly makes for a better understanding between Russia and Great Britain. If Persia were declared a neutral land with its territorial integrity secured under international guarantee, just as Belgian territory is at present safeguarded from invasion on the part of either France or Germany, the last serious cause of friction between the British and the Russian empires would disappear. And obviously a much simpler adjustment then could be the reconciling of the Austrian-German and Russian interests throughout the Balkan States, Turkey and Asia Minor.

Russian Poland.

Just to take one example as to how these interests clash, let the German view of concessions by the Czar to his Polish subjects be considered. Germany has her own big slice of the old kingdom of Poland, and her own difficulty of keeping a tight seat on the saddle. The nationalist aspirations are just as keen and undying in German-Poland as in Russian-Poland, and in both cases it is simply military force that keeps them suppressed. Germany has no intention of relaxing her tight hand on her Polish subjects, and, as her official press shows, she views with strong disfavor any action of the kind across the frontier in Russian-Poland; for any concessions made there would undoubtedly rouse the jealous and disaffected Polish population in Germany.

Is Russia to jeopardize the pacification of her own empire so that Germany may be saved from trouble? The day of reform has dawned in Russia, and nothing now can stay the movement. Poland for the time being is excluded from the measure of parliamentary representation already granted to the people of Russia proper. But that this exclusion can remain permanent is impossible; neither the Poles themselves nor the Russian party of reform would rest satisfied, while the Czar's own rescript on the point merely delays the extension of similar rights to Poland as to the other sections of Russia until the special difficulties involved can be arranged. These special difficulties are, in fact, Germany's pronounced opposition to concessions to the Poles anywhere or in any shape or form. Therefore if the Czar is drawn into alliance with Germany, and is thereby committed to a policy of treating Polish subjects with harsh and unbending severity, it will mean a recrudescence of insurrectionary disturbances in Poland that will react over the whole empire.

AMONG MEN OF ACTION.

"Yes, sir, I'm in politics. That's why I wear this button," said Rev. George Bough, formerly of this city, now of San Francisco, proudly displaying a badge on his coat lappel. "I have come back to Los Angeles once in a while to see how fast you grow down here. I want to tell you that San Francisco is going to have for its next Mayor a man who has taken the Ten Commandments for his political principles, and that is his face you are looking at on this button I am wearing. J. S. Partridge—a young man of only [illegible] and he has dedicated himself to the redemption of San Francisco. He is the nominee of both the Republican and the Democratic parties and is bound to win the campaign. He is a native son of California, was born in San Francisco, a lawyer by profession and when he was Assistant City Attorney he distinguished himself by forcing the Spring Valley Water Company to open up and show up the condition of affairs on its books—and he was the only man who could do it. He is bound to be one of the great men of America. You watch his career from now on. He has been a professor of science in the Lowell High School in San Francisco for seven years. This is the first office he has ever run for and he has received the unanimous nomination of both. I could take the stump myself if it was necessary," [illegible] of the enthusiastic divine [illegible] enthusiasm.

[illegible] was a lawyer and a business man himself before he entered the ministry and was for several years the very successful president of a commercial college here. Since his call to the pulpit of a prominent San Francisco church he has taken an active interest in all that pertains to the municipal, commercial and political life of the Foggy City and it is his opinion, backed by that of the majority of the citizens there, that if the Mayor-elect wins out his administration will not be a case of "money makes the Mayor go," to use a paraphrase of Oliver Herford's.

"There is no city of the size of Los Angeles in the United States so well and favorably known as a financial center for the flotation and exploitation of first-class bond and stock issues," declared H. S. Woolner, a prominent stock and bond broker. "More bonds and stocks have been placed upon the market in Los Angeles and tributary localities than any other city in the country, in proportion to its population. The Los Angeles Stock Exchange, an institution established for years, through which all large transactions in financial deals are now being exploited, is handling bonds of corporations of Southern California against an authorized issue of upward of $57,000,000 and an outstanding issue of over $60,000,000—almost equal in magnitude to the transactions of the San Francisco Bond and Stock Exchange. In fact, the Los Angeles Stock Exchange has become the barometer of values in this market. No fictitious values are quoted."

Dr. Amos Sweeney, a New York physician who is on his way to the Orient bound for a round-the-world tour, has been spending a few days here. Dr. Sweeney, who retired from the practice of his profession several years ago and has spent most of his time traveling since, is an authority on mushrooms, which he regards as a most toothsome delicacy. He says all mushrooms are toadstools, in a variety of forms and various stages of tenderness. He knows all about woody growths, and spores, and every edible fungi. He has eaten in his time 543 varieties of toadstool and he knows how to cook them to a turn. He has an intimate knowledge of toadstool croquettes, toadstool patties, toadstools roasted, fried, boiled and baked. "All kinds of toadstools growing on open, grassy lawns," he says, "are edible. The poisonous kinds grow in the woods, under trees, and around stumps. It is sacrilege to peel a mushroom before cooking. I should think someone would take up the culture of mushrooms here on a large scale. It would be an ideal country to raise them."

Another New York man who has been spending a week or more here is J. S. Grandin, who is returning East from a trip to the Yellowstone and the Portland Exposition. It is his first trip to the Coast, although he has been abroad repeatedly. "Like too many of my fellow-citizens," he says, "I have neglected seeing my own country. You know London seems much nearer to we New Yorkers than California, so when we take a holiday trip we run across to England, but this summer I thought I would break away from my old habit and run across the continent instead of the ocean and I cannot express to you my delight with what I have seen. I am free to confess that I had no idea of the progress and push of these western cities. Los Angeles impresses me as a sort of earthly paradise and I shall never be satisfied now till I spend a winter here. As I have ridden about through your city I have been comparing it mentally with the many foreign and eastern cities I have visited and I assure you your town stands at the head of the list for an attractive residence city. It seems a pity to criticise anything in a place so nearly ideal, but I have wondered that, in such a beautiful city, so many of your residence streets are disfigured with billboards, many of them built so high as to interfere with the view of sightseers on the street cars—some of them running for a full block. They look to me like a blotch on the otherwise perfect landscape. In a distance of three blocks along one of your residence streets I took a memorandum of cocoa, cigars, shoes, milk, whisky, rice, beer, catsup, hats, eye water, complexion cream, nerve tonic and gold dust, to say nothing of theater bills—all placarded in glaring letters and accompanied with more or less artistic illustrations. It seems to me a movement to get rid of the billboards as well as the oil derricks in the residence portion of the city would now be in order. Of course this is only a friendly suggestion from one who hopes some time to live here."

IN THE BIG INDUSTRIES.

Niagara Reinstated.

Hurrah for Niagara Falls! From all we have been reading lately, they were quite outdone on every point by the Victoria Falls on the Zambesi River, recently brought into railway communication with the rest of the world. Every description has represented the Victoria Falls as being on a much more colossal scale than Niagara, and we were distinctly led to understand that down there in South Africa was Nature's most stupendous storehouse of electrical power.

But the British Association has been to South Africa, and we now have the tales of travelers supplemented by strictly scientific records. Professor Ayrton, one of the foremost electrical engineers in England, has been taking measurements. He finds that the vertical drop of the Zambesi Falls is greater—nearly three times—than that of Niagara. But this superiority is more than discounted by the comparative deficiency of the flow. The estimate of the power potential of the Zambesi Falls, with their present mean flow, as calculated by Professor Ayrton, is stated to be only 580,000 horse-power, compared with the available three millions of Niagara.

So America holds the record in waterfalls once again.

Electric Cars for the Yellowstone.

The construction of a trolley line through the Yellowstone Park is being advocated. Such a work would be free from many of the objections that would undoubtedly attach to a steam railroad. It is certainly difficult to see how a park which contains 3312 square miles, with a large forest reserve in addition, could be seriously marred as regards scenery by a properly constructed trolley road of from 200 to 300 miles. Nor could the injury either to game or to tree growth be counted as very serious. The advocates of the present order of things say point-blank that visitors "prefer to travel by hired horses, even if the discomforts are greater." But this is a very doubtful statement, indeed. The trolley car in rural districts has its own special charms; it is clean, commodious, expeditious, admirably adapted for sightseeing, and capable of covering a far wider stretch of territory than could be compassed in a given time by any horsed vehicle.

Moreover, the cheapness of the service has to be considered. The following calculation has been made by a writer to the Electrical World and Engineer: "The cost of a trip by trolley operated by the government could not possibly exceed three cents a mile, or $4.50 for the distance of 150 miles—the distance traveled by the Yellowstone coaches, while the fare for this distance now charged by them is $27." That is to say the transportation charges within the park would be just one-sixth of those at present levied. Such a sweeping reduction would beyond doubt largely augment the annual stream of visitors, and it has to be remembered that the value to the nation of the Yellowstone Park is in direct proportion to the number of our citizens who find it possible to make the pilgrimage and enjoy the incomparable beauties of Nature's great wonderland.

A Boom in Copper Production.

An enormous increase in the production of copper is perhaps the most notable feature in the United States mining returns for 1904. The advance amounted to close upon 115,000,000 pounds. Of course the unprecedented demand all the world over was the most important factor conducing to this result, for thereby was induced a corresponding activity in copper mining. A great stimulus, too, was given to improvements in mining, concentrating and smelting, so as to make available low grade ores that had been previously neglected. These scientific advances are steadily rendering the copper industry less dependent upon the discovery and the life of individual rich deposits. The exports of copper last year increased by nearly 400,000,000 pounds. This is a sign of the times that must not be missed, for the figures prove increased industrial activity in the manufacturing countries that come to us for the raw material. The point is further emphasized by a decreased home consumption of about 60,000,000 pounds.

The Patent Office Year.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Patents shows that over a thousand applications for mechanical patents are now received every week at the United States Patent Office. During the year 52,323 applications were received, and 30,266 patents were granted. This, however, was only one part of Uncle Sam's patent office business, there being also applications for designs, for reissues, for trade-marks, for labels and for prints, representing with caveats received as well, many thousands of transactions. The total receipts of the office were $1,737,334; the total expenditures, $1,472,467; and the surplus of receipts over expenditures, being the profit turned into the treasury, amounted to $264,667. When we remember that patent attorneys are employed in connection with most of this work, an idea will be had of the vast sums spent yearly by Americans of an inventive turn of mind, or rather by the capitalists and big industrial corporations who stand behind the discoverers of new things.

It takes a woman's will to convince a man against his will.

When a shiftless man gets sick his neighbors seldom lose any time worrying about it.

BITS OF VERSE.

Change.

I do not have to travel, for the thermometric range
Is sure in time to bring me the desired climatic change.
The pace is swift enough to the most unrestful soul.
One day we're at the tropics and the next we're at the pole.
—[Washington Star.

A Theory.

The verse already writ this year,
I doubt not, if together strung,
Would reach with ease from Finisterre
Around the world to far Shantung!

But though 'twould reach so far with ease,
As with the heathen horfies to mix,
I dare assert (one reads and sees)
'Twill not e'en reach to nineteen-six!
—[New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A Regular Cinch.

Fall's an easy time for rhyming, we can sing of leaves so sere,
Or can chortle of the meadows lying brown and bare and drear,
We can warble of the cattle and the sheep within the fold
And the frost upon the fodder and the pumpkin's ruddy gold.

There are lots of things to sing of, and the rhymes are easy quite;
There's the autumn haze in daytime and the harvest moon at night,
There's the 'coon and there's the 'possum and a lot of rhyming snaps;
Oh, this weather may be gloomy, but it's good for poet chaps.
—[Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Violin.

Music of shadow, blown from twilit lands,
Where never burns the fierce white light of day;
Where never laughter breaks their sadnesses;
Only a sapphire dusk and somber sky,
And wandering mourning winds that blow across
The everlasting sorrowing of the sea.
The sobbing cadences aspire and sink,
And in their gliding poignant beauty speaks
Anguish of all the ages. Shadowed forms,
Figures of tragedy, who lift pale hands and cry
Against the ruthless trampling of the years,
KeKen from the strings, until the listening
Becomes a very rapier thrust of pain.
—[F. O'Neill Gallagher.

Supreme Self-confidence.

Such faith in men's good nature I never saw before
As he showed when he entered and softly closed the door;
His splendid optimism spread out in glinting rays,
And though his garb was scanty, he was a man to praise.

"I claim to be the bravest of men, alive or dead,
For I'm a life insurance solicitor," he said,
"And come to try to get you to put your doubts aside
And let me underwrite you despite McCall and Hyde."
—[Chicago Record-Herald.

Back in Harness.

And now his outing spell is o'er
And he his home doth seek—
The parson with a flock that's fat
From Pohick-on-the-Creek.
The parson with a flock that's fat
From Scottish heath and fen
But rich or poor it's certain that
The parson's home again.

From farmhouse twenty miles away
He cometh hale and tanned,
Or from the peaks of far Cathay
Or from the Holy Land,
He comes from Flemish lowland flat,
From Irish dale and glen,
But rich or poor, it's certain that
The parson's home again.

Here's One Store That's Keeping Its Every Promise.
We Shall Positively Sell Out Every Article in This Big Stock.

Your attention, one moment.

Do you know that when we finally vacate this store, every dollar's worth of goods must have been sold?

If necessary, when the stock has been reduced to the very core we will give it away or auction it off. One thing is settled, not a single article will be moved to our new location.

Just now our removal sale is at its height.

We've sort of warmed up to this "selling out" business. There's an excitement about it, a recklessness, that we feel just as our patrons do.

Some things are marked at an absurd figure, not because they won't bring higher prices, but simply because we want this sale to be a continuous, rushing, whirling success.

We want every family to have some splendid things in its home which can be pointed out as an example of the power of this store and its grand defeat of the Trust.

So don't delay.

It will pay to help us get things out of the way.

We'll make it pay you.

Don't worry about the money question. It doesn't make a fig's difference to us whether you pay now or at a year's time.

The Trust is after your cash. We want your patronage and you can have all the credit privileges that were ever dreamed of.

That's business, not "Trust foolishness."

We're here to make the Trust dance like a monkey.

Each of the extraordinary offers printed in this advertisement is an actual fact. Join the throngs of wise folks, and be at Brent's next week.

The Making of a Successful Husband.

III. BOARDING OR "KEEPING HOUSE"—TWO IN A FLAT BEATS ANY NUMBER OF PAIRS IN A BOARDING HOUSE.

By Caspar S. Yost.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

MY Dear John: I infer from your letter just received, which is more distinguished by its brevity than its lucidity, that you are undecided as to whether you shall board or keep house. You are evidently trying to argue yourself into the belief that boarding is the ideal life, while way down in your innards is a longing for a home that you can't get rid of.

There is something favorable to be said of either proposition. If there were nothing to consider but the question of cost, that is to say, the direct expense—the fixed charges, as the railroad man would put it—I should advise you to board. It used to be a popular idea, and may be yet for aught I know to the contrary, that it was cheaper for a young couple to keep house. I have had some personal experience, and I know a great many other people who have arrived at years of discretion after sundry wrestles with this same immortal conundrum, every one of whom has found, as I have, that it costs more to keep up a home, however modest, than it does to board with the same relative suroundings. All this talk about the economy of home life is tommyrot, unless it refers entirely to indirect results, and it leads to wrong conclusions and many mistakes on the part of young married people. The youth is told that two can live as cheaply as one—another old and dangerous delusion—and proceeds to figure that his income will answer very well for two on that basis. He gets married, rents him a flat or a little house, and settles down to save money and be happy. He can easily do both, if he goes about it in the right way, but he soon learns that two cannot live as cheaply as one—unless he was extravagant before marriage and desperately economical afterward—and that keeping house always costs more than any advance calculations. The statisticians of domestic economy make things look mighty pretty on paper. If some of them were to be believed you could keep house and get fat on your cigar money. But their enticing theories won't work out in practice. A measure of disappointment is the invariable result of the attempt, and in the discovery lie the beginnings of many unhappy married lives.

I want you to go into this business with your eyes open. I would like very much to see you have a home of your own, for reasons which I shall give you, but I don't want you to have any false notions about its cost. If the financial end is your only consideration, by all means get you a respectable boarding place, where you will have a comfortable room and eatable food at reasonable rates, if such a combination exists. You will have the satisfaction of knowing just how much you will have to pay for your meals and lodging and laundry, and there will be few extras. As a purely financial proposition it is very simple. But—and I can't place too much emphasis on that but—marriage is not properly a financial proposition. I know very well that it is in a great many cases, and the tendency to make it so seems to be growing, but it isn't right. Money is an important factor in domestic life, but beyond the necessities of existence it is not an essential. Properly used, it will help to make happiness, but at its best it is a mere auxiliary. Put it in single harness, and depend upon it alone to draw you to bliss, and you will find that it will surely bolt at the first fork of the road, and either upset the wagon or carry you farther and farther away from your goal. It is much better to hitch it to the rear end of the vehicle, where it can jog along comfortably and docilely, and be on hand when you need it. Be sure, however, to tie it good and fast, for when you want it you want it bad.

Let me get back to where I jumped the track. The direct cost—mind you, the direct cost—of boarding is less than the cost of keeping house, everything being equal. That is the one thing that can be said in its favor when it is being considered by two healthy, right-minded young married people, who have enough money in hand to buy a little furniture, rent a small flat and lay in a month's provisions. The boarding house may be accepted as a temporary expedient, but as a permanent abode it won't do. Real, true domestic life is impossible within it. You are confined, as a rule, to a single room, in the furnishings of which you have only a material interest. At the table you are forced to meet a miscellaneous lot of people, some of whom you wouldn't care to know if you had your choice. You must accept the food that is placed before you and thank heaven it is no worse. No matter what your individidual tastes may be, you can't satisfy your desires, for if you can induce the landlady to supply you with special dishes you will incur the jealousy and ill will of other less favored boarders, who will make your existence as unpleasant as possible in the many little ways so well known to habitual boarders. In this delectable atmosphere your wife will be left alone all day with nothing to do. She will for a while take breakfast with you, but will soon find lying in bed becomes a more and more pleasant method of killing time, and you will leave the house without waking her. When the pangs of hunger compel her she will rise, mince a little breakfast, do a little fancy work, read a little book, indulge in a little gossip with the other women boarders, make a few calls, perhaps, and by the time you come to dinner will be sufficiently bored to make even a family quarrel seem diverting. A woman doesn't differ much from a man. She cannot develop unless life has a purpose, and in the demoralizing suroundings of a boarding house she shrivels up morally and intellectually unless she breaks out and finds a work or a mission for herself. Ordinary boarding house life is absolute stagnation, and it is one of Nature's inexorable laws that stagnation breeds death. I know there are people who will rise above adverse conditions wherever they may be placed, but I have as yet seen no reason to count you among them. At any rate, it is a serious risk, and I earnestly hope you will not take it.

On the other hand, a home is nature's training school for the making of genuine men and women. I'll admit that nature doesn't always turn out a first-class job, but that's the fault of the material. I know some persons who wear trousers who couldn't be turned into men by any process, natural or artificial. I would not be so ungallant as to apply the same statement to some persons in petticoats whom I have met, but I am afraid their transformation into women with hearts and minds and souls, all in active operation, would be a task too great for any agency. However, that's a diversion. If you want to grow in every way—mentally, morally, spiritually—if you want to be happy, get you a few rooms that you can call home. It doesn't matter whether it is a three-room flat or a $10,000 apartment, just so the rent is in proper proportion to your income. I don't mean to say that a home makes happiness any more than flour makes cake, but it's a mighty necessary ingredient, and it's the one you have to start with. It gives at once the foundation, the environment and the atmosphere essential to happiness. I am very well aware that I am mixing my metaphors a little, but I want to press the point into you until you holler, that home and happiness begin with the same letter and start at the same place.

You never were much of a hand to accept dogmatic statements, and I can imagine you taking the other side of the question just for the sake of argument, so I'll humor you with some reasons for my belief in the theory which worked so well in practice in my case, as you certainly know, and in the experience of many of my friends.

I think I have told you something about the necessity of intimate acquaintance between man and wife. You must know one another, and in a boarding house you can't possibly get more than a superficial knowledge. You are more or less in public all the time, and your manners are more or less artificial. You can't be yourself. If you have any regard for your reputation you have to wear a mask all the time. At home, unless you have a houseful of starched and uniformed servants, you are free to be natural. You show yourself in your true colors. Whatever faults you may have—and I reckon you're pretty well loaded with them—will stick out. If these failings are so pronounced that they induce you to go to bed with your clothes on, you need the restraints of a boarding house. Home was never intended for such cattle. I used to know a man down in the town where I was raised whose habit it was to get pleasantly loaded every Saturday night. About 1 o'clock of a Sunday morning he would reach a point where it became necessary for him to lift up his voice in song, and the only song he knew was "Home, Sweet Home." He would warble this over and over until the barkeeper's patience was exhausted when he would be gently but forcibly ejected with an urgent request to seek the pleasures of that sweet domicile to which he offered his unmelodious libations. Sam would meander down the straight and narrow path which led to his cottage, still singing, and without entering the house or trying to enter—he knew better—would go around to the woodshed where, in a comfortable corner, he would sleep peacefully and happily until sunrise. Sam, however, was an exception. If I thought you had developed any idiosyncrasies of that sort, I wouldn't write letters to you. I'd call on you personally and I'd carry with me a large club studded with tenpenny nails. But I look upon you as an average man, and home is the only place in which the average man and the average woman can become thoroughly and intimately acquainted, the acquaintance which is essential to the development of domestic happiness.

In a home each of you has something to live for, something that is a part of and inseparable from each other. There is something about the atmosphere that develops mutual ambition to which the surroundings of a boarding house are fatal. You feel your responsibilities, and your shoulders broaden to uphold them. Your mind expands under the same influence. You feel that your are a citizen, a factor in the affairs of the world. Nobody else will notice it, perhaps, but you can afford to look with supreme indifference upon the lack of attention of other people. A man and his wife should be all things to each other. In their home they occupy a little world to themselves. What matters it what goes on outside? The rest of humanity constitutes a source of supply for bread and butter and some other desirable things, and for this reason if no other, it should be treated with consideration; but otherwise it is not essential to domestic happiness. Much too often it is the cause of domestic failure. Go inside your little fort, close the doors and let the world wag as it will. You can't do that in a boarding house; you have to take the world in with you. Of course you have heard the saying that a wagging world on the outside is better than a wagging tongue on the inside, and in some cases, I regret to say, it is true, but the men who suffer from a woman's tongue are generally themselves to blame. The fair sex has been known on occasions to resort to rolling pins and flatirons, but its natural weapon is the tongue, and, as the Irishman would say, it is quite effective in capable hands. It has no sting, however, where love rules and where the wife is shown the courtesy she is entitled to. At any rate whatever differences of opinion may arise between man and wife, they can be more satisfactorily discussed within the natural precincts of a home; whatever troubles may arise they can be better borne and easier disposed of at home than in a boarding house.

Now I want to get back for a few moments to sordid considerations. I have said that the direct expense of keeping house is greater than that of boarding, but in the long run the home is really cheaper. The lack of occupation and the petty social rivalry of the boarding house lead to extravagances in the way of amusement and dress that would be unthought of if you were keeping house. The incentive to thrift and economy is lacking; that ambition for better things, which is the peculiar product of home life, will find you at the end of the year with more money in your pocket than if you had spent an aimless twelve months in a pension.

Go, get thee to a real estate agent, my boy, rent a castle, even if it hasn't but three rooms, and all of them dark. You'll encounter difficulties, but you'll learn to overcome them; you'll have annoyances, but they'll make life sweeter by contrast; you'll have troubles, but troubles bravely borne will make a better man of you and a better woman of her. Your affectionate father,

JOHN SNEED.

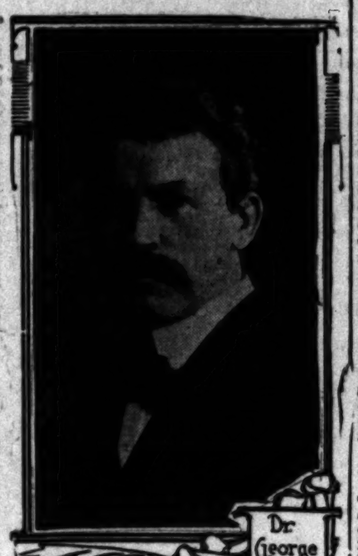
BERLIN'S POET-MAYOR.

HEAD OF KAISER'S CAPITAL HAS REPUTATION AS A LITERARY MAN.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Sept. 14.—As befits a city that lays claim to being the artistic and intellectual hub of Europe, Berlin boasts of a Burgomaster, or Mayor, who is a poet, dramatist and romanticist of talent and renown—Dr. George Reicke. He is only 42 years old and, therefore, according to his admirers, only on the threshold of a career brilliant with promise. Although Mayor Reicke is what the Germans call a "real poet," he is a man of action and activity, too. Unlike most poets, he is completely at home in the world of affairs. He is an able jurist and would win fame at the bar if he had not chosen to devote his greatest energies to the divine muse. He is a disciple of the strenuous life and at the City Hall has the reputation of being able to dispose of a task in weeks that requires months from his colleagues. He is a thoroughly modern man, with a talent for administration and bold progressive temperament.



Reicke was born in Koenigsberg in 1863. His father was a well-known student of the philosopher Kant. Dr. Reicke left the gymnasium at 18 years of age. After a career of miraculously rapid growth, in which he came frequently into conflict with the powers-that-be on account of free thinking, he was elected Burgomaster of Berlin, a position which he adorns with conspicuous dignity and ability. The municipal board of aldermen, with whom the privilege of naming the Burgomaster rests, felt Reicke's choice to be a particularly happy one, in view of Berlin's reputation as a "Kulterstadt" (culture-city), and when he is on duty on gala occasions, wearing the robes and chain of his high office, he is surrounded by admiring municipal councillors who feel personal pride in their Burgomaster's aesthetic bearing.

As might be expected, Reicke devotes much of his official activity to the physical beautifying of Berlin. Schemes contemplating the improvement of streets, squares, buildings and parks usually emanate from him. He is a stickler for the artistic effect, and generations yet unborn will have cause to thank the poet-burgomaster for the countless "municipal beauties" which Berlin will bequeath to posterior citizens.

Reicke is a bachelor and one of the most courted men in Berlin society.

Congress to be Asked to Create It for Purposes of Giving Military Advice to the Secretary.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25.—Congress will be asked by the Navy Department to create a general staff to give military advice to the Secretary, and to have a paramount voice and influence in the shaping of policies necessary to bring the fleet to the highest stage of efficiency. What form the general staff idea will take this year, and how forcibly it will be urged upon a Congress heretofore indifferent, depend largely upon the new Secretary, Mr. Bonaparte, who has not made up his mind.

The General Board, of which Admiral Dewey is the head, now serves the purposes of a general staff, but its members have for several years advocated something to supersede it by authority of law. The board is now merely a creature of the Secretary's appointment.

Several general staff plans advocated in the past have renewed the rank of vice-admiral for officers in command of the great fleets, but aside from any general staff movement Congress will doubtless be asked to revive this rank for the commanders of the North Atlantic and Asiatic fleets.

Rear-Admiral Robley D. Evans, commander in chief of the Asiatic fleet, happens to be the senior rear-admiral, next in rank to Admiral Dewey. If the

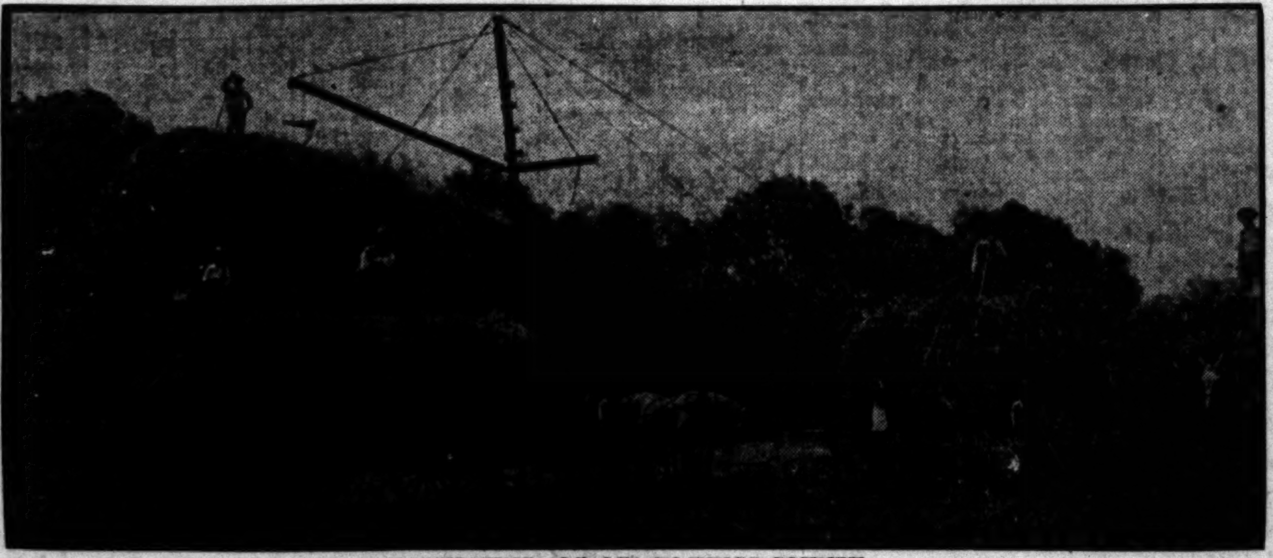
O. J. WIGDAL H. J. WHITLEY

The president, financial manager and a large owner in the enterprise is H. J. Whitley, well known in connection with his operations at Hollywood and elsewhere as an able financier and successful man of affairs. The character and standing of the directorate and management are beyond any question and insure conservative development and the elimination of every feature of a boom nature from their operations and is in itself an assurance that whatever they engage in has merit.



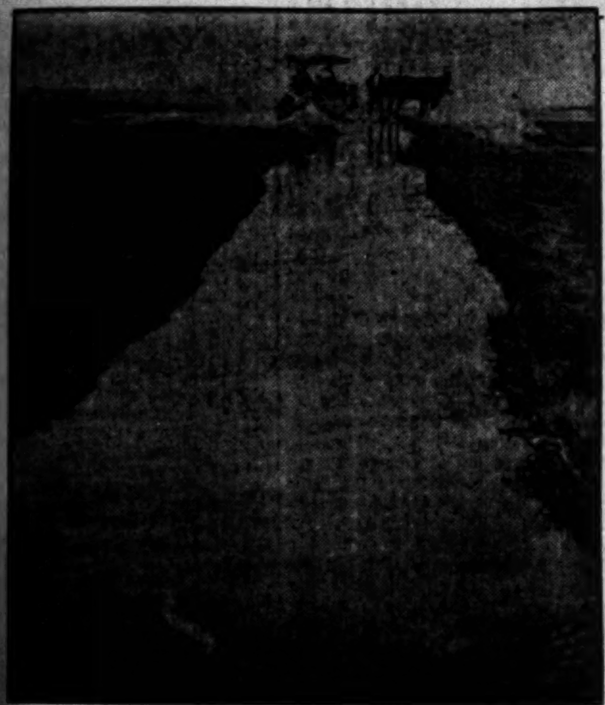
HARVESTING ALFALFA IN KINGS COUNTY.

Home Offices: Home Savings Bank Bldg Spring and Court Sts.

The lands of this company embrace a frontage of 25 miles along both sides of the transcontinental line of the Santa Fe Railroad and adjacent to the main line of the Southern Pacific Railroad, about midway between San Francisco and Los Angeles, in the heart of the San Joaquin Valley. At CORCORAN a branch road connects the Santa Fe with the Southern Pacific, and it is at this junction that the company is establishing its model farmers' town. All trains—local, limited and freight—stop at Corcoran and afford the best of railroad facilities.

CORCORAN is 233 miles from Los Angeles, 17 from Hanford, 48 from Fresno, 22 from Visalia, and about 22 from what is left of Tulare Lake.

Piped water plant for domestic purposes and electric lighting system now being constructed at Corcoran and many more up-to-date improvements soon to follow.



CANAL SUPPLIED BY ONE ARTESIAN WELL RECENTLY BORED NEAR CORCORAN ON OUR LANDS.

SOIL is a rich sedimentary deposit composed of tule roots, shells and silt left by the receding waters of Tulare Lake which many years ago covered these lands.

WATER SUPPLY These lands are sub-irrigated at about 9 feet; located in one of the very best artesian sections of the State, proven by scores of wells on our lands which have been flowing for years and many more now being bored, which produce an equally satisfactory flow.

This company has also a large interest in the Lake Land Canal & Irrigation Co. which has two large canals running through our lands to bring flood waters from Kings River.

Fine water for stock and domestic purposes at 40 to 60 feet. Pumping wells with an almost inexhaustible supply at from 65 to 150 feet.

PRODUCTS Over 60 different products shipped from Kings County last year in carload lots.

These lands are unsurpassed for raising ALFALFA and ALFALFA seed. Hogs, cattle, mules and live stock of all kinds bring handsome returns by reason of the great quantities and fine quality of alfalfa, corn and grain produced. No cold weather to set back or stunt young stock. Hogs increase rapidly and in 7 to 9 months are marketable, averaging about 200 pounds, and bringing from 4½ to 7 cents per pound on the hoof. One creamery alone in Kings County paid over $10,000 per month to farmers for milk last year.

Deciduous fruits and grapes of all kinds produce immense crops and are highly profitable.

SEVERAL HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS now being expended for improvements in and around Corcoran, make values assured and certain to increase rapidly.

Exceptional opportunities and special inducements for those wishing to engage in business in the new town of Corcoran. Secure choice locations now before lots are placed on public sale.

Lands from $15 and up per acre. Liberal Terms.
Special inducements and rebates to a limited number who will improve at once.
Special excursion next Tuesday night. About one-half fare.

It will be over the National lines in con- with the Gould line, and thus about seventeen hours from schedule between Mexico St. Louis. This coöperation Gould lines is more effective than a year ago when the first passenger train service was es- between Mexico City and St. At that time the train placed over the National was much any regular schedule of but time was lost on the In- and Great Northern and the Iron Mountain, which will now be more than made up. The train to be run between Mexico City and St. Louis this year will be superior to anything before attempted in Mexico except on special occasions. It will include a regular dining-car service, and an observation car. With the exception of these cars and the baggage only Pullmans will be on the train which is to be a biweekly. In order that the train may carry only passengers with first-class tickets, it will be operated each time as a special. It will cost each passenger $5 gold in excess of the price of the regular ticket, but will save him seventeen hours. There will be only six stops in Mexico. The officials of the National are not concerned whether this special service will pay or not, but they are satisfied that it will be a great accommodation to the public.

TO BUILD BOTH WAYS.

Now that construction of the Pan-American Railway is about to be pushed to a termination, the present visit of Vice-President and General Manager J. M. Neeland, who arrived Wednesday, is significant. He has just come from a six weeks' trip to the United States and proposes to arrange with the Mexican government to begin the construction of his line from the Guatemala border north so as to be working in two directions simultaneously. The work from the southern end will probably begin where the Guatemala Central ends at the common frontier, and the two construction corps will join at Mapastepec in the State of Chiapas. Mr. Neeland is building his road faster than any railroad yet built in this country, at the rate of one kilometer per day, and expects to complete the road and make the connection between Mexico and Guatemala within eighteen months. The completion of this 400 kilometer road will give Mexico a big impetus. At present, although in proportion to territory, Mexico ranks first in railroad construction in Latin America, in number of kilometers constructed it ranks second. The Argentine Republic has 18,600 kilometers, while Gen. Diaz in his semi-annual report at the opening of Congress reported that Mexico now had 16,866 kilometers, or 1734 kilometers less than the Argentine. At the present rate of increase, within two or three years Mexico will have the largest railroad mileage of any country on the American continent except the United States and Canada.

FOR THE DUMB BRUTES.

Among other material improvements, now noticeable in Mexico, is the Mexican Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. A circular of instruction was recently issued by Gen. Manuel Gonzalez, son of ex-President Gonzalez, Governor of the State of Mexico, to the teachers of public schools in that State to devote hereafter a certain amount of time each week to teaching the children their duty toward the dumb animals, realizing that a child educated to notions of kindness toward the animals, as a man will have notions of kindness instead of cruelty toward his fellow-men. This is one of the fundamental ideas that led to the formation of the S.P.C.A. movement in Mexico in February, 1904. Twelve years ago an attempt was made to start this work in Mexico by Joaquin Garcia Toledo of Malaga, Spain, but as he could not come to Mexico nothing was done at that time. Early in 1903, Mme. Minnie Maddern Fiske, the actress, inaugurated steps to the same end and in the winter of that same year Mrs. H. C. Reynolds of Washington came here and by February following a society of fifty members was organized, which now has 100 members. Judge Ignacio Sepulveda, formerly of California, is the president of the society and Edward C. Butler secretary and treasurer.

In February, 1905, the Mexican government appointed Mrs. Luz Fernandez de Herrera its representative. The members have a blue badge with a white star and so earnest has been the coöperation of the police authorities through the aid of Col. Felix Diaz, chief of police, and Guillermo Landa y Escandon, Governor of the Federal district, that any agent or member of the society showing his button, is at once assisted by the police. This police aid is of great importance to the society.

Y.M.C.A. GROWING.

Another organization of great importance in the moral uplift of Mexico is the oung Men's Christian Association. This was formally inauguarated September 20, 1902, amid the swaying hopes and doubts of a few earnest Christian men. Its history during these three years has justified the hopes and set aside the doubts and this institution is now recognized as a helpful factor in the lives of thousands of men. The total membership is now 570. The library has circulated 4000 books. The expense for carrying on the work has been about $21,600 per annum. These expenses have been kept up and only $2500 remains of the debt contracted at the commencement of this work. About $13,000 has been expended in providing a home for the Mexican branch of which Vice-President Ramon Corral is president, and which now has a membership of 330.

OTHER GOOD WORK.

Another good institution in Mexico is the Woman's Exchange. It has been organized in this city for three years and during that time has distributed about $36,000 among those who sent their work to be sold. This has helped many poor women who otherwise would have suffered.

The Florence Crittenton Home, one of the characteric charities of the English-speaking colony, in this city, has now over seventy inmates. It is located at Rinconado de Santa Catarina No. 2. It was organized in 1903 through the disinterested efforts of Mrs. Ignacio Sepulveda. This woman's work is to help the innocent, and grander work no woman can plan or do. Even the kindergarten in this institution is a revelation. It is supported by voluntary contributions, and was recently enriched in the sum of $5000 by two benefit performances of "The Charity Ball," a play given in favor of the institution by Miss Beryl Hope of Los Angeles. This actress entered heart and soul into the arrangement and the result was a financial social, and professional success. It was the first time that an American play written, staged and performed by Americans, was given in Mexico, and as a result this winter the colony will probably have a series of American plays. The colony has been hungry for this sort of diversion, and Miss Hope left last week for the United States to organize her company to return next November for that purpose.

Franklin K. Lane and O. H. Harrison of San Francisco are here, en route to Chiapas, where they go to inspect the Lazaculpa and Hidalgo plantations of coffee and rubber, in which both gentlemen are interested with a number of other Californians. They have also been cultivating sugar on a large scale in Hawaii, but now see virgin lands in Mexico for that industry. Mr. Harrison has been interested in Chiapas lands for some time and is now interesting other Californians, among them Mr. Lane.

A classification of cities for purposes of legislation, so as to make a particular law conferring power to annex territory applicable to those having a population of between 6000 and 7000, is held, in Longview v. Crawfordsville (Ind.) 68 L.R.A. 622, to be purely arbitrary, and not to save the statute from the condemnation of the Constitution as special legislation.

SE COMENZARA EL SERVICIO.

MAS CORTO ENTRE ST. LOUIS Y LA CIUDAD DE MEXICO.

Se Efecturara por la via Nacional de Acuerdo Con Las Lineas Gould. La Economia en Tiempo Sera Entonces de Diez y Siete Horas—Otros Asuntos de la Capital de la Republica.

[CORRESPONDENCIA ESPECIAL DE THE TIMES.]

MEXICO, Septiembre 29, de 1905.—Si las manos humanas podian poner sobre la cabeza de un niño de dos años al globo entero, sin aplaster al niño, dejandole crecer de un modo natural, aquella criatura levantaria al mundo. Asi operan todas las ideas nuevas y las mejoras materiales, infantiles al principio. Los Ferrocarriles que ya alcanzan los rincones del pais, mejorandore, tenian origen humildisimo. Aun en el año de 1867, México tenia un solo ferrocarril, entero el capital y el puerto de Vera Cruz. La distancia era 575 kilometros, y cobro por flete de primera clase $77.13 por tonelada da 1000 kilogramas, y $55.09 para flete de tercera clase. El boleto de primera, de pasajeros costaba $30, y de tercera clase $12. Ahora la tonelada de flete de primera clase paga $32 y de tercera clase, $16, y el boleto de primera cuesta $16. Por tierra, viajando en diligencias, ocuparia el viaje seis semanas, costandole al pasajero $400. Ya Nueva York dista por tren cien horas y Saint Louis, por el tren rapido que se instalara proximamente, cincuenta y cuatro horas, y el pasaje a Nueva York cuesta $60 oro.

El viaje de El Paso a Mexico consume cuarenta y nueve horas y de Laredo, por tren ordinario, treinta y cinco. En 1873 México tuvo 575 kilomteros de via harrada, que llevo en aquel año 723,824 pasajeros y 120,373 toneladas de flete, siendo sus entradas $1,848,345. En 1905, segun el Informe Presidencial del Gen. Diaz al Congreso Federal el dia primero del mes en curso, México tiene ya 16,866 kilometros de camino de fierro, un aumento de 250 kilometros, construidos en su mayor parte sin subvencion. En el año corriente los ferrocarriles Mexicanas probablemente llevaran 16,000,000 pasajeros y 12,000,000 de toneladas de flete, y sus entradas brutas no bajaran de $60,000,000.

El servicio mas corto entre México y Saint Louis se inaugurara en el proximo Diciembre. Ahora el viaje ocupa setenta y una horas, pero ocupara entonces cincuenta y cuatro. Sera el viaje, mas rapido en la historia del pais. Se efectuara por la Via Nacional de acuerdo con las Lineas Gould, y la economia en tiempo entre México y Saint Louis sera entonces de diez y siete horas. Como esa economia en tiempo es de importancia a un hombre de negocios, se cobrara cinco pesos plata adicional al precio de pasaje. Aquel servicio especial se efectuara tres veces a la semana. Los oficiales del Ferrocarril Nacional no se dan cuidado si el servicio remunere a la empresa, pero dicen que lo emprenden para el bien del publico.

La Visita actual del Sr. J. M. Neeland, Vice-President y Gerente General del Ferrocarril Pan Americano, esta relacionada a la pronta conclusion de aquella via inter-continental. Propone pedir permiso del Gobierno Mexicano para comenzar la construccion de la parte no concluida, trabajando al norte de la frontera Guatemalteca, para unir, en la poblacion de Mapastepec, Chiapas, los dos puntos de aquella cadena de acero cuya mision sera unir a Mexico y Guatemala. El camino de fierro desde San Geronimo hasta la frontera de Guatemala, tendra 400 kilometros, poco mas o menos del cual la mitad esta concluida hasta Tonala. Completa la ruta del Pan Americano, México tendra completas sus conexiones del sistema intercontinental ferrocarrilera entre todas las Américas. En proporcion a su territorio, México tiene mas millas de ferrocarril que cualquiera otra Republica de La América Latina, pero la Argentina posee 18,600 kilometros de ferrocarril, mientras que México posee 16,866, o 1734 menos que la Argentina. Juzgando por el aumento actual, México, en dos o tres años, tendra el sistema ferrocarrilera mayor sobre el continente Americano, con excepcion de los Estados Unidos y Canada.

Ferrocarriles, vapores, traccion y luz eléctrica, pavimentos, etc., son materiales mejoras que merecen mencion honorifica, pero aparte de todo el conjunto de mejoras de tal naturaleza que han trasformado al pais hay de darse cuenta de las mejoras intelectuales y morales que abundan y a cuyo impulso México ocupa hoy el primer lugar entre los paises Latinos de este continente. En 1867 no hubo escuelas publicas o nacionales, y hoy México tiene 10,000, a que asisten 800,000 niños. Incidental a la educacion de la niñez, es la propagada instituida en el Estado de México, merced a las representaciones de la Sociedad Mexicana Protectora de Animales. El Gobernador General Manuel Gonzalez, hijo del finado presidente Gonzalez, expidio instrucciones a los maestros de escuela en el Estado de dar lecciones a los niños sobre el trato de los animales. La idea de la Sociedad Protectora ha sido educar a los niños a nociones de bondad hacia los animales, y despues ya como hombres y mujeres trataran bien los unos a los otros. La primera tentativa al establecimiento de la Sociedad fué en 1893; Sr. Joaquin Garcia Toledo, autor del movimiento humanitario en Malaga, España, quiso venir aqui con tal proposito, pero no pudo. A principios de 1903, Madame Minnie Maddern Fiske, la célebre actriz, volvio agitar el asunto, y a fines de aquel año vino, a Mexico Mrs. H. C. Reynolds, de Washington, D. C., quien pudo, en Febrero de 1904, organizar la Sociedad Mexicana, y con cincuenta miembros. Fué legalizada la Sociedad en Junio 20 de 1904, de acuerdo con la 1888. Hon. Ignacio Sepulveda, antes de California, es el presidente. Los miembros tienen un distintivo azul con estrella blanca y las letras, en oro, "S. P.A." y "S.P.C.A." y "Mexico," para designarles. El Señor Guillermo Landa y Escandon, Gobernador del Distrito Federal, y Coronel Felix Diaz, Inspector General de Policia, coadyuvada en la obra humanitaria de la Sociedad. Resulta de circulares oficiales del Señor Inspector de policia, que toda la policia del Distrito Federal atiende a los agentes, y hacen remisiones a su simple pedido. Generosa ha sido tambien la ayuda de la prensa en México. Periodicos como El Imparcial, El Mundo, Mexican Herald y Daily Record, no solo publican todos los informes de la Sociedad, pero lo hacen gratuitamente, y su ayuda es muy eficaz. El dia 1 de Septiembre en curso, comenzo a regir una nueva ordenanza sobre coches, y contiene reglamentos especificos sobre el trato de los animales El Articulo 1150 del Codigo Penal previene el buen trato de los animales, y sobre aquella base legal descansan provisiones municipales que datan de cincuenta años. Pero, debido a los esfuerzos de la Sociedad, la policia ya se esmera en la materia. La Sociedad ha distribuido 3000 ejemplares de "Amigos y Auxiliares," y 500 de "Azabache," ambos libros hermosamente ilustrados y repletos de consejos buenos; por el muy digno conducto de la Secretaria de Instruccion Publicia, los libros se distribuyen como premios entre los niños de las escuelas nacionales. La Sociedad esta colocando catorce fuentes, publicas en diferentes partes de la capital. Son donaciones a la Municipalidad de México, y el dinero para su costo fue solicitado por una comision de señoritas, socias de la S.P.A. La Municipalidad las coloca, las surte de agua y las conserva en condicion buena, perpétuamente. La National Humane Alliance de Nueva York, por conducto de la S.P.A., tambien dono a México una hermosa fuente de granito pulido, y sera colocado en lugar céntrico de la ciudad. Los fondos para los libros repartidos entre las escuelas procedian de fondos solicitados en los Estados Unidos por Mrs. H. C. Reynolds. Aun no es posible a la Sociedad hacer frente a los Toros, pero varios miembros han puesto término a las peleas de gallos. La Sociedad Protectora de Mujeres tiene el proposito de solicitar al Gobierno la suspension de los Toros. No es costumbre indigena a México, sino importada de España, y ya en España comienza una justa reaccion contra ella, que mas tarde tiene que comunicarse a Mexico.

Otra organizacion de importancia al desarrollo moral y aun material de Mexico es la Asociacion de Jovenes Cristianos. Se inauguro en Septiembre 20 de 1902, Se cifraban en ella las esperanzas de algunos caballeros Cristianos y ya sus esperanzas han sido coronadas con el éxito mas lisonjero. La Asocion tiene 570 miembros aparte de los 330 que constituyen el Sucursal Mexicano. La biblioteca, las clases, los baños, son muy populares. Hubo 200 reuniones religiosas, inclusivas las dedicadas a la lectura de la Biblia. Los gastos mensuales ascienden a $21,600 al año, pagados todos, y ya quedan solamente $2500 por pagar sobre las obligaciones incidentales al equipo de aquella institucion magnifica. El presidente del Sucursal Mexicano es el Sr. Ramon Corral, Vice-Presidente de la Republica, y este señor tiene un interés muy vivo en la obra.

El "Woman's Exchange," es otra institucion muy notable en la colonia Americana, debido a la buena obra que hace entre las mujeres mas o menos faltas de recursos. Fué organizada hace tres años, durante cuyo tiempo ha vendido articulos hechos por las mujeras, y las ventas que suman ya $36,000, representan tal cantidad repartida entre beneficiarias bastante agradecidas.

El Hogar Florence Crittenden, establecido en 1903, debe su origen a los esmuerzos de la Señora Ignacio Sepulveda, El Hogar esta situado en Rinconada de Santa Catarina, No. 2. Eminentemente propia de la mujer es su obra para sus hermanas desafortunadas, y merece el éxito que goza. Reciente mente, debido al generoso apoyo de Miss Beryl Hope, actriz Americana procedente de Los Angeles, Coadyuvada por el Sr. Chas. D. Waldron, de Nueva York, fueron dadas dos representaciones del "Charity Ball," en el Teatro Renacimiento, y el Hogar Crittenden fué beneficiado en la suma de $5000 a causa de las dos funciones.

Miss Hope partio para los Estados Unidos para organizar alli troupe con que dar en Mexico funciones Americanas, como The Christian, y otras partituras semejantes, y en la colonia Americana hay interés vivisimo sobre el experimento, propuesto, por primera vez, en esta capital.

CURRENT COMMENT.

AT THE convention of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters held in Philadelphia in August Cornelius P. Shea was reëlected to the presidency. This was accomplished, not because he had the confidence of the rank and file whom he is supposed to represent, but because he drew to his aid the vicious element among the delegates in Philadelphia and resorted to the methods of cheap and corrupt politicians. Before leaving Chicago for the convention Shea had been denounced and repudiated by many of those whom he had led into the disastrous teamsters' strike; he had been condemned elsewhere by officers and men as a notoriously corrupt and unsafe leader; it had been made plain to him, especially by those who had looked to him for protection and guidance, that he was no longer desired as a leader, but Shea had no intention of retiring, the berth was worth while, and he made a bitter and disgraceful but successful fight.

Usually, this would close the incident. The disappointed victims would do some grumbling among themselves, and then settle down to the situation with at least the semblance of acceptance. The unpopular leader would appear as if nothing disagreeable had happened; for, after all, the workers who support him in idleness and luxury have very little to say and are frequently only the means to the selfish ends of so-called leaders. But Shea's reëlection by fraud has a sequel. The Chicago commission wagon drivers recently determined to take a stand against the reëlection, and at a meeting of their local union voted unanimously to indorse a call for a referendum vote either for secession or the removal of Shea. A circular of protest had been issued, and a resolution was introduced denouncing Shea in unsparing terms. The resolution called for cleaner unionism. Whether it was adopted or not, and what more, if anything, has been done in the movement we are unable to say, as nothing further has come under our notice; but the independence of union workers toward corrupt and unfit leaders is a comparatively new feature in unionism. The demand for cleaner unionism is a hopeful sign, even if made as a matter of expediency and not of moral conviction.

Slugging and violence have cost the Chicago Federation of Labor $75,000 since May, according to a report which Secretary Hopp made on Monday last at a meeting of the federation. Of this amount $50,000 was used to pay attorneys' fees and court costs in the teamsters' strike. This expenditure has caused a deficit in the treasury of $600. Notwithstanding this, however, the federation, at its Monday meeting, decided to make a further appropriation of $1000 to defend Gilhooley and his codefendants of the Carriage and Wagonworkers' Union, who are now being tried for slugging. One of these defendants, George Meller, president of Carriageworkers' Union No. 4, and one of the instigators of a system of slugging practiced on non-union workmen, on September 20, withdrew his plea of not guilty and entered a plea of guilty. It was reported at the same time that he would make startling revelations of union methods of disposing of non-union men who had taken the places of Chicago strikers in recent labor struggles. Meller's testimony went to show that the executive board of the union held regular meetings to vote money as an inducement for Charles Gilhooley, Edward Feeley, Marcus Looney and others to "put non-unionists out of business." They put more than non-unionists "out of business," however, for one of their victims was the old man Carl Carlstrom, who died after being beaten brutally for refusing to strike with the wagonworkers. This assault was one of the most revolting and cowardly in the long list of union outrages, and clearly showed that the Gilhooleys and the Feeleys and the Looneys are fiends incarnate.

On August 1 evidence was brought to light that labor sluggers maintain in Chicago a place where systematic torture is meted out to those who incur the displeasure of sluggers, and a case was cited, that of William N. Wilder, formerly an army officer, and at the time of the recent teamsters' strike claim agent for a package express company. He disappeared July 6 and was held captive three weeks. When he was set at liberty he was half starved and so dazed he was unable to give a coherent account of his captivity. He was found by a friend walking aimlessly about the streets. Physicians pronounced his physical and mental condition such that he might not recover. Much of the time he raved wildly and, as if still under torture, begged for mercy. Marks all over his body showed that he had been bound with heavy cord, and over $100 which he was known to have had on his person was gone.

Until unionism is purged of the brutes in human form and of the leaders who are primarily responsible it stands condemned by the decent sentiment of the country and must be fought if our free institutions are to be preserved.

"PURITY" MOVEMENT.

A secret committee for the "purification of the labor movement" has been organized in Chicago. Headed by the men who successfully opposed Martin B. Madden in the recent election of the Chicago Federation of Labor, a committee has perfected a permanent organization. It was announced a few days ago by persons behind the movement that the chief aim of this new secret order will be to eliminate "graft" and "grafters" from office in trades unions.

SAN FRANCISCO.

MEAN REVENGE ON OLD MAN.

The Attack Was Made by a Discharged Employee.

Ruef Thugs Hatch Scheme to Deceive Voters.

Police Protect Rowdies at a Schmitz Meeting.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 6.—Tait's big café presented an aspect of gloom shortly after 8 o'clock the other evening, when the full corps of waiters, numbering eigthy in all, quit their posts of duty in a body and walked out of the place. So sudden was the upheaval that Manager Halton was unable to get hands to take the places of the men and the café was closed for the night.

The walkout originated over the dismissal of Frank Rovy, the head waiter of the establishment. Rovy's work apparently did not meet with the approval of Manager Halton and the latter discharged him about 8 o'clock, when the dinner rush was over. Rovy immediately informed his fellow-workmen of what had happened and they all decided to quit in sympathy. Manager Halton made a vain endeavor to persuade the waiters to remain, but they flatly refused, unless Rovy's position was again tendered him.

It was a contemptible trick on the part of the waiters to leave their work during the dinner hour, thereby causing inconvenience to many patrons who were dining at the time, as well as a monetary loss to Tait's, it being necessary to throw away many dollars worth of food stuffs. Early the next morning Tait's management succeeded in securing the services of new help to take the places made vacant by the strikers.

THUGS ATTACK AN OLD MAN.

A good sample of the union method of revenge is shown by the murderous attack made by Richard Ringe, a valise maker, on the person of aged Henry Harger, foreman in the shop where Ringe had been working up to the time of his discharge last week. Foreman Harger discharged Ringe because he failed to attend to his work properly. Ringe lay in wait for Harger, and when the old man was wending has way home from work the thug assaulted him in a most inhuman manner. The next day Harger swore to a warrant before Judge Mogan charging assault. Ringe will no doubt receive a good stiff sentence when his case is tried, unless his union friends come forward and exert their pull in his behalf.

The Bekins Van and Storage Company filed a second suit for an injunction against the Furniture and Piano Drivers' Union. Recently Judge Murasky dismissed an injunction suit against this same union on its promise that it would not commit any overt act.

In the complaint filed today it is claimed that the defendant has broken its word. The complaint states that on September 25 last, William McCord and a man named Ryan, members of the union, used abusive language at Gough and Market streets toward August Nelson, a driver, and James Hickey, a guard employed by the plaintiffs.

SCHEME TO DECEIVE VOTERS.

A scheme has been hatched by the Union Labor party whereby they hope to cause confusion among the voters who would cast their ballot for the Republican League, the party which is fighting for decent government. The scheme came to light last night when a gang of thugs and stuffers congregated in the Alhambra Theater and organized what they termed the Independent Republicans.

As many of the respectable citizens of San Francisco pay no attention to politics more than to cast their vote on election day, it is natural to suppose that were a ballot slip marked "Independent Republicans" thrust into their hands many would vote that ticket, thinking all the while that ballot was gong to swell the vote of the Republican League. The principal feature of the performance last night was the unusual activity of the police, who shortly before had failed to do their duty and encouraged the unseemly disturbances that marked the recent Republican League gatherings in this same place. The cause of the remarkable display of energy on the part of the bluecoats was an auditor in the gallery who differed from the sentiment expressed by one of the speakers on the platform.

The performer on the platform had said:

"The issue is between the predatory rich and labor. Labor will win."

"You're a —— liar," came the voice from the gallery. "Labor won't win."

QUEER POLICE PROTECTION.

The nearest policeman was at the back of the disturber in a second, and with a warning hand upon the offender's shoulder fiercely ordered him to desist. The officer was joined by a sergeant and two patrolmen, who kept guard over the man who had the temerity to make in a Ruef-Labor assemblage a comparatively infinitesimal portion of the disturbance which the guardians of the peace had permitted to go unchecked at the Republican League meetings.

The man of dissenting views broke out a little later with a call:

"Three cheers for Partridge!"

The unionists shrieked, "Put him out," and the sergeant and squad pounced upon the offender and ejected him from the building, thereby maintaining the rights of free and uninterrupted speech in administration meetings, which they have denied in all other meetings.

There were present at this convention a hard looking bunch of San Francisco's disreputables. Prominent in the crowd appeared the faces of Bernardi, the leader of the recent riotous strike of the Newsboys' Union against the Bulletin; "Happy Dougherty," president of the Newsboys' Union; Col. Kowalsky's colored valet and massage artist; and the original "Blinker Murphy," who was taking an evening's vacation from the seat of his hack.

The fact of the matter is there were so many criminal-looking characters in the convention that the police about town, could they have viewed the motley crowd, would have been certain that their districts would have been practically free from crime for the evening.

RUEF MAKES A SPIEL.

After several hard-looking characters had said their say, Abe Ruef, the boss of the present Union Labor administration, was called to the platform. The curly boss attacked the Republican League and its leaders by name, said things about the "lying newspapers," declared that there had been no graft by the administration, eulogized himself and Schmitz, and made many vague threats. He was loudly applauded during his long harangue by his "dogs with bones."

Chairman J. H. Powers of the committee on action presented a report calling for the organization of an "independent Republican party" by the renegades and hoboes, and the nomination or indorsement of the entire ticket nominated by Ruef's Union Labor convention last week, and the ticket to be placed on the official ballot by petition. During the reading of the names of the nominees, that of Police Judge Conlan received the most pronounced applause, the delegates appearing to have a more intimate acquaintance with him than the other candidates, but such an acquaintance is to be expected from men who are continually in fear of the law. They believe in being friendly with the courts, possibly following out that old adage, "In time of peace prepare for war."

WHAT IS MEANT BY OPEN SHOP.

WOULD IMPROVE THE CHARACTER OF LABOR UNIONS.

Economically, a Labor Monopoly is Costly, Wasteful and Dangerous to Prosperity of the Community; Socially, it is Destructive of Manhood and of Power of the Individual.

At the annual convention of the New York State Association of Master Bakers, says the Oswego, N. Y. Times, the counsel of the association, Mr. Henry Weisman, who was formerly a journeyman baker, and a labor leader, took occasion to speak in emphatic terms of the "open shop" principle, especially in the baking industry. This principle, he averred, is not opposed to rational labor unionism or any kind of rational organization. It does not forbid any man to employ union labor if it shows itself to be preferable, or to make an agreement with a union of which his workmen are members for certain wages or hours or conditions in their employment. But he cannot consistently with that principle bind himself to employ none but union men, or exclude from his employment non-union men, who accept the same terms as others; and he cannot deprive himself of the liberty of not entering into such contracts and employing men individually upon terms satisfactory to them and to himself, if he finds it preferable.

This principle would give men an equal chance to work at their several trades and occupations, whether they saw fit to belong to unions or not, and would protect employers in the liberty of employing union or non-union men, as best suited their purpose. It would tend strongly to induce unions to confine themselves to legitimate purposes of organization, and legitimate methods of effecting those purposes, because there would be competition in labor. Unions would have to gain strength by winning to their membership the best workmen on account of benefits offered, and making it to the advantage of the employers to chose their workmen from that membership, and to make collective bargains with them, and not by coercion, intimidation or interference with the rights and liberties of those who preferred individual independence.

And on the other hand, and oppositely, what the "closed shop," or the exclusive union shop, "principle" aims at, is simply and solely the power of monopoly in labor, a monopoly liable to do more harm than monopolies of capital, because directed with less intelligence and foresight, and less appreciation of twhat real self-interest demands. It is a monopoly that can be maintained only by a constant suppression of individual rights, and personal liberties, which it is the chief purpose of our Government, and our laws, to sustain and protect. The wrongs that may be committed in the name of labor unionism, when it becomes despotic, are more in number and more flagrant in character, than any that organizations of capital would dare to attempt, and we have had examples of them in the last year or two. There is a continuing example, where the closed shop principle is tolerated, as it largely is in the building trades of this city, and in the dependence of employers on the tyranny and caprice of the delegates and agents of the unions, which hamper their operations and add materially to the cost and waste of their business, without any benefit to workingmen.

Economically, a labor monopoly is costly and wasteful, and dangerous to the prosperity of the community; socially, it is destructive of manhood, and of the power of the individual to better his own condition and elevate himself, and, politically, it impairs the rights of men and sacrifices their liberties, subverts law and order, and saps the very foundations of free government. The principle of the open shop is the underlying principle of democratic institutions.

THE FIGHT OF EMPLOYERS.

To Establish and Maintain the Open Shop.

Coercion of Union Printers Must be Opposed.

Demands They Make Oppressive and Ruinous.

[American Industries:] The board of directors of the National Association of Manufacturers today adopted the following preamble and resolution:

"Whereas, The Typographical Labor Union is now engaged in a combined attack upon employing printers in various parts of the country, to enforce various union rules, and said labor union is encouraging its members to strike and so far as possible paralyze the general printing industry; and

"Whereas, This demand for closed union shop conditions, under which the labor trust seeks to make it impossible for any free American to sell his labor, is a demand for conditions intolerable, tyrannous, and illegal, its illegality being clearly defined by various late court decisions, the substance of which is here briefly summarized: The right to dispose of one's labor as he will, and to have the benefit of one's lawful contracts, is incident to the freedom of the individual, which lies at the foundation of the government in all countries that maintain the principle of civil liberty. An intentional interference with such a right without lawful justification is malicious in law, even if it is from good motives and without express malice. A contract between an employer and a labor union looking to the establishment of a closed shop does not constitute lawful justification, for such contract tends to the creation of a labor monopoly or trust. On the contrary, such contract renders both the employer and labor trust legally liable to any person whose interests are injured thereby; and

"Whereas, The union demand for a material increase in their already high wages (cloaked under the disguise of an eight-hour day) would force the price of all printing to advance beyond the present prices, already burdensome to the public; and

"Whereas, This attack upon the printing employers and the effort by the labor trust to force higher prices on the people are a trust movement, against the interests of the people and solely in the interests of the members of the labor trust: therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the National Association of Manufacturers recommend to its members universal support of the employing printers in resisting these attacks, the purchase of printing of the lawful open shops, and active legal prosecution of both employer and union members, parties to any unlawful closed-shop agreements; and, further, that members and other business men be urged to refrain from enforcing contracts for printing during illegal attacks of labor unions."

There are still people in this country, it seems, who do not fully realize that any and all of the demands—for they are all demands—made by organized labor for any advantage of its own whatever are intended either more firmly to establish the closed shop wherever it is already in vogue or else to change the open shop into something as near to the closed shop kind of labor monopoly as possible. Some of the older English unions, taught by the hard lessons of experience, have found that the open shop, implying nothing more nor less than labor unionism on its merits and without coercion, is the best, and, indeed, the only thing for labor unionism itself. In this country it is almost universally the practice for labor unionism to be militant, and hence coercive, and, because coercive, violent whenever necessary, overbearing and tyrannical by habit and of necessity, and restrictive, economically speaking, in all its operations and propositions.

This must be so until labor unionism learns that a free country, in which the right to work is the dearest heritage of all mankind and of every man individually, cannot successfully be denied for any length of time, and that unionism must exist, if at all, finally and perhaps before many years, solely on its merits, without coercion or the need of it; hence without restrictions in regard to apprentices or the use of machinery; hence without arbitrary demands, employment or no employment, industry or no industry, for higher wages or shorter hours, all of them parts, and necessary parts, of the same programme of restriction and coercion, tending, all of them, equally and necessarily, in the direction of the closed shop; hence without labor blackmail in politics, pretending to have votes and frightening politicians into thinking they have votes when they have them not, when the votes cannot be organized for such unpatriotic proposals, and when an aroused public opinion would beat them ten to one, if not one hundred to one, provided they got them organized; hence without the picket, the boycott and the slugging committee, all equally necessary phases of militant trades unionism's programme of restriction, coercion and violence; for it is useless to demand shorter hours or higher wages, or the control of the foreman, or the recognition of the union, without being prepared to stand on the corners and prevent free and independent workmen from going in to take the places that have been abandoned once for all, to follow the manufactured article even into the home to try to boycott it, to pursue the independent workman even to his home, or father, to terrorize and maim him, and, in short, to carry out to its logical conclusion, no matter how much of conspiracy or violence may be involved, the necessary programme, and every part of it, involved in winning that kind of success.

It is the fight of the National Association of Manufacturers, on behalf of themselves as large employers of labor and on behalf of all their hundreds of thousands of employés, to see to it in every possible way (that is also honorable,) that the widespread establishment of the open shop (the factory without discrimination for or against a workingman on account of membership or lack of membership in any society whatever,) be made as nearly permanent as possible, and to prevent any closed shop conspiracy whatever from succeeding. It is the fight of every man who has been boycotted from one end of the country to another by that most diabolical of all conspiracies which pursues a man everywhere. It is the fight of every employer, and of every workman working for every employer, who has had conditions of shop management, all respective, all coercive, mind you, as a part of the militant programme of trades-unionism, which it must resort to or it cannot establish the closed shop of coercion and conspiracy—it is that man's fight because ultimately he cannot stay in business, nor can his workmen work for him, if conditions, whether relative to hours, wages, or what not, become too burdensome for the business to bear. It is the fight of every manufacturer and employer using machinery and giving the public the benefit of the cheapened product, which he must do whether he will or not; and it is the fight of every inventor of every machine. Especially is it the fight of every self-reliant, independent, free American citizen, who may like unionism or not, but who does like, and ought to like (because he must like,) the opportunity to work for his own and himself under such conditions as he can find to be acceptable; for while it is conceivable or likely that he would see advantages in organization for proper economic purposes under the law, it is not conceivable that for any length of time he should be willing to give over, perhaps forever, the right to be free from such organization if he chose, especially since he knows only too well that power leads to the abuse of power and to tyranny unless opposition expresses itself in season.

Perhaps it ought to be noted (or possibly it ought not to be noted) that the publishers of daily newspapers and the other publishers of the country are most closely in the shadow of similar and even more exacting demands about to be made by the Typographical Union upon themselves; for just as the union announced arbitrarily that impossible conditions must obtain on the first of January, 1906, or the individual employer and perhaps the organized employers in the job printing trade should be prevented from doing business, so the Publishers' Association (the publishers of the great daily newspapers) must similarly face a like condition of affairs on the first of May 1907. It may be said that the Typographical Union is not strong by itself; that it is weak numerically and because of the fact that the pressmen stereotypers etc., allied with it must be depended upon by it to make its demands successful. Even if this be so, the present conspiracy of the Typographical Union to dominate the printing industry of the country hangs like a pall over the daily newspaper publishers today, just as it threatened the employing job printers a month or two ago; for we have the word of Mr. James Lynch, head of the Typographical Union, for it that the printers' union will never cease making its demands until the employers are sticking the type and the printers are riding in the carriages.

We repeat that this is very much the fight of the newspaper publishers, whether associated in their own organization or not. But it is not their fight any more than it is the fight today of the employing job printer, the manufacturer, the general employer, no matter if he employs but a single person behind the counter somewhere, and, equally and especially, the fight of all of the independent working people who want to see productive enterprise continued. It is the fight of the coal operators of Eastern Pennsylvania today, if they have in mind the immediate comfort and the future welfare of the million, their customers not by divine right but by the establishment of a practical natural monopoly. It is the fight of public men, presidents, governors, legislators, educators, who will yet perceive that restriction here is restriction there, that coercion here is violence in some other place, and that there can be only one of two results from the friction of these industrial controversies—the closed shop with its restriction, coercion, strikes, pickets, boycotts and conspiracies to ruin, or else the open shop in which the welfare of the working people themselves is inseparably bound up. There never was a proposal of unionism as conducted by the Lynches, the Mitchells and the Sheas (nor by the Gomperses, the commanding generals at a safe distance,) which did not contemplate establishing the closed shop. There has not been a fight to resist any one and all of these propositions that has not had for its basis the necessity for self-defense or even for self-preservation; the necessity for the continuance of productive enterprise; the necessity, even, for the permanence of democratic institutions.

WHAT THEY DO IN ENGLAND.

While trades-unions have undoubtedly come to stay, it will be an unfortunate thing both for the general public and the workingmen themselves if their increase in numbers and power has the same effect on industry in the United States that trades-unionism has had in England. It has been remarked again and again by competent observers during the past year that one of the chief reasons why England is suffering an industrial decline, her own markets being successfully "invaded" and captured by American dealers, is because of the influence of English trades-unions. In a recent report to our State Department, Consul Mahin of Nottingham, England, offers his testimony on this subject. "The trades-unions," he says, "seriously hamper cheap production in this country. Though wages are nominally lower than in the United States, they are, in fact, higher, if anything, considering the work actually done, under the British workingman's theory that to prolong a job by doing it slowly makes more work. Under the operation of the trades-union rules, the slowest worker sets the pace of his associates, no matter what their number may be."—[Leslie's Weekly.

THEY PREDICT A SHUT-DOWN.

Coal Operators Say Miners are Facing Crisis.

Industry in Six Producing States Threatened.

Final Effort to Crush Power of Workers' Union.

On April 1, 1906, every coal miner in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, West Virginia and part of Kentucky will close down for an indefinite period, if perdictions made here tonight by prominent operators shall be verified, says a Pittsburgh dispatch to the Chicago Chronicle.

A meeting of the coal operators of all these States has been called to be held November 22 at Chicago. It is the plan of the originators of this move to shut down the mines and keep them closed until the United Mine Workers are ready to accept a reduction of from 10 to 15 cents a ton on the present mining rate.

This is the programme which is to be carried out, if the eastern contingent, or the anthracite operators, can bring it about. The bituminous coal operators favor advancing the price of coal by closing down the mines to limit the output.

Herman Justi, commisioner for the Illinois Coal Operators' Association, sent out the call. This will be the first time the anthracite coal operators will have entered into an agreement with the bituminous coal operators. The object of this is to stifle the increasing growth of unionism in the eastern coal mines.

There exists an agreement among the Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois coal operators known as the interstate agreement, whereby the operators annually meet the United Mine Workers of the various districts and settle on a mining rate for the year. The anthracite coal operators are unwilling to deal with the Miners' Union and have about 30,000 miners employed in Eastern Pennsylvania under individual contracts. To kill the Miners' Union the anthracite employers must have the assistance of the coal operators of the West.

All the wage scales in the States named expire April 1; in fact, nearly all the mining scales of the country expire on that date. It is to meet this crisis that the meeting has been called in Chicago next November. The coal miners are getting better wages than ever in the history of the industry, taking working facilities into consideration. The interstate price is based on 85 cents per ton for coal mined and run over an inch and one-quarter screen.

Some of the western coal operators want this reduced to 70 cents a ton, and the coal miners will be met with this proposition this coming January at the wage conference. The eastern coal operators will not be represented at this gathering. Of course, the coal miners' representatives will refuse to accept the reduction and the mines may be closed down until either side is starved out.

As a result the anthracite coal operators have begun piling up coal and will do so all winter. The soft coal producers, it is said, will fill their docks at both ends of the lakes and will load every boat, barge and scow obtainable with coal between now and April 1. The operators have reached an understanding whereby no contracts are to be accepted for coal between now and April 1—that is, for delivery after April 1. It is expected that on that date coal will advance at least 50 cents a ton. This, it is pointed out, is where the coal operators will benefit and really will make more mony than by operating their plants.

Several big Pittsburgh concerns have been at their wits' end to make contracts for fuel beyond April 1 without being able to place a contract for a ton of coal. Storage facilities cannot be had on short notice, and the consumers will be forced to pay the price demanded by the operators, who will hold their surplus coal from now on.

Francis L. Robbins, president of the Pittsburgh Coal Company, who is also chairman of the interstate agreement, is probably the best authority on the situation. The companies he heads mine and ship more coal th Philadelphia and Reading, the and the Lackawanna railroads bined. Mr. Robbins spoke freely o threatened shutdown.

"The consumer," he said, "has getting his coal too cheap. It i fault of overproduction. The holder having his money invested coal properties is entitled to get thing out of it, which he is not ting. The eastern operators have begun storing their coal. have not the facilities to store product, except to load the docks our boats, which we are doing.

"I don't know that there is a eral agreement to shut down what will be done at the Chicago ing next November. John Mitch president of the United Mine Wo has made certain demands on the thracite coal operators, some of w I know they will not grant. The ers want an eight-hour work day, ognition of the union in some minimum wage scale for laborers about the mines and incr and uniform pay for boys and skilled workmen. As a result the thracite operators are preparing to sist these demands.

"The joint conference to be held January between the coal miners operators will be fraught with dangers to the workingmen. It be the greatest in the history of industry. Personally I insist that coal miners must send their dele to the wage conference uninstru If they have not faith in their gates they should not send them. also claim that the operators do the same. It will be useless us to hold a conference if either is to come to the sessions with resolutions. Both sides must be to give and take, hence I am accord with some of the sugges made up to date.

"Our stockholders have not been ting what they should out of properties. We have been giving consumers their coal too cheap. of our patrons would object to 10 or 15 cents a ton more for coal vided the other fellow did not coal cheaper. An advance of 10 a ton on coal would mean a earning of $2,000,000 to our making a nice dividend and for a surplus.

"The consumer will have more for his product. Some gain their end by reducing the mining, but here we will be up the same proposition again. The of coal likewise would be re the present competitive state miner and coal operator would better off. The only thing to curtail the output by closing a period. I am told the mines rather close down the mines month or two than to accept a tion in wages."

There are about 400,000 ployed in the coal-mining who would be affected by a next April. Taking the shippi into account, fully 500,000 be driven into enforced idle two months or more. The Pit Coal Company employs 65,0 Mr. Robbins pointed out that feature in the mining industry manner in which most of the went to labor. He said the the ground cost 5 cents a ton other 95 per cent. of cost in represented the cost of labor ing, loading, shipping and trans so that labor represented 95 pe in the total expenditures.

The output in the mines th close down, estimated on the produced in 1904, is 23,186,782, the mines close during April it means that 46,373,564 tons will be taken out of the marke total capacity is much larger, was considered a dull year. which should have sold from $1.05 per ton, has been selling as 85 cents a ton for coal run inch and one-quarter screen, run-of-mine has been selling 90 cents a ton. Anticipating down, prices have already and $1.05 is now being paid, expected that the price will 10 cents a ton by the beginn winter.

The officials of the Unite Workers say they will have fighting chance to hold out a sweeping reduction, as the c ers have been working stead have been getting better pa 1890 and, taking facilities fo into consideration, they hav making more money.

The right of the court to ent ment in favor of plaintiff in a for the recovery of real estate defendant is in possession b defendant's non-compliance wi of court requiring him to depo half the reporter's per diem be ceeding to trial, is denied in v. KILLING "SCAB" HIGHL COMMENDABLE AC

CERTAIN men in Missouri are engaged in a determined effort to prevent the execution of a criminal who is now under sentence of death for murder, in Kansas City. The murderer's guilt is not disputed. It is not alleged that his trial was unfair, or that the evidence on which he was convicted was insuffient, or improperly admitted against him, says the New York Sun. His guilt is admitted specifically by the men who are endeavoring to prevent the law from taking its course in his case. In an appeal for aid sent by a Kansas City trade unionist to a union official in Chicago is this sentence:

"The crime of which he is guilty, is that of killing a scab after a fight."

The only hope these unionists have of saving the man whom they admit to be guilty of the crime of murder, is that Gov. Folk man commute his sentence to life imprisonment. If this is done, they expect in time to procure the murderer's pardon. What reason have the trade unionists of Kansas City to think that an appeal from a Chicago organization ingmen would influence Gov. in passing upon the case murderer? With amazing they disclose it in the in which they admit the guil convicted man:

"Folk has a bee in his President of the United therefore, outside requests more effect than those here

It is no news that certain of organized labor regard the of a non-union man as a highly mendable act. In the formal for aid in behalf of this murder sentiment is expressed no more ly than it has been in speeches, writings and other ings emanating from "labor in the past. The interest of the dent lies in the attitude of Folk. Will he join with these ers in regarding the man who a scab" as a fit subject for clemency? Or will he hold th murderer should pay the penalty his deed, no matter if he is a and his victim was guilty of the of working for a living.

PORTLAND, Oct. 4.—The livestock show at the Lewis and Clark Exposition, which closed September 29, proved the crowning feature of the exposition. The show was a success in every way—well managed, excellent in quality, and propitious in its results. Therefore the live-stock men are glad and the citizens of Portland and of the whole Pacific Northwest are rejoiced that almost the closing feature should prove the most successful of all. The fair will close on October 14, with a record of 2,500,000 admissions to its credit, and of having accomplished its purpose, which was to tell the world of the greatness of the land which Lewis and Clark added to Uncle Sam's domain by their expedition of discovery a century ago.

The livestock show opened on September 19, with nearly 2000 entries. There was available in prize money about $60,000, and this was a considerable inducement, but a greater inducement, said the eastern breeders who attended, was found in the excellent market for blooded stock which the Oregon country presents.

There were two surprising features of the show—the size of the crowds which attended every day, and the remarkable quality of the stock exhibited by western breeders. When W. Ladd's Loretta D. was declared to be the finest cow in the world at the St. Louis World's Fair last year, people woke up to the fact that Oregon is a great stock country, but no one prepared for the showing made at Portland Fair.

The stock show was strongest in the of shorthorn cattle, and this was better represented, according the Executive Committee of the American Shorthorn Breeders' Association, which attended the show, than ever before in America. The other cattle breeds were all strong, and the showing of horses, sheep, swine, and jacks was a revelation. In every class Oregon breeders won, and in some they monopolized the situation.

The show was a success in every way—well managed, excellent in quality, and propitious in its results. Therefore the live-stock men are glad and the citizens of Portland and of the whole Pacific Northwest are rejoiced that almost the closing feature should prove the most successful of all. The fair will close on October 14, with a record of 2,500,000 admissions to its credit, and of having accomplished its purpose, which was to tell the world of the greatness of the land which Lewis and Clark added to Uncle Sam's domain by their expedition of discovery a century ago.

The livestock show opened on September 19, with nearly 2000 entries. There was available in prize money about $60,000, and this was a considerable inducement, but a greater inducement, said the eastern breeders who attended, was found in the excellent market for blooded stock which the Oregon country presents.

There were two surprising features of the show—the size of the crowds which attended every day, and the remarkable quality of the stock exhibited by western breeders. When W. S. Ladd's Loretta D. was declared to be the finest cow in the world at the St. Louis World's Fair last year, people woke up to the fact that Oregon was a great stock country, but no one pared for the showing made at Fair.

show was strongest in the of shorthorn cattle, and this better represented, according Executive Committee of the Shorthorn Breeders' Association which attended the show, than in America. The other cattle were all strong, and the of horses, sheep, swine, and jacks was a revelation. In every class Oregon breeders prizes, and in some they monopolized the situation.

Scappoose, some thirty miles Portland, lives P. A. Frakes. has been going about, in ostentatious way, for seventeen pursuing the even tenor of his life, and, incidentally, improving every opportunity his herd cattle. The Scappoose brought fourteen head of exposition, all Holsteins, carried away thirteen prizes, the first award for bulls or over, second and fourth bulls two years or under award for bulls one year two, second for bulls under one year old and first and third for cows, three years or over.

The victory of the Oregon farmer was made more notable by the fact that in competition with him were the herds of John B. Irwin of Minneapolis, which carried off first honors last year at St. Louis, the Hazelwood Farm Company of Spokane and C. B. Pierce of San Francisco. It demonstrated most conclusively that cattle can be raised advantageously in Oregon, and brought the western commonwealth into national prominence among dairy states.

In the shorthorn class Oregon also distinguished herself, but the prize for champion bull went to Sacramento, Cal. Many states were represented in the contest for prize awards. Notable among the breeders who showed stock were C. E. Ladd of Portland, and North Yamhill; H. W. Peel of Chattaroy, Wash.; J. P. Graves of Spokane, Wash.; Tebo Land and Stock Company of Clinton, Mo.; J. G. Robbins & Son of Horace, Ind., and W. O. Minor of Heppner, Ore. In ten sections the judges placed two first awards on Mr. Ladd's shorthorns, together with five third awards, three seconds, one fourth, two sevenths and one eighth. Mr. Minor was awarded three thirds, a fifth, a seventh and an eighth. In not a single section of the class did an Oregon shorthorn fail to score.

Similar results marked the competitions in other classes of cattle. Nearly all the awards on Jerseys were taken by Oregon exhibitors, a majority going to the W. S. Ladd estate. Creditable showing was made also in this class by Atkinson Brothers of Newberg, Ore., and D. H. Looney of Jefferson, Ore. Mrs. William Honeyman, of Portland, took all awards for Ayrshires, without competition.

In sheep, the W. S. Ladd estate took many prizes in southdowns and Richard Scott of Milwaukee, Ore., in the Dorset class. In the latter class the competition was keen between Mr. Scott's entries and those of R. N. Martin of Thorndale, Ont. U. S. Grant of Dallas, William Riddell & Son of Monmouth, Edward L. Naylor of Forest Grove and J. B. Stump of Monmouth, all Oregon breeders, divided the honors in the goat show, which was of unusual quality.

While a majority of the entries in swine were Oregon animals, there was considerable outside competition. Richard Scott's great Berkshires were pitted against droves brought from British Columbia by H. M. Vasey, and captured the first prize and most of the others.

Such is a brief summary of the results of the show. A more detailed account would show even more clearly the superiority of the Oregon cattle and sheep and swine in nearly every instance. In horses the entries were mostly by eastern importers, and McLaughlin Brothers of Columbus, Ohio, and J. Crouch & Son of LaFayette, Ind., carried away most of the honors.

The show passed without friction of any kind, and there was no complaint on account of unfair awards. When the final hour for filing protests had arrived it was found that not a single objection to the decisions of the judges had been made.

ARTIFICIAL COTTON MADE FROM PINE WOOD.

Some recent experiments have been made in Bavaria in regard to preparing artificial cotton from pine wood, and it is said that the new process allows it to be made cheaply enough for the artificial cotton to compete with the natural product. In the method which has proved the most successful the wood, which has had the bark removed is cut into thin sticks or fibres one-sixteenth of an inch or less in thickness. These are placed in a large horizontal copper cylinder lined with lead into which steam is passed. When the separating action of the steam on the wood fibre has been prolonged sufficiently, an acid solution of sodium sulphite is added, and the cylinder is heated under a pressure of three atmospheres during thirty-six hours. The wood, which has become completely white, is washed, and then passed through a crusher. After washing again, the fibres are further whitened by a chloride of lime treatment. The matter which is thus obtained is dried, and constitutes a pure cellulose, which is then heated under pressure with a mixture of nitric and hydrochloric acids and chloride of zinc. The pasty mass thus formed is mixed with a little gelatine and castor oil, which give a certain resistance to the fibre. The cellulose is then formed into fine threads by a spinning machine, and these are washed in a carbonate of soda solution and dried. These threads are said to form a very good fabric when woven, and can easily be dyed. Although the experiments have as yet been carried on only in the laboratory, there is no doubt that the process may be applied on a large scale, thus coming into the European market as a competitor for the imported cotton.

Where It Really Was Cold.

At the boarding-house on Morrison street they were discussing climate. The Portland man declared that the ground last winter never froze to a depth of two inches.

"It froze two feet where I came from," said the man from New Jersey.

"Up in the Adirondack Mountains," remarked the New Yorker, "the ground last winter froze to a depth of ten feet."

The Iowa man sat quietly munching his lettuce while the others expectantly awaited his effort to outmatch the New Yorker.

"Pshaw!" he said, "that's nothing. Why, back in Des Moines the ground froze so deep that the Chinese Emperor sent a request to Gov. Cummings to start a fire. He complained that his subjects had cold feet."—[Portland Oregonian.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE SOUTHWEST

INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS AND MATERIAL GROWTH IN THE LAND OF SUNSHINE.

An Orange Grower's Profits.

When 290 Valencia orange trees, representing an average of only a fraction more than two and one-half acres, produces net returns to the amount of nearly $2700 in a single season, such evidence should be convincing proof to the world that such property cannot be had in every country.

The above figures represent the proceeds to O. L. Jordan, whose ranch is at the foot of Greenleaf avenue, Whittier, California, U. S. A., and are the result of this season's crop. Two thousand six hundred and eighty dollars from 290 trees represents more than $9 a tree. Would Mr. Jordan sell that ranch? Well, it would require a mighty fancy price to induce him to even think of such a thing.

Last year he received $2000 from his thirteen acres of walnuts and the crop this year promises to be as good. He has three acres of naval orange trees in full bearing, and all authorities are now agreed that the navel market this winter will be good, so the chances are that from about nineteen acres of oranges and walnuts the receipts this year will be about $5000. In addition, Mr. Jordan has three acres of walnuts and two of Valencias which have not reached the producing stage.

He has owned his ranch of twenty-four acres for sixteen years, purchasing it shortly after the collapse of the boom for $100 an acre, and knows the making of the place. He planted every tree and shrub himself, the walnut grove bearing the distinction of being the only one in the neighborhood grown from the seed without replanting. It is said on good authority that the ranch cannot be purchased for $1000 an acre.

Tho above article is not published for the aggrandizement of Mr. Jordan. In fact, he was reticent about furnishing the information. It is printed simply to demonstrate what soil in this section is capable of producing.

Does your ranch, of equally good growing qualities, bring such returns? It can certainly be made to do so.—[Whittier News.

IN A PITTSBURGH ROLLING MILL.

VISITOR DESCRIBES THE MAKING OF A STEEL BEAM.

Pincers Grip Masses of Glowing Metal—Red-hot Ingots are Ground Through Cylinders—Rush and Roar of Machinery—No Human Agency Visible.

A Pittsburgh correspondent of the London Daily Mail gives the following vivid picture of the scene in a rolling mill:

"There were lines of subterranean furnaces, each with a covered top. Without sign of man, a top would quickly unroll off one, and from above a pair of gaunt pincers would sink through the smoke into the fiery pit. Up came the pincers, now holding firmly in their grip a mass of glowing red and golden metal, seven or eight tons in weight, that made the air more than tropical as it approached. Still without sign of human agency, an electric crane ran along a beam just below the ceiling, and put the metal on the rollers, a series of revolving metal cylinders, which carried it forward to the crushers. A monster double engine; of tremendous power, was keeping up a deafening roar, culminating every minute in a crash.

"Machines and metal seemed living things. As the heated mass touched the crushers it gave a cry like the whinnying of a horse shot in battle, and its outer coat peeled off, and the air was full of glowing cinders. When it passed through the rolling mills, coming out at the other side a little longer, the mills instantly reversed and sent it back again under the crushers.

"While this was happening, the pincers went down again into another pit, taking out another ingot of hot metal. A little way further on a mass of fiery sparks ascended to the heavens as a finished beam went under the saw and was cut to size as easily as soft wood under a steam saw.

"The metal I had been watching continued to run backwards, each time emerging from the crushers a little longer. It raised itself, and the sound that came seemed like a groan. But it was only the turning action of the regulating machinery.

"The inhuman thing about it all was that all progressed without apparent interference of man. I stood there for some minutes witnessing all without seeing a face. Then a boy appeared, regulating the water that steamed on the metal. Gradually a few men came out from behind. But the machinery appeared to run itself.

"At last the rolling for my one piece was over. It had assumed the shape of a 12-inch beam, such as is used for steel frame construction. Then the beam ran further forward. At a given point it stopped, and a saw cut the end. Again it ran forward to be out of the way of the crushing machinery which was already dealing with fresh metal. Further forward, a bar behind it moved and ran it up to the end of a long metal platform, where were numbers of similar beams. Here human labor for the first time came in. A man was standing there, who turned the beam over as it reached where he was.

"Involuntarily I had followed the course of the thing. I turned to the man. "You've never seen anything like this I warrant," he said. "This is the greatest rolling mill on earth, the 40-inch mill."

"His black face was beaded with perspiration, and I suddenly awakened to the fact that my clothes were drenched because of the fierce heat."

HAD READ THEM ALL.

They had just met, and conversation wass omewhat fitful. Finally, he decided to guide it into literary channels, where he was more at home, and turning to his companion, asked: "Are you fond of literature?" "Passionately," she replied. "I love books dearly." "Then you must admire Sir Walter Scott," he exclaimed with sudden animation. "Is not his 'Lady of the Lake' exquisite in its flowing grace and poetic imagery? Is it not——." "It is perfectly lovely," she assented, clasping her hands in ectasy. "I suppose I have read it a dozen times." "And Scott's 'Marmion,'" he continued, "with its rugged simplicity and marvelous description—one can almost smell the heather on the heath while perusing its splendid pages." "It is perfectly grand," she murmured. "And Scott's 'Peveril of the Peak' and his noble 'Bride of Lammermoor'—where in the English language will you find anything more heroic than his grand auld Scottish characters and his graphic, forceful pictures of feudal times and customs. You like them, I am sure." I just dote upon them," she replied. "And Scott's Emulsion," he continued hastily, for a faint suspicion was beginning to dawn upon him. "I think," she interrupted, rashly, "that it's the best thing he ever wrote."—[Office Topics.

Theoretical Infanticide.

President Roosevelt should give his attention to the problem of theoretical infanticide which lurks in the attitude of certain apartment landlords in New York City. It is a far more fruitful subject at present than race suicide. According to a statement made by one of these landlords, he charges 20 per cent. more for tenants with children than for tenants without them. This, he says, represents the wear and tear from the presence of the little chicks. The question to be decided, however, is what is to become of the man of old-fashioned family who is a wage earner? Must he take finally to the open lots? It begins to look so, or else race suicide will be upon us with a rush, following in the wake of widespread infanticide.—[New Haven Register.

Every Musician
Every Lover of Music

Has the desire to some day own a Steinway Piano. The Steinway is a finality. After you obtain a Steinway there is nothing better to be had—nothing more to say. Many people perceive that economy is truly served by securing a Steinway in the first place—others exchange their pianos for Steinways. We will take your old piano in exchange as part payment on a Steinway. Come in and talk it over with us.

Flexible Rubber Dental Plates

Have many advantages over the old thick, cumbersome, ordinary rubber plates and even over gold plates, being much lighter and thinner. These plates are flexible, only a trifle thicker than heavy writing paper, fit closer and adhere better to the roof of the mouth. Particles of food and small seeds cannot get under them. They will last longer, are stronger than any others and will not break, as they will give first, being flexible. Dr. Schiffman's own process, and made only by us.

GREAT COMMERCIAL OPPORTUNITY AWAITING LOS ANGELES' GRASP.

A RIVER of golden dollars is gliding by Los Angeles, where it rightfully belongs, into the pockets of Europe, New York, New Orleans. We are being fed the shucks.

But here is a rainbow of hope.

There is a possibility that the great banana trust may open up wonderful Central American commercial opportunities to Los Angeles—if we care to grasp them.

Merchants of this city will be interested in a Los Angeles young man, Hogan, who is a planter in Costa Rica. He tells the story of the rich trade we are losing there.

Although we are the natural gateway of trade between Central America and civilization, he tells how all the trade is going past us, and taking a very round-about route to get past.

"I never have seen a Los Angeles label on any goods in Costa Rica," says Hogan.

Young Hogan believes that, with a little pressure and a little persuasion, one of the big fleet of the banana trust's steamers might be shifted to the Pacific Coast and to San Pedro, to be followed by other steamers.

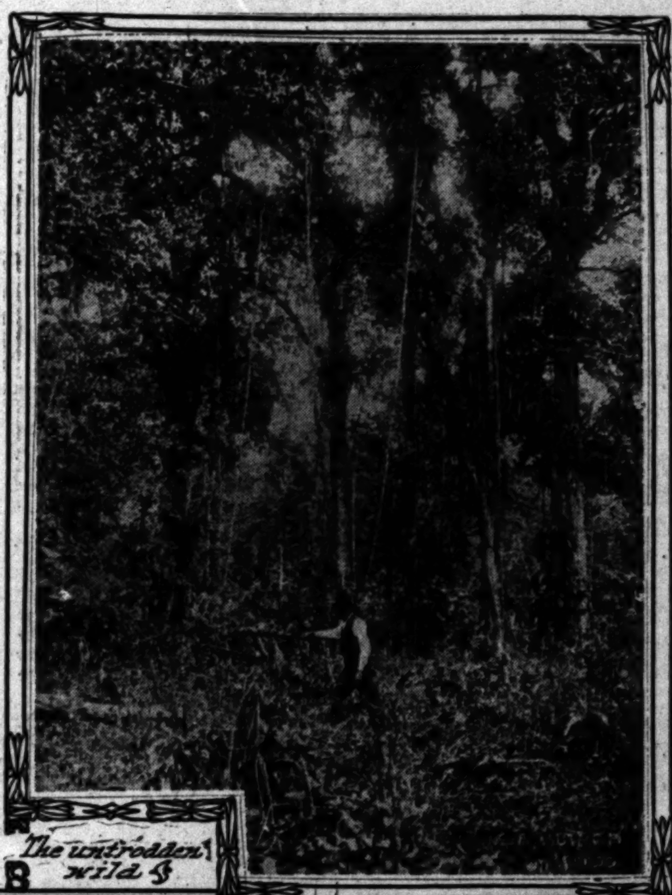
The trade of these South American lands is just awakening. Already it is of consequence. Its possibilities sound like a dream.

Many of Costa Rica's most important imports are goods such as we are peculiarly fitted to supply, canned fruit, jute bags and flour; yet most of these come all the way from Europe.

We are blessed by nature, we of the San Pedro Harbor outlet, in that we are on the Pacific side, the smooth sea, where the landings are simple and the voyages are easy.

We are at the heart of great railroad arteries for the distribution of Costa Rica's products throughout the Middle West and the country west of the Rockies.

We have a little business to transact with Costa Rica and the rest of Central America. Why should New Orleans, New York, Liverpool, Berlin be permitted to "butt in" and take this from us, when we need but to go after it?



The untrodden wilds

Costa Rica is cosmopolitan—nine nationalities here

Trainloads of bananas

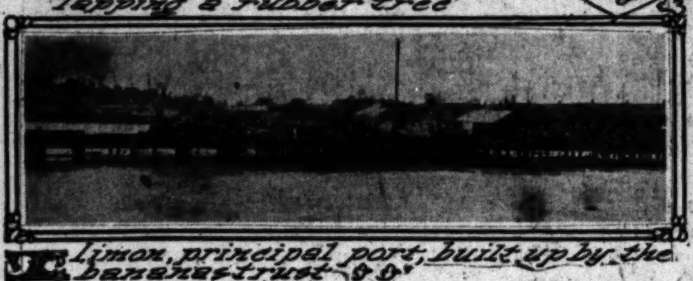
Rubber in the rough



Limon, principal port, built up by the banana trust

The Land of Promise, Costa Rica, where a young planter of this city says we are losing enormously rich trade opportunities for lack of a steamship line. The banana trust may give us one.

If ever you have been rude to the banana trust, please go round and "square" yourself.

It has come to pass that the banana trust can do great things for Los Angeles, if Los Angeles will do her part.

Round the clubs these few weeks, one meets a pleasant young fellow named Guy Hogan, who used to be a high school boy here ten years ago, but is now a plantation owner in Costa Rica; that land of fables and fortunes where the wildest tales come true.

In his keen, intelligent, half-boyish way, Hogan has been telling some of our Los Angeles merchants things that opened their eyes.

And this is the tip from Hogan:

Down there in the tropics lie a bouquet of republics that for ages have been the theater for the last despairing stand of dying and driven-out races.

These countries are now waking up. Their trade possibilities are simply enormous.

Others are eagerly grabbing up the chances; but we are getting beautifully left.

The competition between the Yankees and the invading Germans and English is another story.

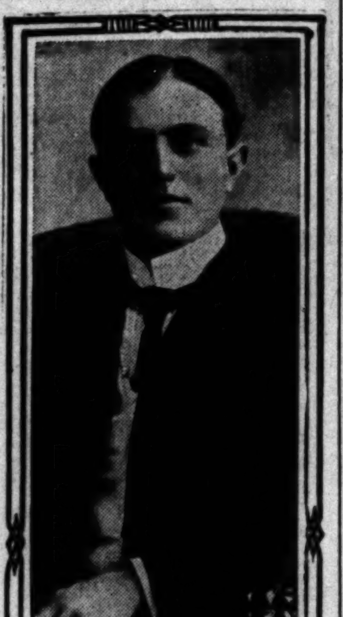
The point is, for us, that out of the United States' share of that trade, we of Los Angeles are getting nothing at all.

A MESSAGE FOR US.

Some of Hogan's facts may be out of kelter, all of his conclusions may not be correct; but Hogan has a burning message for Los Angeles.

And this is Hogan's message:

"Out of all the imports that are rushing in and all exports that are going out, I never have seen the name of Los Angeles on a single label."



GUY HOGAN,
Plantation owner and manager.

Anyone can see at a glance on the map that it ought to be Los Angeles, the future gateway to Central America, instead of New York, New Orleans, Liverpool or Havre.

At least, with our glorious new free harbor we ought to be getting as much as a "look-in" instead of cold nothingness.

If we were getting our "entitles," as the Southern darkies say, great consignments of coffee, cocoa, bananas, fiber, rubber, hard woods, hides would be coming through San Pedro and ships would take out from our manufactories, flour, crackers, olive oil, canned goods, dried fruit, condensed milk, mining machinery, etc., to be sold in Central America.

As it is now, these things that should be delivered here directly to us, come all the way round through New Orleans or New York. What should rightly be purchased from us come from Europe and from New York or San Francisco.

The banana trust, says Hogan, is putting on a great fleet of steamers; new lines are projected to France, Germany, England. One of them might easily enough be diverted to San Pedro.

COSTA RICA'S OTHER NAME.

The other name of the republic of Costa Rica is Miner C. Keith.

And Miner C. Keith is vice-president-manager in Costa Rica for the great banana trust, which ships out 70,000,000 bunches of bananas in a year; and doesn't ship a bunch this way.

It is through Miner C. Keith that this young plantation owner thinks great hopes of Los Angeles could be realized. The Chamber of Commerce might do a little business with Miner C. Keith.

Costa Rica lies on the neck of the Peninsula, next door to Panama. It is a beautiful country, a tangle of wild wood and jungle, where great lizards meander over mahogany trees and rosewood.

The natives are not the Indians of most tropical countries, but very light descendants of the Castillian adventurers of the days that are long gone. Incidentally, some of the women are exceedingly beautiful, even the peasant coffee pickers.

Theirs is the pathetic case of most South American republics; they are reaping none of the new riches. They don't have revolutions down there. Miner C. Keith says it costs too much.

To say that it has a cosmopolitan foreign population is putting it mildly; it is one of the comic opera populations of which you read in the fascinating "Cabbages and Kings."

SOIL EXHIBIT GOING EAST.

SCIENTIFIC ADVERTISEMENT OF ONE PROMOTER.

New York Chemist Has New Feature in the Heralding of Southern California Agricultural Bargains. Has Boxed up Two Hundred Original Specimens.

E. D. Perflin, a Los Angeles promoter, started East yesterday with a unique exhibit for Southern California advertisement. It is neither in photographs, maps or fruit and vegetable display, but consists merely of several hundred pounds of dirt, carefully and scientifically arranged in natural strata in little boxes having top and bottom of wood, and all their sides of glass.

In a word, Perflin has gathered from hill and valley the exact soil that covers productive land in this and the other Southern counties, and is taking it back in its natural state.

Some of his soil runs to a clay color, some is almost pure sand, and some is adobe, with all the intervening classifications and shades. Altogether, Perflin has more than 200 soil-specimens, carefully labeled with locality and the available products which may be raised on such a surface.

Then, as an auxiliary exhibit, Perflin has his maps and photographs, and when he is established in his offices in New York City the whole collection will be carefully arranged in an exhibit room.

During the past twelve months—which covers the time he has spent in Southern California—the investigator has made careful experiments, and has gathered data in all places possible concerning the growing of fruit, vegetables and grain.

He believes that many of the farm failures in Southern California are caused not by the non-fertility of the land, but by absolute lack of knowledge as to what may be planted in certain soils. All of Perflin's specimens are accompanied by detailed data of growing experiments, so that a well-meaning farmer may find out the difference between vegetable and wheat land, and between the growing of a eucalyptus grove and an orange orchard.

Perflin is a member of the New York firm of Perflin, Benton & Co. Both are young men, and before going into the realty business both were manufacturing chemists. In the laboratory Perflin first gained his knowledge of the chemical nature of soils, and the importance of some such knowledge to orchardists and agriculturists.

In his own words: "It is just as unavailing to plant literary ambition in a mathematician as it is to plant one sort of seed on land meant to grow another. When real estate men use their brains instead of their tongues—exclusively—there will be more and better sales in farming land. Agricultural areas in Southern California should keep moving in equal prosperity with resorts, city property and land for homes. If a man wants to come out here and grow celery, he wants to know where the celery land is. If he wants to plant an orange orchard he wants to see not only photographs of the land, and glowing printed descriptions, but the nature of the soil, its chemical construction, its liability to either wash or pack, and its ability to retain or disseminate moisture.

"Farming is no longer an experiment. Men no longer plant any sort of stuff on any clear piece of land, for they have learned that certain soils have certain capabilities. Chemistry has made farming a science, and the farmer of the future, and the orchardist as well, will be men who use their brains as well as their hands."

Perflin's soil specimens will be placed in an exhibit in New York.

Their owner will return here to make further investigations in the spring.

STEADY HAND SAVES LIVES.

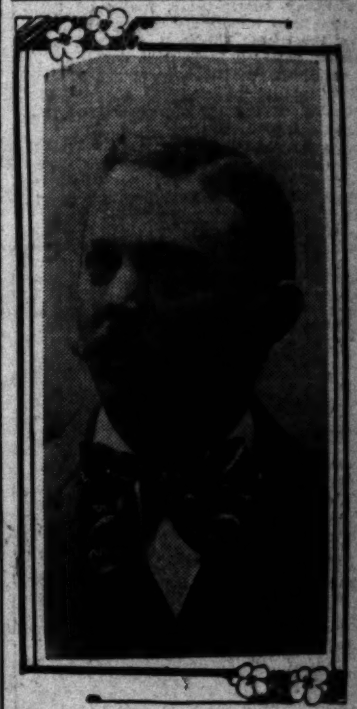
Motorman's "Closest Shave" in Nineteen Years.

Bewildered Woman Before a Car With Her Child.

Wynn Again Pulls Through Without Accident.

After nearly fifteen years of service without an accident, as a street car driver and a motorman, James Wynn of No. 1507 East Twelfth street, yesterday had the "closest shave" of his long experience.

Wynn was operating a Boyle Heights and Bimini car across the junction of First and Spring streets, when a mother with her child in her arms attempted to cross directly in front, became bewildered, and stopped on the track.



JAMES WYNN,
Veteran Motorman.

For a horrible moment it seemed as if the car must crush mother and babe, but perhaps the steadiest hand in Los Angeles was at the controller and a cool-headed man was directing the car. With nine points on the safety the oldest motorman in the service brought the car to a dead stop a few inches from the frightened woman, who, with her child, passed in safety to the other side of the crossing.

This is no new experience to Wynn, who has served so long in a position that has shattered the nerves of strong men and has compelled many to give up in despair after only a few months' trial.

Time and again the veteran motorman has been called upon to face extreme danger and always, by his rare presence of mind, he has saved the lives of passengers and others and come off without injury to his car.

The veteran is not disposed to talk much about his interesting history, and it is with difficulty that he is persuaded to tell of the many close calls he has had during his long term of service.

The experienced motorman has been called on to do extra duty when others have failed. He has run night and day, has helped out in the extra rushes and has always been at his post when needed.

Strange to say, most of his narrow escapes from accident have come during his routine work, and not during rushes. Bicyclists, aged people and children have taken rare chances with the veteran's car. Once an old man hobbling on a stick found himself directly in front of the approaching car, and stopped between the rails. The rushing car was almost upon the helpless pedestrian, but again the cool, decisive action of the man at the controller won.

Through the packed crowds at the circus rushes, and during many Fiesta crushes, Wynn has worked steadily, and whenever a particularly hazardous undertaking was necessary the veteran was chosen for the task.

Grazing wagons on the crowded streets, barely escaping collisions with overdaring motormen just "breaking in," or sliding out of the way of a flying automobile, has been the strenuous life of the motorman, who is now near the head of the list and in line for promotion.

Just in the prime of life, Wynn is a splendid specimen of physical manhood. He declares that in order to be a successful motorman a man must be physically perfect, as the slightest defect will often cause a man to lose his head. When this happens an accident will nearly always follow.

Having seen the Los Angeles street car system evolve from a tedious mule car service into one of the best equipped and up-to-date systems in the world, Wynn is competent to give an opinion as to the men employed in the service, and of their treatment. He has only praise for the company, and speaks in the highest terms of the management and its treatment of employés.

Out on East Twelfth street Motorman Wynn has purchased a cosy little home, and with his wife and five children may be found almost any evening.

The veteran now has a "day run." This is granted to those who have given faithful and successful service.

The children speak proudly of their big "daddy," who has never hurt anybody, and the wife tells with pride of the successful years of active service spent by her husband as an employé of the Los Angeles Railway Company.

Pupils in the schools are glad when an opportunity comes to ride on "Mr. Wynn's car," and the man is so well known to them that his car is crowded with the youngsters, who know the number, and wait for it.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

TOTS TOASTED IN "BUGALOWS."

First Hot, Then Cold, in the Makeshift Rooms.

Trials for Teachers in First Weeks of Work.

Parental Pupil's Pathetic Plea for Sunshine.

A small girl from the Breed-street school was relating experiences to a boon companion from another school. "Why, what do you think," she said, "we can go out in the yard to recite our lessons and to study them ,too; isn't that fine Our principal came into the room and said 'Children it is too hot in this bugalow and you may go out into the yard and sit on the steps to study.' "

That was the common lot in Los Angeles last week in the schools which are obliged to use the temporary structures. Though the "bugalows," as the little girl called them, are generally fairly comfortable, many of them have been absolutely unbearable during the recent hot spell and the Breed-street children have been fortunate in having the cool shady retreat of their front steps sheltered by the swaying boughs of the large pepper tree that grows there.

Here Mrs. Donohue, the principal, has had the children go for study and for many recitations, but of course they had to go back into their hot quarters for some work.

Mr. Monlux in visiting this class last week, said: "Children these bungalows are sometimes called 'coolers' and sometimes called 'sweat boxes,' now which do you think yours is today?" And they all, with one accord replied, "sweat box."

Forty of these temporary structures are in use throughout the city, and more are to be built. The school people are even now seeking to cope with a warm protest entered by a woman whose property adjoins that of the Twenty-fourth street school building, and who thinks that the bungalow in prospect will greatly injure her lot.

HALF-DAY SESSIONS.

The other arrangement for providing for the great number of pupils in the schools is the haid-day session. There are now sixteen half-day schools, that is, there are double sessions every day in eight rooms in the city schools. These schools are in the Grafton-street building, the Casco-street, the Main-street, the Vernon-avenue, the Seventh-street, the Boyd-street, the First-street and the Cornwell-street; the First-street school having five different half-day sessions.

This condition means that five additional public school buildings of ten rooms each, are needed in Los Angeles at the present moment without casting the eyes to the future at all. The attendance at the outside schools is reported on every hand as having increased wonderfully since last year.

Enrollment at the two high schools reveals an increase of one-third over last year, there being 1445 pupils at the Los Angeles High School, and 1665 at Polytechnic.

Superintendent Foshay's desk at the board rooms is piled high with applications for entrance from pupils living outside of the city limits. At least one hundred have come in recently, and the question before the committee having the matter in hand is, "what shall we do with them?"

Not only High School pupils want the advantage of the city schools, but many of the grammar-grade children who live just over the line and have to go a long distance to the county schools are among the applicants.

"Of course," said Mr. Foshay, yesterday, "one feels a sympathy for the child so situated but we simply cannot provide for more than we have now."

TEACHERS' TRIALS.

A typical conversation that might be duplicated in almost any city in the Union was overheard by a Times reporter the other day at one of the Los Angeles school rooms:

Mother: Oh, are'nt you a new teacher?

Teacher: Yes, I am new here this year.

Mother (with a crushing glance:) Well, I didn't expect to find you here."

Teacher: No, I didn't expect to find you here either; is this your little boy?

Mother: Yes, this is my boy, and I want you to know that he is very delicate, and you must take good care of him. I dont' want him to do anything, not anything at all, and he mustn't sit in a draft, and you must not let too much light fall on his face, and you might let him sit near to Johnny there, because he knows Johnny and, of course, he has never been away from me before. At any rate, you must take good care of him.

Teacher: Yes, madam; I will give the best of care, the same care that I give to every child in the room.

Mother: Oh, well, this is my child, and you will have to be especially careful, for if you are not (another crushing glance,) I shall take him right out of school. Another thing, you can have him eat his lunch at noon, but, of course, if he does not want to eat he needn't, and now I feel so much better because I've had this talk with you, and I feel perfectly satisfied to leave Algernon with you. I am sure you will take good care of him.

The pretty little teacher deserves a place on the vaudeville stage, for she preserved the most respectful gravity throughout, and bowed out the befrilled mother in the most approved fashion—and yet she is noted for a sense of humor.

DEBATING LEAGUE.

The Southern California High School Debating League has decided upon a daring programme this year, and has sent a challenge to the League of Northern California, the debate to take place some time next May, both time and place to be decided when the challenge is accepted.

Wheels within wheels, and debates within debates are to precede this final event of the year, for in each school, and there are sixteen now belonging to the Southern California League, tryouts will be held to determine the speakers of greatest talent. These will then debate with the champions of other schools, and the final winners, first and second best, will be the chosen ones to compete with the northern debaters.

The first debates in the Southern California League will beheld November 11, and the following schools are pitted against each other: Throop Polytechnic and Long Beach High, Pasadena and Los Angeles, Anaheim and Los Angeles Polytechnic, Covina and Whittier, El Monte and Downey, Hollywood and Monrovia, Glendale and Compton, Pomona and Santa Monica.

The Southern California League will offer a gold medal and a silver medal as prizes for the best debaters, to be presented to the two representatives of this section, who will go north to uphold the honor of the league. A banner also will be given to the school furnishing the best debaters.

STAR AND CRESCENT.

The Star and Crescent election, which will be held at the Los Angeles High School next Friday, is furnishing the liveliest interest and excitement of the first weeks of school.

The unwritetn law of such elections seems to be a division of honors between the higher classes, the senior A's to furnish the president, the senior B's the vice-president, the A elevens the secretary, and the B elevens the treasurer. This time the senior B's have Caesar's trouble. They are ambitious and wish to furnish the vice-president and the secretary as well. The B elevens are to be supported in the struggle before them by some of the senior A's, and there are at least six candidates for president. Carroll Stilson is a promising candidate, as are Wyckliffe Mathews, Charlie Ackley and John Findley.

The senior B class of summer '05 held an election last week. The officers are: President, Sydney Moise; vice-president, Hazel Steele; secretary, Mildred Neiswender; treasurer, "Doc" Brainerd.

PERMANENT GRADING DONE.

Three members of the school board, Directors Washburn, Davis and Wilson, visited the Los Angeles High School Wednesday to inspect progress of the grading being done in preparation for the new lunchroom building and for the gymnasium and the athletic courts. They decided that more money should be expended upon this work, and that instead of a temporary grade, the High School was worth having a permanent grade established for the grounds on all sides. The resurveying will begin immediately, to include the entire grounds. The school board also will petition the Council to lower the grade of the street (which is already two feet higher at some points than the school yards) to correspond with the grade now being established.

NO SUNSHINE FOR TOTS.

"I think I should like to go to Whittier because I might get to go out in the sunshine," said a young lad at the parental school in the old County Jail the other day, when the new principal, Earnest J. Lickley, was talking to him.

The boys who have to become inmates of the school are not always bad and vicious; they have simply had bad and vicious surroundings, and have had no chance to see anything else.

Where the old-time cells used to be there is a large vacant place indoors, where the boys are allowed to romp and shout, but, of course, that is not out of doors. Hardly a ray of sunshine penetrates to the dingy, dank old corridors.

There are about twenty-three pupils in this cheerless place at present, and though the school is continuous all the year around the regular school term began at the same time that the other schools in the city were opened.

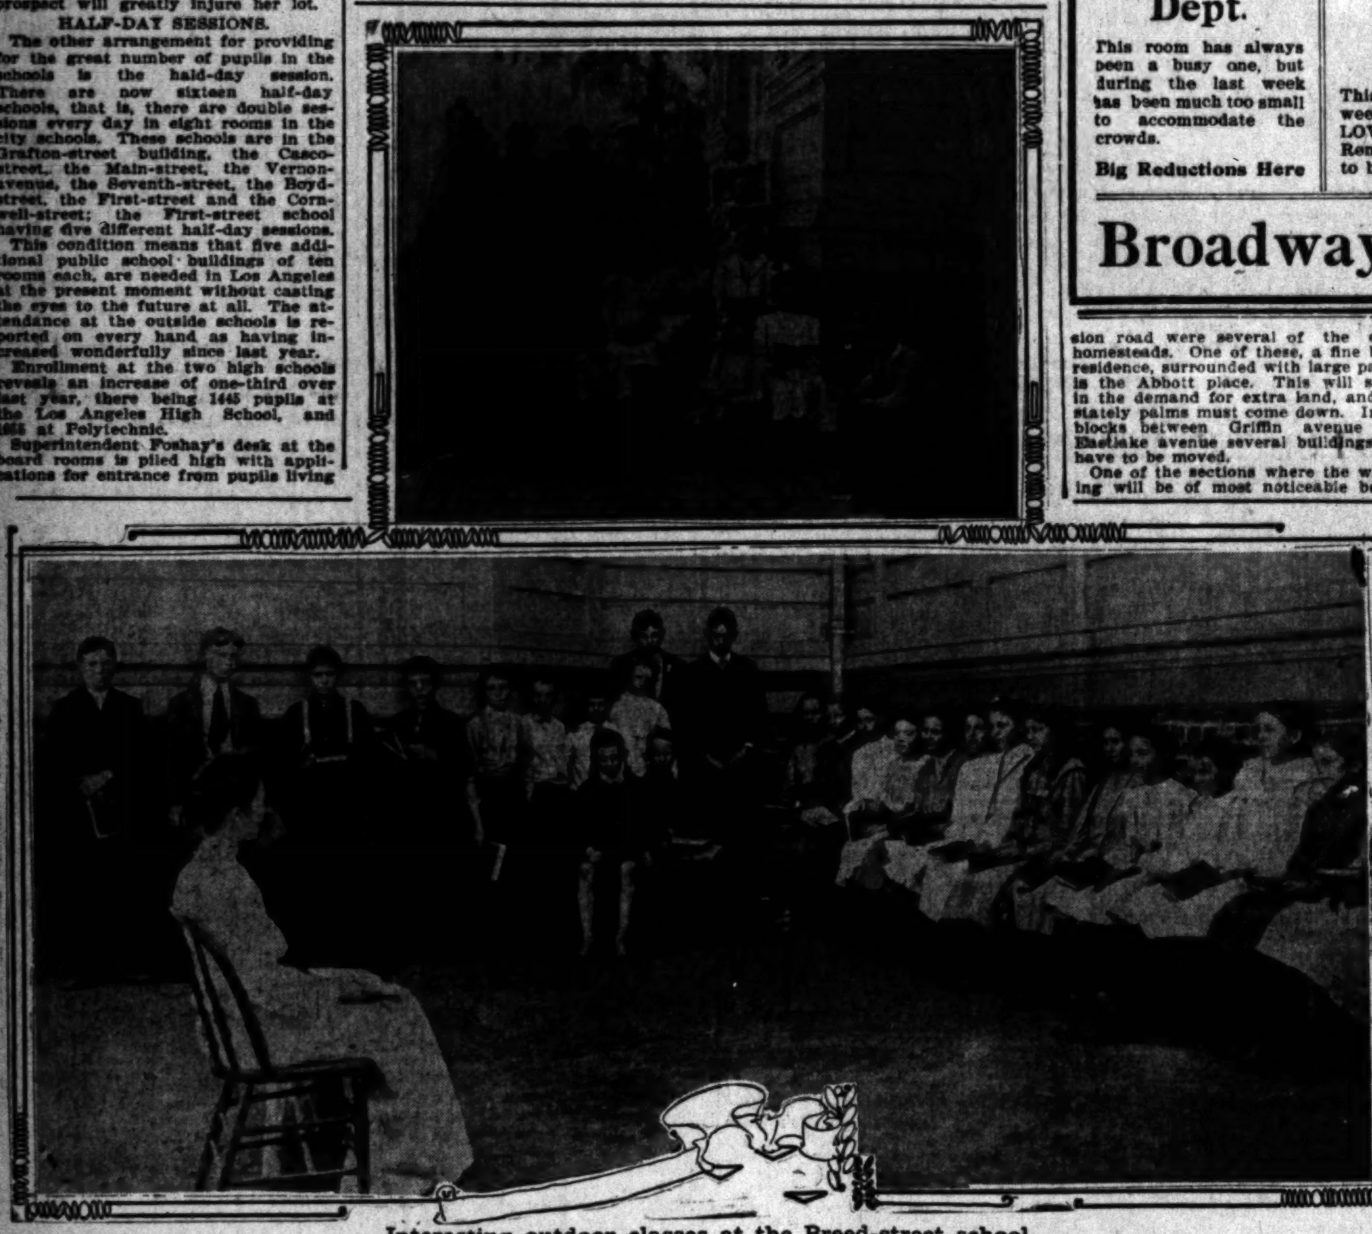
Principal Lickley has had wide experience in such work, having worked for several years in the East Side settlements of New York City; he also was teacher of the primary grade of the Los Angeles Night School for some time.

His idea is to give the boys as much freedom as possible without allowing them to overstep the bounds of authority. He is not a believer in corporal punishment, and points with happiness to the fact that there has not been a single case where such punishment has been administered during the four weeks of his stay either in the school or in the dormitories.

When Barnum & Bailey's circus was in town, a fund was made up by the probation officer, Dodds, and the teachers, to send the outside boys to the circus; that is, boys who attend school, but who are allowed to remain in their own homes. Not a single lad remained away a moment longer than was necessary, each reporting as soon as the circus was over.

A Sloyd room soon will be added, to give the boys of the Parental School a chance to work with their hands, and this year as much manual work of an interesting nature as can be given will form a considerable part of the course of study.

Dr. Bennett, assistant at the school, is making a wonderfully interesting compilation of abnormal children based upon her studies of the Parental School boys.



Interesting outdoor classes at the Breed-street school.

CITY WILL SUE FOR MORE LAND.

LATEST MOVE IN MISSION ROAD BOULEVARD PROJECT.

Sixty-foot Highway to be Made Hundred-foot Boulevard, and Historical Old Places Will Have to be Sliced to Furnish Land for El Camino Real.

Late yesterday afternoon the City Attorney filed his papers with the County Clerk in the condemnation suit to be brought for the purpose of widening Mission road to a grand boulevard.

This condemnation suit affects 150 separate tracts of land, and there are an even 200 defendants to the suit. Some of them are non-residents, and this may cause delay in serving papers.

After the court's hearing, the next step will be the appointment of a board of commissioners to appraise the value of the lands to be taken, and it is hoped that proceedings will be so advanced that this commission may begin its labors by the first of the new year.

An assessment district has been formed, which includes all of the frontage on Mission road within the city limits, and all that on the side streets for a distance of about 300 feet.

This is the largest boulevard project yet tackled by the city, and will doubtless prove one of the most popular. It is, in reality, a rehabilitation of El Camino Real, the old, brown-habited Franciscan padres' highway to Mission San Gabriel.

Under the present plans it will, indeed, be fit for a king's highway; for the unattractive sixty-foot roadway will be expanded to a boulevard 100 feet in width, with modern improvements, curbed and sidewalked. If the plans of the enterprising citizens who are pushing the project are carried through, this boulevard will be tree-lined and its park spaces beautified with hardy shrubs.

All the way from Aliso street, near the east side of the Los Angeles River, on out through the mesa at the foot of Brooklyn Heights; past the County Hospital and Eastlake Park, and then on upward past the old reservoir, No. 5, known as the East Side reservoir, the present widening will extend, until it joins the county road at Hamilton Hill. The widened Mission road will be about two and one-half miles in length.

The plans provide for the elimination of some abrupt turns of the present street. The extra forty-foot space required to widen the street is taken from both sides of the street, and this will require cutting into some of the old landmarks of Los Angeles. Along Mission road were several of the early homesteads. One of these, a fine brick residence, surrounded with large palms, is the Abbott place. This will suffer in the demand for extra land, and the stately palms must come down. In the blocks between Griffin avenue and Eastlake avenue several buildings will have to be moved.

One of the sections where the widening will be of most noticeable benefit is that frontage on Eastlake Park. There, for a considerable distance, three street railway tracks occupy the present sixty-foot street, leaving scarcely enough room for the passage of a vehicle.

This project is now so well on its way that there is little prospect of its being further blocked. Protestants there were, of course. What large enterprise does not have them? But the great preponderance of frontage in favor of the work decided the matter against them; the City Council has passed the final ordinances, the notices have been posted; all the legal steps have been taken up to the point of beginning the condemnation suit and it is reasonable to believe that within a few months actual work will begin on the reconstruction of Mission road on plans in keeping with its historic importance and its present use as an artery of traffic.

Children's Entertainment.

It is easy to entertain the young people if you have one of the fine PEERLESS TALKING MACHINES that The Times is GIVING AWAY to subscribers. H. F. Vollmer & Co.'s Removal Sale

Our new building, 513-515 S. Broadway is rapidly nearing completion, our new copper front and three-story addition in the rear of the building being nearly finished. The workmen are making every effort to allow us to move in about November 1st.

In the meantime we are exerting ourselves to dispose of at least one half of our present stock at our old store, corner Third and Broadway. It is better for us to sacrifice our profits than run the risk of breakage in moving so large a stock. During this sale all prices are reduced from 10 to 33⅓ per cent. below regular prices.

This applies on every article in the store, whether inexpensive or the more choice and exclusive lines.

Dr. Mc Laughlin's Electric Belt Will Cure You

Fill your nerves with Electricity and you will have bright spirits, good appetite and more streng than you ever had before.

You suffer from pains in your back, you are easily discouraged, don't sleep well and get up tire Now can't you see that you need something which will increase your vitality? That's what you want. Th what I offer you.

Perhaps you don't believe that. Doctors tell you not to believe it, because they like to give you drug But you have tried drugs, and know they don't cure you, so you ought to listen to what others say of way of curing.

Mr. John Johnson, 1030 Carolina street, San Francisco, Cal., writes: "Two physicians had been treating me for consumption, but your examination showed my obstinate cough to be due to catarrh of the stomach. I was also suffering from lumbago and weak back. In two weeks your Electric Belt greatly relieved my cough and catarrh, and within one month all my pains and cough were gone. Your Belt was the best investment I ever made, and I would not part with it for $1000."

Mrs. A. N. Story, Grand View, San Jose, Cal., writes: "I was such a helpless wreck when I got the Belt that I had no faith in it, but in less than fifteen days I was feeling so well that I could not realize that I was the same poor invalid who visited your office two weeks before. In thirty days I left the Belt off, and have not worn it since. Several of my friends, convinced of the value of the appliance, now have Belts of their own, and I assure you that I shall go on recommending the treatment."

Surely you must believe what you see proven. Sick people are inclined to doubt such evidence, as they have tried so many things (all drugs) without relief, but I am saving them from the drug shops every day. It is so much nicer, being cured my way. You put my appliance about your waist when you go to bed; take it off in the morning. You feel a gentle glow of strength pouring into your nerves. It soothes you to sleep, and when you wake up you feel a gladsome joy in being alive, an ambition to go out and breathe fresh air and sunshine. You are inspired with a new life.

What ails you? Write and tell me, and no matter where you are I think I can give you the address of some one in your town that I have cured. I've cured thousands, and every one of them is a walking advertisement for my Belt.

Free Book Try my Belt. Write me today for my beautiful illustrated book with cuts showing how my Belt is applied, full of good reading matter for men who want to be "The Noblest Work of God"—A MAN. Inclose this coupon and I will send you this book, sealed, free.

CALL TODAY—IF you can, call and see me and I will show you how you can be cured and give you a free test of my Belt. My hours are from 9 to 8 daily and 10 to 1 Sunday. CONSULTATION FREE.

Put your name on this coupon and send it in.

Pen Points

A new play, lately produced, is called "The Truth Tellers." Needless to say it is a farce.

There is such a row being raised over this insurance business that even the "dummy" directors must hear it.

For a town that still uses horse cars, it is surprising what a pace "little old New York" has set for the rest of the world.

The Examiner claims that somebody has stolen Mr. Hearst's ideas. Kleptomania in its most inexplicable and degraded form.

The Secretary of Agriculture intends to establish a seed department. It ought to prove a success. There will always be lots of people running to it.

The State of Massachusetts is afflicted with Mugwump instincts, but not to such an extent that they cannot be scared out of them whenever it becomes necessary to do so.

Matters have now come to such a pass that there is really such a thing as the ethics of money making. But the struggle to load up on the blamed stuff will be just as fierce as ever.

The Internal Revenue Department recommends that a tax be put on patent medicines. Well, it's no more than justice. Patent medicines have long put a tax on people who use them.

A scientist figures that the coal supply will last another million years. If John Mitchell has his way, however, the supply will last much longer, on account of the time lost in strikes.

Speaking of the rise and fall of empires, it may be significant to remember that there was a time in her history when England would scorn an alliance with any other nation, and the heathen least of all.

"The tariff is a tax" has long been used as a war cry in certain political camps. But those who are compelled to watch the proceedings of the coming session of Congress will find that the tariff is a talk.

The railroads have the Senate back of them, but the President is backed by the people. The result may be postponed, but it cannot be avoided. There will be a new Senate some day, and it won't be like this one.

It's strange what pains some persons will take in order to feel the thrill of intoxication. Instances have been known of a man drinking 90 per cent. of "pain killer" to get at the 3 per cent. of alcohol contained in the same bottle.

A dispatch states that a Pittsburgh man named Guffey has resigned from two Democratic committees. The country was greatly surprised to learn that there were a sufficient number of Democrats in Pittsburgh to make two committees.

Just what Uncle Joe Cannon said when he read that Massachusetts Republican platform will never be published. There is a law prohibiting newspapers from printing certain words and expressions that are pronounced unfit for use in polite society.

The old saying that "You can't get something for nothing" looks foolish in the light of these life insurance disclosures. Neither McCall nor McCurdy ever invested a cent in the New York Life or the Mutual Life, and, behold what they got out of them!

Mr. Shaw, the Secretary of the Treasury, is out with a financial proposition which he calls "the elastic currency plan." If it will show us how to stretch a dollar any farther than can now be done, we stand ready to give the plan our unqualified indorsement.

A celebrated Englishman once said that Great Britain went forth with the Bible in one hand and the sword in the other. Perhaps her idea in making an alliance with Japan was to let the Jap attend to the sword business and leave John Bull unhampered to give his whole attention to the book business.

The gauntlet has been thrown down, and the fight between the President of the United States and the railroads is already on. It will prove the greatest peace battle of the age, and whether or not the President will win is an open question. He may win in the end, but there seems to be scarcely a possibility that he will win during the life of the Fifty-ninth Congress. The Senate blocks his way. The railroads dominate the Senate, as we shall soon see.

Lecturers on the Russo-Japanese war are greeted by small audiences. Lecturers and their managers seem slow to learn that, in this restless age, we have no time to listen to history. It is the present and the future that interests us. Just now a man with a lecture on John A. McCall and Richard McCurdy, with lantern slides to show how they did things, would pack any house to the doors. It's not our business to give lecture people tips, but they can have this one for nothing, and it's a good one, too.

MASSACHUSETTS AND TARIFF REVISION.

The Republicans of the Old Bay State have held their State convention and have nominated a full ticket, headed by Curtis Guild, Jr., for Governor. The ticket is a good one, as political nominations go, and under ordinary circumstances it would be almost certain to win a decisive victory. But the circumstances under which the campaign is to be conducted are not quite of the ordinary kind.

In its principal declarations the platform is such as can be indorsed without hesitation by Republicans in all sections of the country. It congratulates the President upon his overwhelming triumph at the polls at the last election, commends him for the important part which he played in the peace negotiations between Japan and Russia, and indorses his "fearless enforcement of laws enacted to prevent great corporations from oppressing the people by unjust discrimination or by the destruction of lawful competition." On the subject of the tariff, the platform reads as follows:

"We believe that the policy of protection to American labor and American industry should be maintained. The Republican party of Massachusetts reaffirms its devotion to the principle of protection, and is opposed to tariff changes tending to depress or destroy any of our industries or to lower the wages of American labor. But we recognize the fact, as declared by the National Republican Convention at Chicago, that rates should be changed when conditions have so changed that the public interest demands the alteration of schedules.

"The times at which revison of the tariff should be undertaken must be determined by the representatives of the party from all parts of our country. We approve the position taken by our Senators and Representatives at the last session of Congress in favor of present action, and we urge that they should continue to press upon their party associates in Congress from other States the wisdom of a consideration of the tariff for the purpose of revision and readjustment."

Upon this question of tariff revison there are radical differences of opinion in the Republican party. Some persons believe that the tariff should be subjected to wholesale revision at the next session of Congress, and that such revision should invariably be in the direction of lower duties. Others believe that if revision of the tariff is to be attempted, the revision should be upward instead of downward. Still others hold that there is no present need nor call for meddling with the schedules, but that we should "stand pat" on the Dingley tariff as it exists. All true Republicans, however, adhere undeviatingly to the abstract principle of tariff protection.

Varying opinions are shared by the voters of Massachusetts as well as by the voters of other States. It is possible—perhaps probable—that a majority of the voters in Massachusetts are of the opinion that revision of the tariff should be begun at once. This would seem to be true if the unanimous vote in the convention for the platform is any criterion. But it is extremely doubtful if many of the Republican States will indorse this idea. There are, in fact, numerous substantial reasons for not indorsing it.

Why should there be any attempt at wholesale revision of the tariff at the present time? What interests and what men are demanding it? Has the nation not prospered since the present tariff was enacted? Is the nation not prospering? No need to answer these questions, for the answer is known to every man who knows anything worth knowing about the matter.

The prosperity, both for private enterprises and for the nation's business, has been far greater since the Dingley tariff was enacted than it had been within any like period of the nation's history. It is generally conceded that this prosperity is due in no small degree to the present tariff and the protection which it affords to American industries. Why, then, not "let well enough alone," since well enough is well indeed?

A wholesale revision of the tariff is almost invariably accompanied by a period of business uncertainty and depression. If we should enter upon such a revision at the coming session of Congress, the splendid fabric of prosperity which we have so laboriously built up during the past few years would be undermined, and it would probably be destroyed altogether before the work of wholesale revision could be completed. No other nation in the world is today prospering as the United States is prospering. Therefore, "let well enough alone."

The Massachusetts platform reaffirms, in emphatic language, the principle of tariff protection, but it also asserts, as declared by the National Republican Convention at Chicago, that "rates should be changed when conditions have so changed that the public interest demands the alteration of schedules." With this declaration no Republican will find fault. But the time referred to has not yet come. It will not come so long as prosperity continues to shower its lavish blessings upon the American people.

"The time at which revision of the tariff should be undertaken must be determined by the representatives of the party from all parts of our country." Quite true. It will be determined by representatives of the party from all parts of the country; but it will not be determined at the next session of Congress.

"We further refer for the consideration of Congress the reënactment of tariff provisions which shall protect our exports against discrimination, and secure to the United States the treatment accorded to the most favored nations in all foreign markets." This is one of the planks in the Massachusetts platform. It is aimed at the discriminations against American merchandise contained in the new German tariff, and it is not wholly consistent with the declaration in favor of revision of the tariff, unless revision upward instead of downward be referred to. When Germany comes at us with her big club of discrimination, we shall need a good-sized bludgeon in order that we may "protect our exports against discrimination." There is little doubt that Congress will provide this club in due time; and it will not be a paper club, made only for bluffing purposes.

ASSAULTS ON "THE TIMES"—THE RIGHT TRIUMPHS.

"The desire of the ungodly shall perish," sang old David as he twanged his harp-strings on the hillsides of Judea. That was a good many years ago; but the desires of the ungodly have been perishing ever since—and a conspicuous instance was seen in the legal annihilation of the local Typographical Union's walking delegates and their vicious supporters by the Superior Court of this county on Tuesday last.

How the heathen raged a year ago last May when the City Council voted, after full discussion and deliberation, to give the city advertising to The Times! This paper had put in the highest bid, to be sure, but a bid 50 per cent. lower than that of any rival, circulation being taken into the account. The Council awarded the contract on the only true basis on which to figure an advertising rate, viz.—circulation—the extent of publicity to be obtained for the price charged—the very basis on which every man in the Council who is in business makes his bargains for private advertising. The Times gave the city a lower rate than its regular commercial rate at the time. Thus was achieved Victory Number One for the right.

But how the heathen raged! They invoked the aid of that imported monstrosity known as "the recall," and attempted to substitute minority for majority rule in the city, but the Supreme Court brushed them and their nostrum off the face of the earth, declaring the "recall" agitators to be little less than forgers and falsifiers, and their nostrum worthless. That was Victory Number Two for the right. The mischief-makers and troublers of the city's peace, led by Hay, Norton, Fennessy and Haynes, were discredited. Their desires perished. How they raged! yea, how they raged, and also masticated the tattered fabric!

The year of the contract came to an end. The Times had fulfilled every obligation to the letter; it had scrupulously kept faith with the Council, with its eyes on the public interest and the eyes of the hard-headed people on the Council. The interests of the taxpayers had not been sacrificed, but had been protected. All this faithful service, however, meant nothing to the discredited gang which is ever arrayed against this independent and fearless journal. The blood-suckers who prey upon the substance of the misguided labor unions still had a nightmare—a disturbed dream that they could prevent The Times from receiving pay for a part of the service it had rendered, the denial to be placed on the ground of non-fulfillment of contract.

There never was a more unrighteous contention raised. The terms of the contract between The Times and the city were clear and unmistakable. They gave this paper the option of printing the city advertising in either agate type or in nonpareil type (a slightly larger size.) The Times, with the full knowledge and consent of the city authorities, proceeded to use the smaller size of type (agate,) thereby compressing more lines of official advertising into every column and saving the city several thousands of dollars.

For the benefit of those not fully acquainted with the technicalities of the printing art, it may be said that the term "points" is now generally used in denoting different sizes of type, although the old names, "agate" "nonpareil," etc., are still properly used. Seventy-two points make an inch in depth.

The contract between the city and The Times called for either 5½-point (agate) type, or 6-point (nonpareil) type, at the option of the publishers. Hay and Fennessy ("blacksmith" union printers) raised a howl about the sizes, but they were wrong—technically and morally wrong, as usual. The size of type used by The Times was true agate (5½ point,) thirteen lines making an inch, less one one-hundred and forty-fourth part thereof. The slight difference was favorable to the city. An inch of type space cannot be made to contain more lines of agate unless the "slug" or line be shaved down below standard, thus making it what is known as "bastard." And, whatever the absurd complainants may be, The Times' type is and was legitimate.

These plain points are given to show that The Times carried out its contract with the city by using exactly the right size and style of type, and that its bills were correctly rendered. The local Typographical Union, which had been encouraged in its fight against The Times by that socialistic demagogue, millionaire trouble-maker and self-boomer, Dr. John R. Haynes (so anxious to right the wrongs of all except those who work for him twelve hours a day at starvation wages)—the Typographical Union, we say, tried to induce the city authorities to hold back the last payment, on the lying subterfuge that The Times had defrauded the city by using another kind of type than that called for by the contract. The Council gave this absurd claim full consideration, then approved the final bill, and the Mayor signed the warrant for its payment. Here was Victory Number Three for the right. How the heathen raged once more!

Then they appealed to the courts. In the name of "the party of the name of" Fennessy, the gang asked for an injunction restraining the City Auditor from paying the last bill of The Times, which amounted to $3362.15. Judge Wilbur heard the case and threw it out of court on a demurrer raised by counsel for The Times. He decided that the Council and Mayor, having investigated the matter in their semi-judicial capacities, and having come to the conclusion that the money had been earned, there was no legal course for the City Auditor to pursue except to authorize the payment of the bill. The court intimated to the preposterous plaintiffs that they had not a legal peg on which to hang an injunction; the city officers had satisfied themselves that The Times had carried out its contract; and finally The Times was entitled to full payment for stipulated services which it had rendered without one word of complaint from the City Council. Victory Number Four for the right! It came last Tuesday, and how the heathen raged in a final convulsion of wrath!

The Times won its case on journalistic and business merits before the Council; it won its case on the legal merits before the Superior Court; it wins its case before the Court of Public Opinion on the intrinsic merits involved.

In the course of the year The Times printed in agate type 50,333 inches of public advertising, and 11,344 inches of public advertising set in nonpareil type by special order of the Council given near the end of the contract. The Times gave the taxpayers more publicity per dollar, per line and per copy circulated than they ever got before for their money. It gave 50 per cent. more publicity than any other paper could possibly have given, and it charged and received a rate based on circulation. It gave the citizens of Los Angeles the best bargain in advertising they ever got, and reached a greater number of readers with the public notices than ever before saw the city's advertising in print—a thing which all the public should have a right to see. And, furthermore, The Times, by employing the size of advertising type used, instead of a larger size, saved the people of Los Angeles a large amount of money. Thus:

The increase in space which would have been involved by setting the 50,333 inches of agate advertising in the larger (or nonpareil) size would have amounted to not less than 8000 inches, costing, at 60 cents per inch (the contract price) $4800 more than was actually charged. To be still more exact, the increase would have been 8388 inches, costing, at the same rate, $5032.80.

If any there be who would challenge this statement, let them come on with their experts. We care not whether the experts be union or non-union printers, so they know type and are honest.

Now the miserable, shuffling gang of blood-suckers and grafters who fool the labor unions, and likewise rob them, knew all these facts. But the walking delegates must make some show as an excuse for living in idleness off the earnings of the real workers; they must stir up trouble from which they hoped to extract graft with their unclean claws. Therefore this campaign against The Times, that ended in the utter routing and confusion of the conspirators in court last Tuesday.

And the heathen of the press! What have they been doing? Kow-towing, as usual, to the totem, and aiding the blood-suckers in every possible way. Lowenthal and his saffron-hued Examiner, Scripps and his Record, Earl and his Express—all were in the same boat, all pulling with Hay, Fennessy and their crew. From first to last they have distorted and misrepresented the facts, and have done all they could to defeat the ends of justice. Not for a moment have they considered the right and wrong of the matter; not once have they asked, "What is fair—what is true—what are the facts?"

Insanely jealous of the success of The Times—a success which time and public sentiment have shown to be deserved—Lowenthal and his Yellow Knocker have "egged on" the pirates. Furious at losing the city-printing contract, E. T. Earl and his Express have given every aid and comfort possible to the reckless raiders of the Typographical Union. For months and months Earl published daily in the leading editorial column of his hopeless and discredited paper this deliberately false, reckless and libelous statement, or one of like import, varying it from day to day only by increasing its libelous nature:

"Since June 9, 3586 inches of city advertisements have appeared in the Times-Herald at a cost to the taxpayers of $2,151.60, or $717.20 (graft) more than the same advertising would have cost had the Council awarded the contract honestly. One-third bonus for circulation useless to Los Angeles advertisers."

Shamelessly making common cause with conspirators and lawbreakers, blithely flying the black flag, Scripps and his Record have jollied the malefactors along.

And, in the end, Lowenthal, Scripps and Earl have all proved themselves asses as well as falsifiers. They swindle their readers by suppressing the news. Not a word did they print about the court decision in this important case, to which the city was a party, and about which they had, during the year preceding, printed columns and columns of fiction and misrepresentation. Because the gang of dirty-mouthed libelers lost, and The Times won, these dodging publishers showed neither the courage nor the good faith to give their readers the facts.

Such cowardly and venomous journalism is on a preferred par with the base and unscrupulous tactics of the ungodly gang marshaled by Hay and Fennessy and supported by the millionaire apostle of the "initiative, the referendum and the recall." The Times defies this combination again and again, and declares that their aims shall constantly fail so long as they run counter to honesty, justice, manhood and the laws of the land. Selah!

CALIFORNIA.

(1879.)

Thy year is one long Summer, and thy earth,
Cradled in sunshine, keeps her heart so warm
There is no room for shadow or the birth
Of devastating thunderbolt or storm.
Sweet singers in the old Past sang of thee,
And ships made paths across the pathless sea
To reach thy golden shores, for bards had told
Of thy sun-flooded plains, and mountains gaunt and old;
And those brown children of the Sun had dreamed
Of thy fair skies, until to them they seemed
Not quite of earth, for their wise ones had said,
Close by the gates of Paradise—sometimes ajar—
Broods endless summer o'er a wondrous land,
With shining skies and golden strand,
And beauty like the undimmed brightness of a star.

OLD GRUBSTAKE.

Good-by, gay town, I've done you brown,
An' it's ho! for the mesquite land once more;
No hearts will ache for old Grubstake,
I've been there times before, galore.
I've drunk my fill an' paid the bill,
An' it's now for the mirage ships-o'-sail
As ply between me an' my dream,
Across the desert trail.

The Land o' Hope's beyond the slope,
An' it's me an' a loud lung burro brute,
To welt an' fry o'er alkali,
A swig an' a smoke to boot, en root;
An' what's the dif. to a rake adrif',
For it's me an' the flapjacks in the pan;
It's but Life's spec', Fate stacks the deck
An' picks the lucky man.

So pull your freight, old pard sedate,
An' it's ho! for the Hills o' Solitude,
With Hell's hot hole, this side the goal—
A swelterin' interlude—home brewed.
It's plug an' lug. Aye! there's the rub,
An' it's O for a snooze where the wind blows cold;
But let 'er roar! I'll some day snore
Upon my Mount o' Gold.

ONE GOOD RESULT.

"More than six hundred students thrown into Lake Mendota, two perhaps fatally injured in mid-air fighting for a class flag, and upward of forty other minor casualties are the net results of the annual freshman-sophomore class rush of the University of Wisconsin this afternoon," says a dispatch of October 6, from Madison, Wis.

A grand achievement this. All in one day, too!

Who shall say, after this, that the United States is not making progress along the lines of educational development?

The annual class rush has not been brought down to an exact science in our great institutions of learning. Generally speaking, it is not quite so deadly as football, hazing, and other forms of gentlemanly collegiate amusement; but it is growing rather more deadly year after year, and it will probably catch up, in due course of time, with its competitors in this field of high and noble endeavor.

The college education of today is an abject failure if it does not teach the "manly" art of breaking heads, necks, arms, legs, and other members more or less appurtenant to the human body.

Rowdyism has not always been considered an essential part of a college or university education. But this is a progressive age. Ideals change, and men change with them. Also boys.

There is at least one good thing about these college scraps. They have a direct tendency to decrease the total number of fools in the world, saving the overworked fool-killer lots of trouble.

A PRESIDENT'S TRAIN.

It is quite certain that a bill will be introduced in the Fifty-ninth Congress to provide for a railway train which shall always be at the disposal of the President of the United States. It is to be hoped that the bill will become a law. There can be no question but the people would be glad to see a provision of this nature incorporated in the Federal statutes.

There have been times when men of modest fortunes, and even men financially poor, have been elected to the Presidency. Such times may come again, as we hope they will. It would be a sad day for the republic when money proved a bar to honorable ambition. In the event of a poor man occupying the White House, it would be quite impossible for him to travel unless he threw himself on the charity of the railroads, a thought that is intolerable. Therefore, let Congress provide a special train for the President, and let every necessary arrangement be made that will enable him to go about the nation in comfort and dignity and free from personal expense.

Although Mr. Rockefeller is a member of the Association of American Humorists, it is by no means in the nature of a joke to warn him against kidnapers. The suggestion has been made by Pat Crowe, and there are fools and bad men enough in the country to act upon it.

The Lancer.

The Giant and the Dwarfs.

THE world will look with a poor humor on the action of the St. Petersburg Municipality, Thursday evening, in rejecting a proposal that Count Sergius Witte "be given a banquet and presented with the freedom of the city," and in adopting a resolution declaring that "he is not worthy of any special honor, because his services at Portsmouth were only a redeeming sacrifice for the political mistakes in which he has acquiesced and which were responsible for the war."

The world deems, and history will record, that Witte at Portsmouth achieved triumphs in diplomacy as worthy of applause as Japan's victories at arms. His country a prostrate Goliath, he secured for Russia a retreat with honor; his genius smothered the gibes of generations to come.

Beside ingratitude, egotism is a noble fault. Sergius Witte, big and rough and ready and full of burrs, with all his overbearing personality and huge conceit, is a splendid exemplar of national resourcefulness and individual strength, beside whom the blind ingrates of the St. Petersburg Municipality loom small indeed.

The New Job of Ham.

With what an overwhelming sense of the eternal fitness of things The Lancer perused the published announcement last week of the promotion (aside) of James Hamilton Lewis by the Democratic Mayor of Chicago to be chief of a specially-created "Bureau of Conduct and Manners!" whose duties it shall be to conserve quietude and promote kindliness in the official dealings of Windy City employés with their fellow-men. There doubtless could be gathered before sundown a whole host of signatures to attest the need of such an initiative, but those who know best will ever hold that the real reason for the creation of the department of politeness was the mere pregnant proximity of the man!

A school of municipal manners would arise in any vicinage wherein James Hamilton Lewis had fixed his permanent abode, as naturally as a mint bed would spring up and bloom in a julep colony.

If you had dwelt on Puget Sound as I have, and witnessed the exquisite elegance with which on Yesler Way the polished tile of Lewis rose to reciprocate the gaudy salutations of a respectable negress, or watched in spellbound awe the graceful abasements of the faultless figure of the Congressman from Wahington in public response to the radiant recognition of a farmer's wife, you would both comprehend and consent that there is none other such.

It is due as much to native tincture as to any extraneous influences of ambition that the raw youth who not many years ago stevedored on the docks of Seattle is today the man of affairs, ex-member of Congress, corporation attorney to the second largest city in the United States, shrewd politician, sucessful civil and criminal lawyer, exotic orator, delicate dandy—and chief of Chicago's "Bureau of Conduct and Manners!" Egad, he's the man for the place!

They Talk of Whisky—Let's See.

Now that the Owens River water deal is an accomplished fact, certain prominent cits are turning their attention to whisky. In this case that is well. Whisky will bear a great deal of attention of the sort bestowed by a sane body like the Gothenburg Committee—whose personnel in the present instance comprises so much heavy timber that no fear need be felt of endangering erraticism because of the two or three light sticks inserted in its structure by a politeness more generous than wise. (No, I shall mention no names. They are too obvious.)

In a letter to the public (which has suffered long) the Gothenburg Committee proposes, in substance, to organize a responsible corporation to take over the 200 saloon licenses of Los Angeles, buy out at fair appraisements the fixtures, stock and good will of each saloon, close 125 of them and maintain seventy-five, pay the city annually $180,000 (the total amount of the present revenues from all the 200 licenses,) do away with adulteration of beverages and disorderlinesses of conduct, take a profit of 6 per cent. on the corporate investment from the earnings of the seventy-five saloons, and turn into the city treasury all profit thereabove, in addition to the $180,000 a year.

It is patent that seventy-five saloons are a plenty for a community of 200,000 people or 300,000, provided they be wisely distributed as to wards; and as the corporation would give the best of bonds to guarantee the performance of its part of the contract, the city could not lose financially by the deal. No property would be confiscated nor vested rights infringed; the politics of the municipality would be certainly cleansed, and it is reasonable to presume that the moral tone of Los Angeles would be moved up five pegs or ten.

It sounds like good American sense. Suppose we sleep over it a night, and then come up to the solid support of the unique project.

WHY RUTHY FELL.

AN IDYLL OF THE CITY POLICE STATION.

BY GREY OLIVER.

She was one of the kind that puts on white stockings, goes down town every morning and lives off the delicatessen stores, and he looked as if he was leading member of the Voter's League.

It is a 1 to 4 bet on the over-night that two such well-mated doves don't light on the same tree more than once in 387 years, but a wise Providence sometimes brings such together to harmonize the theory of justification. Some jealous people believe that the only happy marriages are those made in Heaven, but this was one that seemed to stick pretty well down here. Her name appeared on the marriage certificate as Claryce Amelia and his as Harold Rutherford and they both looked it without their make-up on. She was really homely enough to be rich; but was such a society favorite before she married that the ordinary run of humanity had an idea that she must have had a yearly contract with all the discounts cut off, from the way she had her name in the society columns every day until Rutherford came along and made the town forget her by taking her lily white hand in holy wedlock.

Rutherford was somebody once, for in the easy days he had been in the Legislature two terms, and then, after going out, had secured a street paving contract and had been appointed administrator of the estate of a retired prominent citizen, whose only heir was a blind wife. Out of all this he managed to grab a good bunch of easy money; but later on he had got in wrong on the Cumulative Company, and when this had stung him for a few "thou" he had put the balance into a saloon license which the commission revoked simply because some tommy drank a flask of wood alcohol up the street one night and lasted just long enough to stagger into his doorway and die. After this Rutherford didn't have money enough to run a big hotel with a blind pig in every room and so got down to living in a three-room flat with a gasoline stove, playing the ponies and going against the bucket shops that always copped every reform ordinance the City Council passed.

Fate had bitten Ruthy a lot in his day, but he was still pretty sweet on himself and he didn't see why McAleer had overlooked him for the Board of Public Works. Once he had gone away from town on a vacation and no one missed him, except the fellow who tried to take care of his dog, but Rutherford never found this out. No one knew he was away but a fellow who called twice to collect the gas bill, but Ruthy lived on in the belief that after all the town didn't look the same when he came back. So when his Claryce asked him one day to stop in the stores down town and do a little shopping for her, he thought that was the biggest cinch he ever heard of. Like all husbands he had tried to make a quick get-away from the front door when he started, to escape being called back for something else she had forgotten, but he didn't make it. Going down town on the car he guessed that the man who could ever beat the barrier and get the best of the start from his wife would be the same fellow who would some day in an inspired moment invent a tea kettle that wouldn't be cold in the morning when a man has to make the fire for breakfast.

"A Pasadena capsicum plaster for Uncle John's lumbago and two yeast cakes and three and a half yards of four-inch beading for my second best kimono and one pound of the best butter and three-quarters of a yard of one-inch elastic for Willie's pants."

Well, if that wasn't easy for him! Any man would have to have all that stuff written down and sealed in an envelope, but not for Ruthy. He didn't need a safety deposit vault and a tin can for such dope, for he had been too long dodging automobiles to be run over by this bunch of Hiawatha blank verse.

It was really a jumble of strange things in this poetry of the fireside, plasters and yeast cakes, and pants and butter didn't exactly coalesce, but no one expected a fellow would remember blank verse if he could find anything else to think of. Still, this Walt Whitman masterpiece that his wife had composed without trying was a pretty fair sample of detached generalities, and Rutherford had an idea he could talk it over once with himself and then get up before a large and enthusiastic audience and say it backward without getting an attack of St. Vitus dance.

He tried it once as the Washington street car hit the Ninth and Figueroa corner, but the humps and the holes in the rails jarred him so that one of his false teeth fell down into his stomach, and when he came out of that experience he wasn't quite sure whether that pound of butter was to be sent home with Willie's pants or he was to bring it himself. It doesn't take many pieces of street car ride to do an ordinary man and when he is carrying a list of stuff downtown for his wife he can drop something very easily. Ruthy said his piece over several times and was not sure he had it right, and the more he thought about it the more doubtful he became. He knew he had all the articles, but the proper thing for him to do was to line them up right.

He realized that a man was a fool, anyway, to try to do a woman's errands, and as he swung off the car he decided a little drink might brighten his thoughts, so he slipped into a rest room and took three fingers of real death-to-ants tonic. To make sure he wasn't being cheated he took some more, and after this he commenced to feel like himself. About this time he met a college chum he hadn't seen for fifteen minutes, and of course that meant another. When this was gone he began to feel a little nervous for fear he might forget some of those things, and before his ballast listed to starboard he concluded to go to a store and have that damned truck sent out to the house before he did anything else.

Accordingly, he very busily braced into an emporium as if he had just been brought there by his automobile and leaned up against a counter. The girl was busy with another customer just long enough to take some of the steam out of him, but he finally caught on. "Say, little girl, just gimme three and a half yards of yeast cakes for Willie's pants. Oh, say, I beg your pardon. You'd just better make that three butter plasters. No, no, no, I mean my wife wants some of Willie's pants or three-quarters of a yard of elastic beadings."

When he got this far the girl gasped and made a break for the tail end of the store, yelling that someone had best look out. Other clerks rushed up to see and a floor walker grabbed him and as the telephone exchange girl got busy with the police station and the customers were making for the street, Ruthy broke away from the floor walker, dashed out a side door, and shot around the corner like a stray bullet.

No one heard of Ruthy for hours after that, and he might have been reported as missing if the patrol wagon hadn't brought him to the City Jail along about 1:30 in the morning.

"Found this one down at Second and Los Angeles, sittin' in the middle o' the street barkin' like a dog," said the wagon man, as he dragged Ruthy through the side door by one arm.

"Brought his bun along with him, didn't he?" remarked a night police reporter.

"Say, here, Grover Cleveland, where d'y' live and what's your name?" asked the wagon man, as he rolled Ruthy over on his back.

"Shree 'n hass busher pants, lastis beadin'!"

"Say, fellow, tell us your name now or the boys'll turn the fire hose on you," demanded the desk sergeant. "Be good and you git a nice bed in the bridal chamber as a prize," he continued. "What's your name?"

"Yeas cassicum plasser," lisped Ruthy, as he rolled over and went to sleep.

"Well, I guess he's just tired and a little bughouse," said the sergeant, "and we'll book him drunk, anyway, and take a chance," and when the jail door was unlocked two night trusties came out and carried Ruthy by the legs and arms into the drunk cell and gave him a kick for dragging his coat on the floor. When searched at the desk he didn't have enough on him to stake a sick jack rabbit to a lunch at a coffee house.

Ruthy had a vision that night, as the anti-dream theorists call it. He went in full evening undress to a Presidential banquet and was picked out to take in a rich heiress to dejeuner. About a million people sat down and they ate and ate and ate and along about the seventy-seventh course when the waiters had got down to passing the hat racks and cab numbers and the ladies were on the tables drinking Mellin's food out of plug hats and the men were beginning to gasp for breath, Ruthy ordered two cakes of yeast, and after he had eaten these he swelled up so chesty that he proposed love and marriage to the beautiful heiress. She not only haughtily scorned his bejeweled hand because he had on Willie's pants, but hit him in the left eye with ten pounds of butter.

Next morning when Ruthy woke up in the drunk cell his feet were resting on some fellow's neck and the beading was breaking out of his own forehead, which felt about as big as the Douglas block.

It was $5 or five days for Ruthy, but the only man in the world that minded that was the fellow that Ruthy went out and touched for the fine. His sweet wifey didn't know it, for the night before she had been drilling the degree team of the auxiliary order of the Ancient Bug Houses and had gone home to sleep with the Second Inside Tattle Tale in order to talk all night and teach her how to become a women's lodge boss.

Diamond Cutting

After a rough Diamond has been rounded by grinding against another, the stone is placed in a lead holder, which is heated until it is soft enough to easily embed the Diamond and mold the lead around it. With the Gem completely imbedded, the polisher holds it against a swiftly revolving steel wheel until a "facet" is worn away. Diamond dust in olive oil is used to make the steel wheel grind the harder Diamond.

After a "facet" has been completed the Diamond is removed from the holder and the operation of putting on another "facet" is repeated. Thus the Diamond is imbedded in the heated lead 56 times to lay on the 56 "facets." The marvelous skill which is required to make these "facets" of proper proportion with the balance of the stone imbedded, readily indicates that none but the most expert and long experienced Diamond cutters are permitted to do this work. The price of a really fine Gem, perfectly cut, is not high, considering the number of days' time spent in cutting a single Diamond.

All of the Brock and Feagans Quality Diamonds must pass a most technical examination for Cutting and Polishing as well as for Quality and Color. Every admirer of fine precious Gems will be interested in looking over our stock. Whether you purchase or not, your visit to our Diamond Department will be considered a compliment.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

The Mayor, at a meeting of the Fire Commission yesterday, declared that the board will do its best to encourage the establishment of industrial concerns in Los Angeles. A large San Francisco company would build a $100,000 plant here, but it is protested.

The Fire Commissioners yesterday adopted a new set of rules for the conduct of the Fire Department. More rigid discipline is provided for, and many other changes are made.

Los Angeles is breaking coast records for amount of street improvements, and the demand for such projects continues.

State Superintendent of Instruction Kirk is trying to cut off about $8000 from the school funds paid to this county each year, despite the enormous sum that Los Angeles pays to the State. It is to be taken into the courts.

The indictment against Miss Frances Hale was dismissed by Judge Smith yesterday.

AT THE CITY HALL.

TO ENCOURAGE INDUSTRIES.

MAYOR DECLARES THIS POLICY OF FIRE COMMISSION.

Large San Francisco Manufacturing Concern Would Build One Hundred Thousand Dollar Plant Here if Permit is Granted—New and Stringent Rules for Fire Department.

"This board wishes to encourage the establishment of manufacturing and industrial concerns in Los Angeles. We do not want to work any hardships on this applicant, and it seems to me that if he files the proper plans and specifications for his proposed buildings we should issue him the permit he desires."

So spoke Mayor McAleer yesterday morning at the meeting of the Fire Commissioners. The enterprise referred to is one of importance, and its proposed location is such that it appears there could be little opportunity for the perennial objector—but he was there just the same.

The Stauffer Chemical Company of San Francisco has purchased for a factory site a whole block, bounded by St. James street, St. John's street, Holly street and the Santa Fé Railway tracks.

The surroundings are not exactly esthetic, for there is a gas plant on the one side, an oil refinery on the other, and the switch yards to the rear.

Here the company proposes to erect a sulphur refinery, to handle the native product from Arizona and New Mexico. The plant will represent an outlay of over $100,000. There will be a brick central building, 120x350 feet, a part of it two stories in height. The plant will give employment to thirty men to begin with, and it is probable it will soon employ 100 hands.

The objection was raised that the gases which might escape from the buildings would annoy residents. After the showing made by the company's construction superintendent, P. M. Paulson, as to the character of the surroundings and the methods used to prevent escape of sulphur fumes, Mayor McAleer declared himself as above, and the board carried the matter over in order to give Mr. Paulson an opportunity to file his plans.

The Stauffer Company is now operating three plants in Northern California, one large concern being located at Bay and Dupont streets, San Francisco, where it has been in operation for the past twenty years.

As Southern California furnished a great market for the consumption of sulphur, and as Los Angeles is easily accessible from the points where the raw mineral is obtained, the company has decided to operate here—if it is allowed to erect its refinery.

Vast quantities of sulphur are used in Southern California in tree and grape-vine spraying processes, fruit curing and fertilizer-making. The prospects are good for building up an extensive plant by the Stauffer Company.

More Stringent Rules.

The board adopted a complete revision in the rules for conducting the fire department. These provide for stricter discipline among the men, and there are numerous minor changes.

Property owners on Myrtle street were present to protest against the rebuilding of the Myrtle-avenue planing mill, which was destroyed by fire a week ago. G. H. Wahlenmaier, the owner of the mill, was advised by the board to make application for a new permit, and this subject will come up again at the next meeting.

STREET IMPROVEMENT.
DEMAND CONTINUES.

Los Angeles is breaking the record of western cities for the vast amount of street improvements in progress or planned. The demand for such improvement continues, and there are now on file in the City Clerk's office, ready to be presented at Monday's meeting of the City Council petitions for the improvement of Rice avenue, between Main and Moneta avenue; Kent street, between Lake Shore and Bonnie Brae; Woodlawn, between Fifty-first and Fifty-second; Los Angeles, between Fifty-first and Fifty-third; Fifty-second, between Main and Los Angeles; Boylston, between Court and Colton, and Avenue 57, between Pasadena and Salt Lake Railway.

MORE WORK ROOM.
FOR CITY LIBRARY.

The Building Committee of the City Hall is having windows cut through the north brick walls of the attic, and this will make available as a library workshop space now unused. The library is so cramped for room that it is turning to all the odd corners, and it is now proposed to establish a series of air fans and shafts in the basement rooms, so that these, too, may be made fit for the use of libray attendants.

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

TRYING TO CUT SCHOOL FUND.

SUPERINTENDENT KIRK TO BE MANDAMUSED BY COUNTY.

He Has Instructed County Superintendent to Exclude Kindergarteners Under a Certain Age, So That There Will be Shortage from State Fund Each Year for Local Taxpayers.

There is a row between the County Superintendent of Schools and T. J. Kirk, State Superintendent of Instruction, and if the latter wins the taxpayers of Los Angeles County will have to raise from $6000 to $8000 more per year than they are paying at present for school purposes.

Under an order from the State Superintendent of Instruction, kindergarten children under five years of age are not to be included in the County Superintendent's report, and are to be deprived of the State's per capita to which they are entitled. And this, too, when it is remembered that there are more kindergarten children attending the schools in Los Angeles County, than in all the other kindergarten schools of the State combined.

It is believed that the opposition to counting these children comes from San Francisco, where the kindergarten is not maintained as part of the public school system.

The fight was opened when Kirk forwarded a circular letter to the superintendents having kindergarten schools to change the superintendent's annual report by striking out the attendance record of all kindergarten children under five years of age. The Superintendent of Instruction sheltered himself behind an opinion of the Attorney-General (which he must have asked for) from which he quoted as follows:

> . . . . . It was evidently intended by the Legislature, in using the words "average daily attendance," to include therein only school census children between the ages of five and seventeen years, for the school census is the basis of the apportionment of State school money.
> In apportioning such moneys, therefore, I am of the opinion that it is proper for you to estimate the average daily attendance in kindergarten schools, where such schools have been adopted into the primary system, the same as is done in regular primary and grammar schools; but in estimating such average daily attendance only children between the ages of five and seventeen years attending such kindergarten schools should be counted.

Unless one is familiar with the school law the little joker in this extract is not apparent, but it served to bestir County Superintendent Keppel to action, and after conference with District Attorney Fredericks the matter is to be thrashed out in court. An application will be made in the Superior Court for a writ of mandate addressed to the Superintendent of Instruction, ordering him to accept the report of County Superintendent Keppel as it was submitted to him without any such mutilation as contemplated by the Attorney-General.

The Attorney-General claims that it "was the intention of the Legislature to make the school census the basis of the distribution of the State school fund," but the Attorney-General has another guess coming. The political code defines who may be admitted to the schools as follows:

(1.) Children between the ages of 6 and 21 years of age; (2.) Adults; (3.) Kindergarten children, over 4 years; (4.) Deaf children, between the ages of 3 and 21 years.

"Prior to September 1, 1905," said Mr. Keppel, yesterday, "the State school fund was distributed on the census, and the reason for substituting the present law was that the census was grossly unfair. For this reason a change was made to a double basis of distribution:

"First, an apportionment of $250 for each teacher is made that is allowed by law as determined by the census. Secondly, the remainder of the State fund is distributed pro rata upon the average daily attendance.

"That the Legislature intended that the State school fund should be apportioned on the double basis instead of the single is shown clearly in the law itself, which reads:

"'—— and after thus apportioning $250 per teacher on the census basis, he (State Superintendent) shall apportion the balance of the State school fund to the several counties, or cities and counties, according to their average daily attendance, as shown by the reports of the superintendents for the next preceding school year.

"Nor does the average daily attendance depend on the census, but upon the attendance of those who may legally attend school. The law specifically provides for four classes—beginning with the deaf at 3 years, and ending with adults; and provides, also, that when a school is established it shall be maintained for the same length of time, and have the same rights as any other school. To throw out the average daily attendance of a portion of the kindergarten children," concluded Mr. Keppel, "is in my opinion a violation of this section of the law."

FRANCES HALE FREE.
WILL AWAIT DEVELOPMENTS.

The Grand Jury indictment against Miss Frances Hale, charging her with having embezzled money belonging to the "Door of Hope," was knocked out yesterday by Judge Smith.

There is a hoodoo on grand jury indictments. Not one has been made to stick for years.

In court with her attorney Le Compte Davis, Miss Hale appeared in no wise disturbed by her anomalous position. She wore a fetching summer costume of white, with white laces shimmering, and a dainty creation on her head that was half hat and half bonnet. A Japanese sunshade added a bit of bright color to the tout ensemble that proved very effective.

Davis demurred to the indictment on two grounds: That it didn't set out facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and, secondly, that the indictment didn't conform to the requirements of the statute, in that it could not be discerned how the money alleged to have been embezzled was so diverted, whether by the defendant as trustee, bailee, agent or clerk. On this last point Davis made out his case up to the hilt.

Miss Hale was charged with having on June 1, and on other dates up to August 19, in her possession for the benefit of the Door of Hope, the sum of $1000, which she embezzled to her own use. Attorney Davis in running over his authorities showed that in every State it is required that it be set out in the indictment whether the money was received in a fiduciary capacity, and in what fiduciary relation. That the charge of embezzlement be differentiated from larceny the court had so held without exception.

Deputy District Attorney Donnell argued the other way. Judge Smith held that the indictment wouldn't hold water, and ordered it dismissed. Maj. Donnell reminded the court that the grand jury that returned the indictment had been discharged. The court said that if he thought proper the District Attorney could make representations to the next grand jury.

Miss Hale's bail was exonerated and she swept out of the courtroom with her counsel. In a nonchalant, but smiling manner, she said that she will remain in the city for a short time to see what the "Door of Hope" people intend to do.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.
BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

ATTACK TOURISTS' PRIVILEGE. —Ed Young, a fisherman, was arrested for fishing with a large mesh net within 1000 feet of the Long Beach wharf. This limit was fixed to allow tourists to idle away the days, but the fishermen occasionally have disturbed the placid delights of the amateurs. Senator Savage has raised the point that inasmuch as the Appellate Court has denied the Supervisors the power to limit the rights of sportsmen conferred by the State law, so by a parity of reasoning fishermen carrying on their business under a State license may not be interfered with by municipal or other local authorities. Judge Smith will hear the matter next Saturday.

ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT.—The Valley Electric Company has incorporated with a capital stock of $500,000, of which $500 has been subscribed. The directors are R. F. Davis, E. A. Miller, and A. BLIND PIG.—J. S. Cosgrove, who keeps a small merchandise store at Florence, yesterday paid $225 to Justice Young as a fine for running a blind pig.

DAIRY SUPPLIES.—The Moore Milk Receptacle Company has incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000, of which $500 has been subscribed. E. S. Moore, F. J. Zeehandelaar, E. D. Elliott, W. R. Hervey and S. Harris, all of this city, are directors.

THEY DIDN'T APPEAR.

Millionaire Poker Players Will Not be Compelled to Show up in the Police Court.

The five gentlemen who were caught in the police net on Friday night, when Capt. Auble raided a poker-joint at No. 219 West Fourth street, failed to appear in the Police Court yesterday and lay claim to the $25 bail that each of them had deposited for appearance.

As they are said to have represented an aggregate capital of $5,000,000 and were booked under just any old name, they probably do not find it necessary to forego cigars on account of the loss of the bail money, and were glad to escape the publicity of the Police Court.

A bunch of Chinese gamblers tried the same dodge some time ago when their bail was declared forfeited and bench-warrants issued under which they were compelled to appear in court.

Wouldn't that be a calamity for the five millionaires to face? But the order made by Justice Austin is that they shall appear on Monday to show cause why the bail should not be forfeited. That means, in plain English: "If you don't come your bail will be forfeited."

Curious people need not stand at the door of the Police Station and watch for them.

DARING CORRESPONDENT.

Edwin Emerson, New York Clubman, Finds Pastime on the Battlefields of Various Nations.

Edward Emerson, who lectured at Blanchard Hall last Friday evening, is proud of his distinction as perhaps the most spectacular of American war correspondents. Daring is his stock in trade, and by his own confession he does not let it run low. Emerson returned recently from Manchuria, his usefulness in the war zone having been practically annulled by a Japanese parole restricting him from running any more of the Mikado's blockades.

About a year ago, when the Russian-Japanese struggle was at its fiercest, Emerson was reported killed. A correspondent sent the message from Mukden that he had been shot by the Russians while attempting to run their lines into the Japanese side during a battle. The news proved to be not true. Emerson had succeeded in cutting loose from the Czar's lines and crossing into the camps of the enemy, between Mukden and Oyama's headquarters, but he turned up there safe and sound.

He had troubles unnumbered with the Japanese officers, who looked upon him as a spy. His reported death having been made the subject of a newspaper interview with President Roosevelt, the chief executive scouted the report, remarking that his knowledge of Emerson as one of the Roosevelt Rough Riders had satisfied him that "Emerson could be depended upon to land on his feet wherever he fell."

At the close of the Spanish-American War Emerson turned his steps to Central and South America, where he served as a soldier of fortune in the war between Venezuela and Colombia, and was decorated with the Order of Bolivar for gallantry in action as a colonel of vaqueros in the Andes.

The outbreak of the Russian-Japanese war gave Emerson a host of chances to indulge his daring as a correspondent. Seemingly bearing a charmed life, he passed back and forth between the lines of the foes while other correspondents were immured in Tokio. His severest punishment was two months' imprisonment in close quarters at Sasebo, the Japanese naval base; whence he was rescued by the intervention of his cousin, United States Minister Griscom, and the friendliness of Japanese newspaper men.

Emerson is a man of independent means and comes of fine stock; several of the best New York clubs have him for a member, and his authorship of books has gained him honorary admission to several foremost historical societies. He says that young Richard Barry of Los Angeles, who distinguished himself by his fine war descriptions from Port Arthur, induced him at the close of the war to take to the lecture platform. Emerson and Barry are fast friends.

GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

chants, who couldn't find their opportunities in crowded European marts, clannish Germans, wandering Yankees, and a very few Miner C. Keiths.

INTENSE COMPETITION.

There is intense competition and trade strife between the foreigners who are "butting in,' and the Americans to whom the trade belongs by right.

The Germans hang together the closest, having their own clubs and their own commercial organizations. So do the English in a lesser degree.

The Germans have worked up a great trade there. They pack butter, they sell cheaper goods, and they trust the natives longer than perhaps any other country.

The English have their money in anything including the American trusts.

It is with pride that one hears how the Americans, with their great business sagacity and remarkable quickness of grasping an opportunity, are extending their domination over all the rest.

One of the pictures produced here gives a good idea of the mongrel character of the population. Nine nationalities are represented. They were not collected. They were merely the men temporarily confined in quarantine in a hospital on the Pacific side when Hogan got there.

The two central figures are Hogan and his father, Yankees. The dark brother at the upper left hand is a Zanzibar man; below him a Canary Islander. The little boy is a half breed. At the bottom are a Chinaman, a Mexican, an Italian. At the right a Frenchman. Sitting on the porch is a native of Costa Rica. It is this kind of a mixture that is building up the country.

THE UNLUCKY GAP.

Alas, the great port is Limon, which is on the Atlantic side, from which ply steamers to Europe, New Orleans and New York. The Pacific Mail lands at Pt. Arena, on the Pacific side. This is our gateway.

The capital of the country is San José, about midway between the two coasts.

The coffee lands are around the capital. The bananas are on the Atlantic Coast, and much of the rubber. Hardwood timber is everywhere.

A railroad connects the Atlantic with the capital. Unfinished line would connect Pacific, but for a gap of a few miles.

This slight gap of about thirteen miles may account in some way for the fact much of the products coming from Costa Rica to Los Angeles go first to Orleans or New York and then across the continent to us.

But the fact that all the products coming up the Pacific side should first go through San Francisco and then be dribbled down to us instead of coming direct through our own port, is humiliating and unaccountable.

To take passage to Costa Rica you have to go from here to San Francisco to catch a Pacific Mail steamer.

WHAT WE MISS.

Now, as to what business we could do with Costa Rica:

Some of the goods they buy are strictly "in our line," and we are not selling any part of it.

Parenthetically it may be remarked that the natives there buy goods by the label and stick to it all their lives.

Also this parenthetically—Hogan says that California has a great name all through Central America. They learned to know it in the days of the great hegira of forty-nine. If they could they would trade with California, and "California" on a brand of goods would give it a prestige.

Costa Rican statistics show that last year they imported $9807 worth of olive oil. As we haven't nearly enough oil to supply our country we need not be greatly agitated over the fact that this all comes from Europe.

Candles, $24,684; most of these came from New York.

Cement, $13,933; mostly from England.

Candy, $5951; from the United States and France but none from California.

Canned goods, $44,979; from both United States and Europe. Mr. Hogan states some rather remarkable facts concerning this product which of course comes home to us in Southern California.

Costa Rica has tried California canned fruits and found them mainly to be very poor, very much inferior to French and Spanish and English goods.

Yet the canned fruit put up in Los Angeles manufactories he says is far superior to the foreign goods sold in Costa Rica. Canned stuff is very high there, selling at about forty-five cents for a fifteen-cent can.

Fresh grapes bring as much as 75 cents a pound.

Of dried fruits, the imports were $5503.

Crackers to the value of $20,050 are imported, Los Angeles getting no share of it. Mr. Hogan says there is a great market for crackers there if they were properly put in tin and sold cheaper.

Much of the $281,889 worth of flour that goes into Costa Rica comes from California.

But of all the condensed milk produced on this Coast, and of $29,809 worth consumed in Costa Rica, Mr. Hogan says that he never has seen one can of a California brand.

To our shame, the minng machinery comes from England; even the United Fruit Company of Boston imports its shovels from Europe. The demand for mining machinery is just awakening. The mines are just opening. The chance is now for California to get in.

Patent medicines worth $373,685 were imported.

Coffee sacks of the value of $54,981 were imported. We ought to supply every single sack that goes into Central America. We get the hemp from the Philippines. We make the jute bagging in our prisons. California ought to "freeze out" the world at that product. The fact is most of the coffee sacks come from New York. Probably originally from India.

Great quantities of cotton cloth, hardware and shoes are imported, but these come from St. Louis and New Orleans.

COUNTRY'S EXPORTS.

A glance at the list of some of the more important exports of the country gives one a feeling of having endured an insult to think that these should be coming to us by the long roundabout ways of Europe, New York or even New Orleans, a little bit from San Francisco.

Bananas, $3,032,700; controlled absolutely by the trust.

Several men through the country, one in Los Angeles, are working on a process to make flour for bread out of bananas. If this proves to be successful, a direct market for the fruit would be created here.

The great hold of the banana trust is due to the fact that the fruit is so perishable the trust can make the fruit of an outsider who tries to "butt in" spoil on his hands.

Cocoa, $47,650; coffee, $3,083,972; minerals, $28,930; hides, $85,040; rubber, $86,798.

The rubber goes to New York and then across the country to us; we could manufacture it just as well as New York.

Cedar, $58,805. The great hardwood forests have been little developed. Most of the product goes to Europe. Costa Ricans say they could get neither fair treatment nor fair prices from America.

These figures are for one country only; there are others in Central America which offer practically the same conditions.

In Nicaragua, for instance, most of the products from the Pacific side are sent down the Coast to Panama, across the isthmus and up to New York instead of coming to us.

The facts and the figures given in this article are guaranteed as giving an absolutely correct view of the trade conditions. It is only a long-distance peek.

But it shows possibilities for Los Angeles as a great port of entry that almost takes one's breath away.

Alfred Benjamin's Superior Clothing

All sorts of arguments are put forth by different stores to attract patronage. Some talk about their stores, some about their proprietors, some about their service.

We deem it wise to advertise what we sell, our clothing.

If store fixtures count for anything; if quick, careful attention is important; then you'll find this establishment at the very top of the ladder.

But for our part, we prefer to call attention to our superb showing of the smartest suits and overcoats in Los Angeles. None anywhere approach them. Tomorrow's the day to make your selection.

The Pressing System
ON SHIRT BOSOMS

Our new pressing machines make a new era in laundering. By their use it is possible to iron a shirt without subjecting it to any friction, wear or stretching whatever.

The shirt bosom is simply placed upon a felt covered board and pressed against a hot steel plate and held there until the moisture is dried out and the bosom is stiff.

This method wears a shirt even less than it would to iron it by hand—and it produces a finish that no hand ironer could equal.

Fine work on table and bed linen. Special rates to hotels and lodging houses. Make the change tomorrow. Satisfaction attached to every bundle.

"SOMETHING DOING"
The 5th STREET Store
BROADWAY & 5th LOS ANGELES. STEELE-FARIS & WALKER CO.

Silk Ruffling, Worth Up to $3.00 .... 25c

1000 pieces, silk chiffon ruffling, representing nearly 600 styles of manufacturers' samples, many of which have never been shown in Los Angeles. Widths up to 10 inches, many plaited, ruffled and shirred effects; the regular retail values of these goods would range up to $3.00. Nothing to approach this offering in extent has ever been attempted in Los Angeles. On sale Monday at, 25c.

SCORES OF CONGRATULATIONS

Through the mail, by wire, and thousands personally were showered upon the management and employees of the Fifth Street Store on opening day, and during the past week. The crowds—the store itself—the arrangement, comfort and convenience—the facilities for doing business—the high grade of people connected with it—all received due appreciation from the visiting throngs. But the most impressive feature and the one most commented on was the uniform lowness of price noticeable throughout the entire establishment. Many surprised inquiries were made as to where the goods came from and how they could be sold at any such prices. The answer lies in the ability of our buyers—in the ready cash back of them—and in the good will of importers, merchants and manufacturers, as indicated by a few of the telegrams here reproduced, who, when they have choice lots of merchandise and special bargains, would rather throw them our way than anywhere else. The quantity consumed by no means regulates the price in every instance, and other things enter largely into the consideration.

IT IS BECAUSE THE FIFTH STREET STORE BUYS CHEAPER THAT IT CAN AND DOES SELL CHEAPER. THE OFFERINGS LISTED BELOW ARE CALCULATED TO MAKE GOOD THIS CLAIM, AND TO FIRMLY INTRENCH THIS STORE IN THE MINDS OF THE SHOPPING PUBLIC AS THE REAL BARGAIN CENTER OF LOS ANGELES.

Make no Mistake, You Can't Begin to Equal These Garment Values

One thing is certain if you buy your new Fall suit, skirt, or jacket, at Hale's you'll have one of the prettiest styles of the season and it will cost you from $5.00 to $15.00 less than though you bought it elsewhere. We state this positively.

The men who buy for the seven Hale stores, armed with an unlimited amount of cash can buy suits to sell at $15.00 which other stores sell at $20.00 and $22.00. Of course, we don't expect you to believe this without coming here to see the merchandise. But we do think that any woman would be worse than foolish to make a purchase without first seeing the extraordinary values at Hale's.

THE FAR EAST.

China.

CHINA IN COMMERCE AND LAW. By T. R. Jernigan. The Macmillan Company, New York.

There have been many books written on China. Some of these have given a very fair idea of the country and its inhabitants, and of this number we must class the work before us. The present volume has, however, the merit of treating within a single pair of covers matter that has hitherto been scattered through a dozen or more volumes. We have, too, confidence that the work is accurate, although we have been able to compare but a small part of the references with the authorities cited. In cases where we have been able to make comparison we find a substantial agreement and readily accord to the author the merit, one more unusual than appears to the ordinary reader, of using the material of other writers as the authors intended it should be used. In other words, there is no twisting of data to suit the purposes of the author of the work before us.

China is such a complex subject that it goes without proof that the man who attempts to write of it as a whole must either sketch the subject or else write inaccurately of most of the topics that are within his chosen field. In the present volume, although the author's field is a strenuous one, there is a strict specialization. He does not attempt to tell of the manners and customs of Chinamen in general; neither does he deal with the problems of religion and education, but he confines himself to commerce and law. And, we must add, if he had adhered to one of the subjects and left the other for a future book he would have accomplished more and better work than that before us, even acknowledging that the book contains the best treatment of the subjects that has yet appeared. As it is, we have about half as much matter as a survey of the individual subjects requires, and are exasperated because one who can present facts so well did not give all the facts available.

The work opens with a chapter upon physical features and origins, a subject that is necessarily laid before the reader of a work of the character of that before us in order that he may well understand the nature of the problem which, in commerce as well as in law, has confronted the Chinese and those associated with them in business. Then follows a chapter upon the government of the provinces that make up the gigantic empire. And we find in this connection that of all the countries of the world pretending to an autocratic government, China has the most loosely constructed organization. But as we read the pages that Mr. Jernigan has spread before us, we find that loose as is the organization, it possesses elements of strength that are not apparent to the average reader. Indeed, those who have for many years spoken of China as having a government ready to fall apart from the weight of its several components, will be astonished that they have accepted so blindly ex parte statements and not investigated the matter for themselves. If they had done so they would have found that China possesses elements of strength that only need utilization to have tremendous force in the history of the world. To the observer who looks beneath the surface, it would seem that the influence that Japan is gaining in China points to the solidifying of governmental units and the building up of an oriental power that will be able to take a stand for its own integrity that will astonish those European nations that have for years been steadily encroaching upon Chinese territory and treating it as a legitimate object for conquest.

Having discussed the subject of government, our author takes up that of law. Here we find that he is confronted by difficulties that are large. Law in China and law in America mean two different things. They vary in nature and application, and the many means and modes of administering law in China make a comprehensive and succinct treatment of it almost an impracticability. But our author has done remarkably well. He has so arranged his statement of the systems that he presents a clear view of the major features of the law of China and the manner in which it is administered. The chapter on courts is extremely lucid. That on extraterritoriality is not so happy, though of undoubted value.

Having disposed of the subject of law we find our author next considering commerce. At the root of commerce he rightly places the guilds. The student of economics may well spend some time comparing the Chinese guild system with that of England and the Continent. Business customs, banks, weights and measures are considered at some length and sufficiently to enable the reader to grasp the salient points of these subjects. Land, water and railway transit are the subjects of three chapters that are as enlightening as they are prophetic.

A working index completes the volume. G. C. L.

HISTORY.

Source Material.

THE TRAIL MAKERS. Various Editors. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

That American history should be of peculiar interest both to historians and to general readers, is a statement which will find little contradiction. This assertion finds its basis in two conditions; one is the originality of that history, the other the stupendous results which have followed the various movements in which America has played a part. The use of the term "originality" is intended to convey the thought that those who made the history of America, and more particularly those who were active in those movements which marked the early years of the white conquest of the continent, faced conditions which did not exist in the country from which they had come, which had not existed, within the memory of man, in any other continent. The importance of America's history to the rest of the world, may be measured only by the student who devotes his life to the study of men and events, but all of us may catch a glimpse of the tremendous effect produced by the injection of a new continent, and hence a new nation, into the stream of history.

It has been unfortunate that readers in general have been unable to study American history from the sources. Many have known of the existence of these fountains of information; few have been able to avail themselves of them. The reason for this is found in the fact that the source material is in widely separated places; much of it is jealously guarded by private owners, who are loathe to permit its use by the historian or its distribution for the enlightenment of readers. That these conditions existed has been long known and deplored by historians and publishers, and many have been the attempts to change them. Some of the source material has, indeed, been put in shape for the public, but the price of the books containing it has been prohibitory of wide circulation.

But it is believed that "The Trail Makers" series of volumes will give the public that which it desires and which it should have. The work is in convenient shape for handling, the mechanics are excellent when one considers the price of each volume. Portraits—engravings—of the trail makers, and maps of their journeys have whenever it is possible, been supplied.

But to the investigation of the volumes in detail: The series contains, among others, the following: "The Journey of Coronado, 1540-42, from the City of Mexico to the Buffalo Plains of Kansas and Nebraska," "Voyages from Montreal Through the Continent of North America to the Frozen and Pacific Oceans in 1789 and 1793," "History of the Expedition Under the Command of Captains Lewis and Clark to the Sources of the Missouri, Across the Rocky Mountains, Down the Columbia River to the Pacific in 1804-6," "The History of the Five Indian Nations of Canada Which are Dependent Upon the Province of New York," "A Journal of Voyages and Travels in the Interior of North America," "The Wild Northland. The Story of a Winter Journey with Dogs Across Northern North America, 1872-3." It will be seen from these titles that the material collected covers most of the continent of North America and in time embraces three centuries and more.

While there has been no attempt to make of these accounts a connected story, there has been great need of editorial work and this has been ably done by Professor John Bach McMasters. Of the separate volumes, the first of the series, that containing the account of the journey of Cabeza de Vaca, has been translated by Fanny Bandelier from the original in the Lenox Library of New York. The work is edited and supplied with an introduction by Ad. F. Bandelier and it contains, besides the journal of De Vaca, the report of Father Marcos of Nizza and a letter from the Viceroy Mendoza. Father Marcos is the priest who accompanied the expedition of the explorer as far as "The towne of S. Michael in the province of Culiacan" and departed from there "on Friday, the 7th day of March, in the year 1539, having for my companion Frier Honoratus, and carrying with me Stephan, a negro, . . . and certain of those Indians which the . . . lord Viceroy had made free and bought for this purpose." The report then goes on to tell how, following his journey as the Holy Ghost did "leade" him, the priest had many strange adventures and came at last to those seven cities of Cibola, which he describes thus and the subsequent search for which was to be the cause of so much suffering and anguish of mind and body: "At the entrance of this plaine I sawe but seven Townes, onely of a reasonable bigness, which were farre off in a lowe valley beeing very greene and a most fruitfull soyle, out of which ran many Rivers. I was informed that there was much golde in this valley, and that the inhabitants worke it into vessels and thin plates." It was the report of the "much golde" that lured the Spanish to their destruction. The journal of de Vaca tells of his travels eastward, through what is now Central Texas, as far as the Sabine and the account is one of exceeding interest. This volume, owing to the editing, is one of the most satisfactory of the series.

The two volumes containing the narrative of De Soto have come under the editorship of Professor Edward Gaylord Bourne and show evidence of careful and scholarly supervision and workmanship. For the first time the entire history of the carer of De Soto and his exploration of the South is given in convenient form, and, moreover, in this series appears an English translation of the narrative of Ranjel, secretary of De Soto. This translation is the work of the editor and is absolutely necessary to the completeness of the story. The first part of the book is devoted to the narrative of the Gentleman of Elvas who purports to present a "True revelation of the vicissitudes that attended the Governor Don Hernando De Soto and some nobles of Portugal in the discovery of the Province of Florida." The second part is devoted to the story told by Luys Hernando De Biedma, factor of the expedition, and the translation was made by Buckingham Smith who first published the original text in his collection of "Varios Documentos para la Historia de la Florida y Tierras Adyacentes." The volumes end with the account based on the diary of Rodrigo Ranjel by Gonzalo Fernandez de Oviedo y Valdés. It is to be regretted that the map of the expedition which accompanies these two volumes is too small to give satisfaction to the general reader. Otherwise, there can be no adverse comment made upon the books.

The next of the series, edited by George Parker Winship, has also been translated and provided with an introduction by the editor. This story of the journey of Coronado and of his search for the Seven Cities of Cibola is one of thrilling interest and reads rather like a tale of the romancer than the experience of the explorer. That the editorial work is worthy of praise needs no assertion to that effect from the reviewer; the name that appears upon the title page is sufficient.

Of the two volumes that constitute the next number in the series, there must be spoken an unfavorable criticism. While Robert Waite has supplied an introduction, there has been no editorial work done upon the account given by Mackenzie and the reader and student will miss the notes and comments which were found so helpful in the preceding volumes. Following the introduction, is a preface in which the author explains his reasons for undertaking the voyages described in the volumes, tells of his equipment and apologizes for what he designates the uninteresting character of the narrative. It is in this work that the reader will find another journey undertaken for the discovery of the Northwest Passage, and Mackenzie expresses the hope that his discoveries have definitely settled the question which had been vexing the minds of men for two centuries and more. In spite of the apologies of the author, it cannot be said that the narrative makes dreary reading. No work which is undertaken in the spirit which animated the voyages of Mackenzie can be without interest, and so the telling of that journey's events must afford both entertainment and information.

In regard to the Journals of Lewis and Clark, there must be given the same criticism as of the Voyages of the English Explorer. That is, the books lack careful editing. Prof. Masters has supplied the volumes with an introduction which gives an account of the Louisiana Purchase and gives notes upon the route of Lewis and Clark, and this is a great advantage to the reader. We have in this instance again to regret that the matter of the volume is without comment. The present work is a complete reprint of the Biddle edition of 1814, that to which all the members of the party contributed, and it contains, therefore, not only the journals, but the preface written by Paul Allen, the editor, and the life of Capt. Lewis, supplied by Thomas Jefferson. In the appendix is to be found a paper, the author of which is Merriwether Lewis, entitled: "Observations and reflections upon the present and future state of Upper Louisiana, in relation to the government of the Indian nations inhabiting that country, and the trade and intercourse with the same." The appendix contains, also, the estimate of the Indians—names of villages, tribes, number of houses in the settlements and the number of inhabitants of each village. Following this is a short, diary-like account of observations made upon the weather and the various animals and plants met during the year 1804. Altogether, the three volumes that contain the Lewis and Clark journals are of great interest and value.

Cadwallader Colden's History of the Five Indian Nations occupies two volumes of the series. As Surveyor-General and afterward Lieutenant-Governor of the province of New York, his knowledge of the subject of which he writes was extensive, and his work is indispensable to the student of American history. The work of Colden has literary as well as historical merit, and has been cited as one of the most important evidences of the development of intellectual life in the colonial New York of the middle of the eighteenth century. It was in this connection that Mrs. Lamb wrote: "More attention had been given to education. Libraries and philosophical societies were being formed in various directions; Dr. Colden had just finished a book, the 'History of the Five Nations,' which was rendering his name famous." An introduction to this portion of the series has been furnished by Robert Waite, and our criticism of this is that we are too well pleased with the little that is given us not to wish that there had been more.

Harmon's Journals and the "Wild Northland" of William Butler finish the collection. Of the first of these, the introduction has been written by Robert Waite, and in it he tells something of the author of the journals. Harmon was in the employ of the famous Northwest Fur Company for nineteen years, eight of which were passed beyond the Rocky Mountains, and between them and the Pacific Ocean. Of the qualifications of Harmon for the work which he undertook, it is stated that he gained his experience by life among the Indians, who, when he first came among them, still wandered through the country in their primitive simplicity, unconscious of the existence of other human beings than themselves. "He passed his life among these savages. He even took a wife, ad interim, from one of the tribes, and lived with her until he forsook the country forever." The accounts, as given, are, therefore, to be credited, although there is a suspicion that Daniel Haskell, who edited the journals, introduced some religious observations which were considered proper to the subject, but of which the author was not guilty. The journal contains an account of the Indians upon the west side of the Rocky Mountains, and a description of those who have their homes upon the eastern side. There is a chapter dealing with the character of the Canadian voyageurs, and this is of much interest, as is also that part which contains the observations of the author on the animals of the part of the world in which he lived.

The foreword of Gen. Butler's work begins thus: "People are supposed to have an object in every journey they undertake in this world. . . . As this matter of object, then, seems to be a rule with travelers, it may be asked by those who read this book, what object had the writer in undertaking a journey across the snowy wilderness of North America, in winter and alone? I fear there is no answer to be given to the question, save such as may be found in the motto on the title page, or in the pages of the book itself." Of this man, who afterwards rose very high in the service of the British government, Robert Waite says: "Nature reserves the enjoyment of her grandest scenes only for the bravest and most resolute of the sons of men. Such men are not often gifted with the art of conveying some portion of their pleasure, at second hand, to their brethren. It is very rarely indeed that the restless wanderer, whose love of adventure leads him into the wildest recesses of distant mountains, can reproduce his impressions with the skill and power that are shown in 'The Wild Northland.'" It is the wide recognition of this fact which has placed this notable book among the classics. Of this charm of style we can but say that Mr. Waite has not been overgenerous in praise. Particularly happy is the author when moved by the beauties of nature. He has traveled 900 miles to what is called the Buffalo's Head, a mountain peak near the Peace River. He stands upon the top of this. "I stood on the bare rocks which formed the frontlet of the Buffalo's Head. . . . Alas, how futile is it to endeavor to describe such a view. Not more wooden are the ark animals of our childhood, than the words in which man would clothe the images of that higher nature which the Almighty has graven into the shapes of lonely mountains. . . . Can the eye wander away, away, away until it is lost in blue distance as a lark is lost in blue heaven, but the sight still drinks the beauty of the landscape, though the source of the beauty be unseen, as the source of the music which falls from the azure depths of sky? . . . Let us come down from this mountain top to our own small level again. We will upset you in an ice-rapid; Kaleder will fire at you; we will be wrecked; we will have no food: we will hunt the moose, and do anything and everything you like, but we cannot put in words the things that we see from these lonely mountain tops when we climb them in the sheen of evening." So speaks the modest author; the reader must judge for himself of the truth of his statement.

Of the Trail Makers series as a whole, we have this to say: Except for the lack of note and comment in certain of the volumes, there is no adverse criticism. It will be long before such a literary want is better supplied, and editors and publishers, all who were engaged in the preparation of the series, may look with pride upon their handiwork. G. C. L.

FICTION.

A Story of the Sea.

PARTNERS OF THE TIDE. By Joseph C. Lincoln. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

A stirring sea tale is this—a tale of adventure and probable adventure. The scene of the book is not laid in a place where the average reader looks for romance, and yet it is a place where romance is inherent—a place where those who know how to look for it can find romance in every hamlet. It is Cape Cod—Cape Cod of the sand and scrub, and the Cape Cod, too, of tragedy for those who go down to the sea in ships as well as for those who live their lives in its sundered towns and villages. We stop in passing to say that one of the five best stories that has been written upon an American subject has its scene laid on Cape Code, and if one desires tragedy in its extreme and realism in all its nakedness—yet of a nakedness that one can look upon unashamed—let him read "Jethro Bacon."

But we pass from thought of another book and come back to "Partners of the Tide." Joseph Lincoln knows his subject. He and Connoly seem to have the Massachusetts coast so at their fingers' ends that when one reads what they have written it is as if he were living the lives of which the pages tell.

Real—very real—are the men and women of this book. It is a simple story, too; there is no straining after effects, there is no reaching after startling climaxes. And yet the reader does not lose interest in the story for an instant. He watches the growth of the junior partner and the development of the senior with eager sympathy. And in the end of the success that rewards the partners is as pleasing to the reader as it must have been to those who achieved it by their own endeavor. G. C. L.

OTHER REVIEWS.

[BY A TIMES REVIEWER.]

FICTION.

Good Stories.

TALES OF THE ROAD. By Charles N. Crewdson. Thompson & Thomas, Chicago. (Price $1.50.)

The Times has recently been privileged to reproduce some tales from Charles N. Crewdson's book of commercial traveler's stories, just out. These stories have a flavor of originality in their treatment and of reality in their substance that won for them publication in the Saturday Evening Post. They embrace a number of types—all good; tales of cleverness, tales of adventure, tales of heart. They are such stories as the traveling man of keen and observant intellect may often run up against, in this country—typical American stories; but stories the literary value of which only the man with an artistic sense would recognize. The book is unique in its way and good work in a number of senses.

Another Auto Novel.

MY FRIEND THE CHAUFFEUR. By C. N. and A. M. Williamson. McClure, Phillips & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

The exceeding success of the two earlier novels of automobile travel and adventure by C. M. and A. M. Williamson has brought about the writing of a third one. The third book is, however, distinctly not so good, from a literary viewpoint, as the two that preceded it. Its authors seem to have said to themselves: "Our other books have been sellers; but let's see whether we cannot outdo ourselves and write something more according to the purely popular taste, while the automobile idea is new in fiction, before the buyers have tired of it." Accordingly we have a story of the sort said to meet the desire of the vast army of bread-winners—a story in which almost everybody has a title, and expense is of no account—a story of American wealth and European titles; a book of snobs, with the proper settings of respectful flunkies, and the rest of it, to add the finishing touches of "atmosphere." Of course, the story is well written, as anything by its authors is likely to be; written with cleverness, that is, readable and fairly amusing to those who can endure its Smart Set flavor. But it is a long way behind the earlier books in literary value.

Also About an Auto.

BABY BULLET. By Lloyd Osbourne. D. Appleton & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

A rival of the Williamsons' stories has arrived—"Baby Bullet" is likewise an automobile novel. It is the story of two young women who, tramping through English scenes and wishing for an automobile, suddenly have one presented to them by its disgusted owner, who disposes of it with the less compunction because he won it in a raffle. The one automobile falls in with another in distress, containing two men; and the acquaintance thus formed brings about a long comradeship, that finally ends in matrimonial bonds. The book is fairly well written and moderately interesting. It bears the stamp, however, of its popular and money-making aim.

TRAVEL.

South America.

A COMMERCIAL TRAVELER IN SOUTH AMERICA. By Frank Wiborg. McClure, Phillips & Co., New York. (Price $1 net.)

One opens this book with the hope and the expectation of finding something new in the line of travel and descriptive work—a change from the stereotyped enumeration of fellow-travelers, stereotyped description of the equipments of the author, even down to his clothes, stereotyped description of trivial adventures and of other trivial matters, stereotyped bits about the scenery, stereotyped observations about men and business. A commercial traveler might, obviously, see things foreign from a somewhat new and original viewpoint, and his book might be one valuable to traders, to legislators, and to business men generally. But this one is not new in manner and but little so in matter. It contains some fair description, mingled with just the usual sort of useless and uninteresting trivialities; and the amount of really valuable information that it offers could be condensed into twenty-five pages, at a rough estimate. Nor does this information go deep. The book is not exactly a poor one; but it is like a thousand others, and these all commonplace. The last ten pages, on the trade of this country with South America, contain some useful observations, yet little that could not be written by one who had simply read a book or two on the country without visiting it; and when this is true, there must surely be something lacking in the author, either as writer or as observer. The trouble probably is that he has attempted to do his work after accepted patterns; and accepted patterns are, for the most part, in this branch of literature, exceedingly poor. It is, of course, true of every kind of work, art or business, that the amount of originality to be found in it is small, the people who depart from conventional methods and make these for themselves, are few; yet so far as literary work is concerned, it does seem as if this particular sort of book ranked very nearly at the head in conventionality. That is doubtless the reason why the few men who have given even those whose literary style was execrable—laughable—us any real information about foreign lands have coined money from their books and correspondence. In this department there is still an exceptional chance for fame and financial profit.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

Pluck and Adventure.

THE YOUNG SECTION HAND. By Burton E. Stevenson. L. C. Page & Co., Boston. (Price $1.50. For sale by C. C. Parker, Los Angeles.)

Among the most prominent types of books for boys, at the present time are two—the stories of adventure, often bordering on the sensational, and the school and play stories about boys clever and a bit tricky; stories patterned, for the most part, in a manner more or less traceable, after "Tom Sawyer." "The Young Section Hand" belongs to the first-named class—the adventure stories. It is a new form of the old type concerning those who work and win, starting with nothing. Allan West, practically a waif, taken on as a mere section hand by a kind-hearted foreman, has a number of chances to show his pluck, finally saving the train from robbers; and is duly advanced and rewarded by the company. The book is to be followed, according to precedent, by a sequel, showing his further adventures and advance. The book is fairly well written and good of its type.

The School Boy.

PINKEY PERKINS, "JUST A BOY." By Capt. Harold Hammond, U.S.A. The Century Company, New York. (Price $1.50.)

"Pinkey Perkins" is of the "Tom Sawyer" type, with all the "Tom Sawyer" elements, down, or up to the girl sweetheart. The objection that some parents and teachers might with considerable reason make to the book is that the very imitable tricks of "Pinkey" might not be desirable in their children or pupils. Objection is often made, on this score to "Tom;" but Tom, for all his mischief, has beneath it a heart that forever keeps his history from proving very injurious, whereas his imitators in the boys' books, while they are generally much more conventional types and less extreme in their rebellion against laws and powers, they are in reality not half so excusable, so mere a matter of boyish thoughtlessness, imagination and daring.

LAW.

Corporations.

CORPORATION LAWS OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA. Third edition. With citations from, up to and including the One Hundred and Forty-fifth California Report. Compiled by C. F. Curry, Secretary of State. W. W. Shannon, Superintendent of State Printing, Sacramento.

It is a distinct compliment to a legal book when it goes into a third edition. This handbook of convenient size and small but very clear print, seems to have met a need and met it satisfactorily. Its text, well indexed and covering about 450 pages, appears to be very full, taking up all manner of forms of corporations under distinct and separate heads and dealing with each fully by citation of laws and sections. Forms of articles of incorporation, etc., are appended to the book.

REPRINTS.

CONINGSBY. By Benjamin Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield. Edited by Bernard N. Langdon-Davies, M.A. Illustrated by Byam Shaw, R.I. L. C. Page & Co., Boston. (For sale by C. C. Parker, Los Angeles.)

Mr. Langdon-Davies, believing that, in regard to Lord Beaconsfield's work, "we are more desirous of studying the ideas of the youth than that youth's ideas corrected some twenty years later by the man," has entered upon the task of reproducing the novels of this famous diplomat and statesman as they originally issued, not as they appeared in later, altered editions. Aside from its story interest, "Coningsby" involves Beaconsfield's conception of the political status of his time and presents, in a measure, a political ideal. The reprint is accompanied with some notes on the characters with chronological notes on the life of Disraeli, and with bibliographical notes. The punctuation of the book is noticeably bad—execrable, in fact. One hopes it was not Lord Beaconsfield's.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.

A California Pioneer.

LEAVES FROM AN ARGONAUT'S NOTEBOOK. By Judge T. E. Jones. The Whitaker & Ray Company, San Francisco.

The author of this book calls it "a collection of holiday and other stories illustrative of the brighter side of mining life in pioneer days."

It is made up of the contributions of earlier days to the Trinity Journal—stories that have their foundation in reality, and are, in some cases, according to the author, chiefly fact, with only a shading of romantic atmosphere added. While not of high literary value, it contains much that will be interesting to older settlers of the State, and it will therefore doubtless find a very considerable sale.

Anthropological Work.

THE DEPARTMENT OF ANTHROPOLOGY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA. The University Press, Berkeley, Cal.

The department of anthropology of the University of California issues an interesting statement regarding the Department of Anthropology and its work. It is a simple statement of the general organization of the department, its aims, officers and the work accomplished to date. Some of this work has been reviewed in these columns, more especially that which has to do with the ethnology and archaeology of California. In the pamphlet will be found, in addition to the account of this work, that also of work in more distant territories—Alaskan, Peruvian, Egyptian and Greek and Roman monographs and collections. The courses of instruction by the university in this department are many and deeply interesting. They show an advance in anthropological research and theory that is most promising—astonishing, indeed, considering the short time in which work of this sort has been systematically done in this country. This department alone would make the University of California worth while, and promise it world-wide distinction, so exceptional, distinctive and prophetic of momentous discovery is it. For the fields of biology and anthropology the Pacific Coast offers exceptional opportunities; and California boys and girls who wish to distinguish themselves by original research have some of the best chances in the world before them through the courses now offered in the universities of the State.

Census Statistics.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF THE CENSUS. Bulletin 20: Statistics of Cities Having a Population of Over 25,000, 1902 and 1903. Bulletin 21: Census Statistics of Teachers. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C.

Two recent bulletins of the Department of Commerce and Labor offer some valuable statistics. A short one of twenty pages, crowded with facts, shows the comparative number of teachers to members of other professions both in this country and in others, the proportion in different parts of the country, proportion of males and females, of older to younger teachers, and of negroes to whites, in different sections. The bulletin is prepared by Prof. Walter F. Wilcox, of Cornell University and is a close and tabulated analysis, with valuable notes. "It forms," says S. N. D. North, director of the department, in his letter of transmittal, "a section of a report, interpreting and analyzing different classes of census statistics, which will shortly be published." The importance of this particular part of the report to teachers is the reason of its separate issuance.

The second of the bulletins is a bulky volume covering, in tabular form, all manner of facts regarding the larger cities of the country—financial facts, moral and humanitarian, facts political, facts of municipal progress. The tables are accompanied by analytical summaries made the compilers, the whole representing a mine of information to the student of anthropology, to those interested in problems of municipal reform, and to the business man.

NEW MAGAZINES.

The editors of the October Atlantic have done a good thing in putting as their leader an article by William Allen White Advocating the Golden Rule as a practical working principle of public and private life. "This article," says the author, "is written to support the thesis: The Christian spirit is in its essence an entirely attainable ideal of kindness and of justice, and only as men live the Christian spirit consistently, in their simple, first-hand relations with one another, will the public morals of the nation improve, and will the political and economic problems which reflect the condition of public morals be nearer a solution." This is a good article for everyone to read.

Scribner's Magazine for the month is distinguished by an account of the summer bear hunt of the President of the United States, written by the hand of Theodore Roosevelt himself. The article is announced as "from the forthcoming book 'Outdoor Pastimes of the American Hunter,'" and is finely illustrated from photographs taken on the expedition.

Outing for October has two somewhat unique articles on the Far East—"The City Beyond the Desert," by James Locke—concerning Bokhara; and "The Trail of the Tiger," on this great wild cat of India. "Racing Through France for Automobile Records," by Arthur Goodrich, will interest large numbers of men and women of the outdoor world. The department on the making of the country home, conducted by Eben E. Rexford, is one of the special up-to-date features of this magazine.

For the literary man or woman the October Century will have a special value because of the article showing new pictures of Shelley, hitherto unknown to the public, and perhaps still more on account of the article by Richard Watson Gilder on the Brownings, entitled "A Romance of the Nineteenth Century." Says Mr. Gilder in a short introduction to the article: "The following paper grew out of an inquiry as to the direct references by the Brownings to each other in their poetry, with a view to a volume which should include such poems as might appropriately be printed with the 'Sonnets from the Portuguese.'"

An article in the current Cosmopolitan on "Creating Fashions in Dress," by Elizabeth Meredith, will particularly interest American women with the announcement that it is they, not French women, who make the fashions and for whom the fashions are made. There is the usual article on Paul Jones, which the reader of none of the magazines of the month can escape; "My Life on the Vesuvian Lid," by R. V. Matteucci, director of the Royal Observatory on the crater of the volcano, and among the rest two notable articles on men—"The Real John Weaver," by William R. Stewart, and "Paul Morton, Human Dynamo" by Edwin Lefevre. The first of the stories by W. W. Jacobs appears in this number.

Everybody's magazine for the month also has an article on Paris clothes—"The Artist Dressmakers of Paris," by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd; and a second article of special interest to women—"Ella Rawls Reader, Financier, the Life Story of a Brilliant Business Woman." by Juliet Wilbor Th "Peasant Cattle," by Ernest gives the Cossack point of view country people of the Caucasu

"President Roosevelt's Prestige West," by Charles M. Harvey, article of exceptional interest Metropolitan Magazine. The first ters of "The Doomsman," a serial Van Tassel Sutphen, begun in number, strikes one as exception silly at a time when silly novels not uncommon. It is "a story America's devastation and the of civilized man to primitive con in 2015 A.D.;" and does not either to common sense or to a tieth-century imagination.

No one should miss Mary E. kins Freeman's story "Old Wom goun," in the October Harper's ly. It is written at Mrs. Free best, with that virile realism in no American author has excelled

Prof. G. H. Darwin's striking augural address at the meeting of British Association for the Adva ment of Science on "Evolution Speculation," was given in two the first at Capetown, and the at Johannesburg. It has attrac much attention in scientific circles first part is given entire in the Li Age for September 23 and the is promised for the number for 14.

Some Famous Telegraph Operators.

TWENTY-TWO MILLIONAIRES NUMBERED AMONG THE "OLD TIMERS" GATHERED IN NEW YORK.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

THERE met recently in New York one thousand former telegraph operators. They have a society which is called "The Old Timers." It is composed exclusively of men who formerly received and delivered messages over the wire.

The list of those who met at the Waldorf-Astoria to banquet and discuss the experiences of other days included many men whose names are famed over two continents.

Some of them have as many million dollars as they sent words per minute and this means something, for the operator gets rid of a good many thousand words in the course of a busy night.

Such men as Andrew Carnegie, Thomas A. Edison, Recorder Goff, of New York; John C. Barclay, general manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company; W. C. Brown, vice-president of the New York Central Railroad; Assistant Postmaster General P. V. De Graw, Robert C. Clowrey, president of the Western Union Telegraph Company; T. C. Eckert, a multimillionaire, and all the Gould boys are included in the list of these masters of the wire, and most of them gained their start in the world while clicking away at the keyboard.

It would seem not a bad idea to append "Go west, young man," with "but to the telegraph station."

The banquet of the "Old Timers" is an annual affair, and is a signal for the gathering from all parts of the country of those who hold Morse as a patron saint.

They still remember the songs they used to sing in the old days, during the time when work was slack, and each has a dozen good stories of [illegible] or of messages sent under difficulties. Many still retain their old-time skill, and can sit down and write a message with the speed of a man still in practice.

Such an operator is Andrew Carnegie, the multi-millionaire and philanthropist. He has always kept a warm spot in his heart for knights of the keyboard, and his benefactions to them and prizes donated for the best speed, show his close touch with all that appertains to his old calling.

Carnegie was a boy not long from Scotland, when he took a job as a telegraph messenger boy in the Pittsburgh office of the Ohio Telegraph Co., in [illegible].

He stayed there until he had learned the art of sending a message and receiving one, and as soon as he had attained the proper degree of proficiency, was rewarded with a position as operator.

Entering the Pennsylvania Railroad he became an operator, and gradually rose until he ranked as superintendent of the Pittsburgh Division.

As most of Carnegie's biggest money making interests were subsequently to be found around this region, it will be seen that his experiences as telegraph operator went far to give him the proper insight into the coal, iron, railroad and other business conditions of Western Pennsylvania.

Many stories are told of Thomas A. Edison as a telegraph operator. He labored under a great disadvantage, as a member of the craft, for he has been deaf, or partially so, since childhood, but the click of the telegraph instrument always seemed to be clear to him.

Edison was a newsboy on the Grand Trunk Railroad. One day a conductor who caught him stealing a ride grabbed the future inventor and raised him by the ears, with the result that his ear drums were broken. This started the wizard of electricity in life under a serious handicap, but one which he never permitted to affect his cheerfulness of disposition.

Edison had his first job as an operator in Buffalo, and the story is told there that when he first went into the office some of the operators, wishing to have fun with him, had him take on the wire from New York. The sender was so fast that the other men in the office were not able to keep pace with him. This was before the days of the typewriter, and messages had to be taken all by hand.

Edison calmly sharpened his pencil, not at all dismayed by the fact that the New York man had already started to send, and was reeling it off at a terrific rate.

Then when he had leisurely made all his preparations while the operators stood around waiting to get in [illegible], Edison started to write at lightning speed in a hand like copper plate, and after he caught up opened the switch, and sent this message to the astonished New York flyer:

"Get a move on, can't you; I'm tired waiting."

Edison made his fame with [illegible] operators at the Buffalo, and during the rest of his [illegible] he was accounted one of the best men in the business.

Many of Edison's inventions had to do with telegraph apparatus. It is said that during his leisure he rigged up devices that greatly simplified the work of an operator, and which were adopted by the big companies. Among these may be briefly mentioned the automatic repeater, quadruplex telegraph, and printing telegraph.

Jay Gould was a great believer in the value of a knowledge of telegraphy as part of the education of a complete man, and he had all his sons, George, Edwin, Howard and Frank, taught telegraphy. Each of this quartette has made a sort of a fad of the art of talking over the wire, and they have frequently, when separated by considerable distances, held long conversations over the wire, doing all the manipulation of the keys themselves. None of the Goulds, however, ever made his livelihood out of telegraphy. The activities of the father made this unnecessary.

John C. Barclay, president of the "Old Timers," says it is not hard to understand why the telegraph operator has frequently developed immense powers of business acumen. The nature of his calling teaches him accuracy, combined with quick thought, and these are traits that go far toward helping to success in this age of lightning methods where only the man with the dashing brain has any chance of success.

Then, too, the operator is constantly handling the sort of material that puts him in close touch with the commercial conditions of the country, and by the time he is ready to quit the keyboard, he has gained a knowledge that could come to him through few other sources.

It does not always follow that the telegraph operator grown wealthy made his success in lines allied to telegraphy. The reverse is found to be true by examining into the experiences of Recorder Goff, who is a lawyer; Levi Weir, president of the Adams Express Company, and W. C. Brown, a railroad man.

During the recent convention in New York, a careful census was made, and it was estimated that in the 1000 odd "Old Timers" present, twenty-two were millionaires, seventy had wealth in excess of $500,000, and more than two hundred went above the $100,000 mark.

The operator is to be congratulated. He seems to have found a new road to wealth.

FEDERAL PRISONERS.

HOW THEY ARE CARED FOR IN THE VARIOUS PENITENTIARIES.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 30.—There is nothing inhuman in the treatment of United States prisoners in the penitentiaries and jails belonging to the government. Punishment is far lighter than most men think it ought to be, and if a prisoner half way behaves himself he is better cared for and more kindly treated than he would be outside the great stone walls.

Despite the fact that the average cost per day to feed a prisoner at Fort Leavenworth is 11 cents and at the Atlanta prison 12 cents, the daily bill of fare is far above that found in many thousands of homes in every state in the country. It equals that of the average workingman's home. The cheapness is due wholly to the fact that the government raises much of its own vegetables and some of its meat and that the work is all done by prisoners.

June 24, 1905, the breakfast at the Atlanta penitentiary, where 538 men were confined for various offenses consisted of bologna sausage, potatoes, bread, butter, coffee. For dinner the bill of fare was soup, beef, potatoes, wheat bread, ice water, and for supper it was bread, butter and coffee. But for the milk and vegetables raised on the farm the cost would have exceeded 12 cents per prisoner on that day. June 22 the bill of fare at each meal was as follows: Breakfast—Oatmeal, milk and sugar, bread, butter, coffee. Dinner—salt pork, potatoes, tomatoes, wheat bread, ice water. Supper—Liver, bread, butter, coffee. All kinds of meats are used during each month and the attempt is made to have the bill of fare vary as much as possible.

The bills of fare at Fort Leavenworth, where nearly 1100 prisoners are confined; at McNeill's Island, where there are about 130, and at the United States jails at Vinita, Armore, South McAlester, Muscogee, Guthrie and Fort Smith were just as good. The four jails in the Indian Territory feed the inmates at about 12 cents per day.

The penitentiary cook at Atlanta, as also at Fort Leavenworth, is a salaried officer, while all those under him are convicts except the prison baker. One of the strictest provisions is that the food shall be carefully prepared, and the cook receives from the steward and storekeeper all provisions for cooking in sufficient time for preparation. He is required to reject any food that is not wholesome, and he is sustained when he does so. He is responsible for the discipline in the kitchen and must see that it is kept in the best sanitary condition.

NO SCARCITY OF FOOD.

No prisoner is prevented from getting as much as he wants. All prisoners are seated in one dining hall. Their positions must be erect, their arms folded and their eyes to the front until the signal is given to commence eating. Strict silence must be observed during the meal. Staring at visitors, talking or laughing or gazing about are forbidden. Eating or drinking before or after the bell sounds, using vinegar in the drinking water or putting meat on the table are prohibited. A man who wants more food makes his wants known to the many waiters by signals—if bread, hold up the right hand; if coffee or water, hold up a cup; if meat, a fork; if soup, a spoon; if vegetables, a knife. If it is necessary to speak to an officer about the food or service the left hand is held up and the officer goes forward and listens to what is said.

Wastefulness in food is prohibited, and a prisoner is required to prevent the waiter placing more food on his plate than he can eat. At the conclusion of the meal pieces of bread must be left on the left side of the plate and knives, forks and spoons on the right side.

RULES FOR PRISONERS.

When a prisoner is admitted to a penitentiary he is handed the printed rules and regulations. He is informed that by observing and obeying them he can make a good record as a prisoner, secure parole and other privileges and the shortening of his sentence. The first requirement is that a prisoner shall obey orders of officers without reply or argument. The next is to be quiet everywhere and at all times. There must not be talking to a fellow prisoner while in line or marching, at meals, in the chapel or at work, except when permission is given by an officer or guard. The same rules apply to free persons. Insolence, profanity, obscenity are not tolerated. If a man has a cell mate he can talk to him, but in low tones. Men in other cells must not be talked to, and whistling, singing or other noises are forbidden. The person, bedding, clothes, cell and library books of a prisoner must be kept clean, and no pictures or writing are allowed upon the walls. Working in undershirts is prohibited. A man found in the wrong cell is punished and no man can have in his cell either money, jewelry, postage stamps or valuables, not even stationery, pencil sharpeners, etc., unless furnished by the officers on writing day. Tools or weapons are forbidden in cells or concealed on the person. This includes a knife, against which the rules are unusually strict.

Prisoners are required not to be insolent or rowdy in walk, manner or gestures, and are forbidden to unnecessarily jostle or brush against another prisoner with the intention of annoying him or provoking him to anger. Making faces or gestures as insults will not be tolerated, and all sorts of tricks are frowned upon. In talking with an officer or guard the prisoner must use the title "Mr." with "Sir" sprinkled in between. This must be at two paces distant and a man must not walk in between two guards or officers who are talking.

A prisoner is not allowed anything from the outside except upon the written permission of the warden, and presents are forbidden to officers, guards and employes of the penitentiary, who are forbidden to purchase anything from a prisoner or for him. A request of an officer or employee to mail a letter is against the rules. A guard is dismissed from the service who permits a prisoner to speak to him on any subject except pertaining to the work or business of the prison.

A prisoner must rise promptly when the bell rings at 6 o'clock each morning, make up his bed, clean his cuspidor and sweep his cell. After washing his face and hands he must pass into the corridor and form into line. At 9 o'clock at night he must go to bed with the signal, placing his shoes at the cell door and his other clothes where they can be seen. Chewing of tobacco while marching is forbidden; also indiscriminate spitting.

The articles permitted in a cell are: A Bible, cup, mirror, cuspidor, towel, piece of hard soap, comb, brush, blankets, sheets, pillow cases, night shirt, mattress, bedstead, campstool, table, water jar with cover, electric light, library shelf, library catalogue, book of rules and such school and library books and family photographs as the grade and conduct of a man will permit.

THE GRADES OF CONVICTS.

Convicts are graded according to their behavior and standing. The best grade men, contrary to the popular notion, do not wear striped clothes. They wear blue suits of nice material and shape. The fellow who ranks in the middle class wears a gray suit, which is the working clothes, while the bad convict wears stripes. It is declared by prison officials of the United States government that there is nothing that helps them make a good man out of a bad one more than this business of ridding him of stripes when he has proven that he wants to do the right thing. It has gotten so now in a United States penitentiary that there is as much distinction among the prisoners as there is in every day life on the streets of a city or elsewhere. The blue costumed man looks down upon the striped convict and will have nothing to do with him and it is the constant desire of every convict with the slightest good within him to get out of the striped or gray class and get into the highest and best class. The constant attempt of prison officials is to better a man morally, mentally and physically and to make a useful citizen of him when he leaves the walls. How much success is attained in this direction was shown when Col. Cecil Clay, the special agent of the Department of Justice, said the other day that the stone masons turned out at Atlanta are gobbled up by the quarry owners at Stone mountain as fast as they leave prison and paid $4 and $5 per day. Many of these men never knew how to handle a piece of stone until they went into the Atlanta prison. There they are put to work upon stones for the prison, wings of which are in constant process of erection. It is the same in other lines of business. Thus opportunity is given to convicts who behave well to become experts in different lines of work.

THE PRIVILEGES OF A CONVICT.

So long as a convict has a good record and obeys the rules he is entitled to one ration of chewing and smoking tobacco each week, sufficient to last him all week; to permission to write once in two weeks; to see friends once in four weeks; to receive newspapers, magazines, books, etc., as may be approved by the warden; to receive family photographs, combs, brushes, powder, soap, tooth brushes and other small articles. One of the first punishments for disobedience of rules is a reprimand. The next is the loss of the tobacco privilege, the third, loss of the letter privilege; fourth, loss of good time; fifth, imprisonment in solitary confinement on restricted diet; sixth, imprisonment in solitary confinement on restricted diet, handcuffed to the door; seventh, reduction in grade; eight, reduction to stripes; ninth, loss of all good time. There is nowhere a provision for whipping a prisoner and no whipping has been given to a United States prisoner for years. The loss of the various privileges is severe enough to bring most of them to time. The loss of good time is the worst blow of all. "Good time" means reduction of a sentence for good behavior. A man sentenced to ten years in a penitentiary is credited with ten days each month for good behavior and in a year he saves one-third of his sentence.

CORTELYOU'S WAR ON THE GRAFTERS.

How Fraud Order in Postoffice Department Blasts the Bunco Steerers. Strenuous Innovations — One-man Power Par-excellence.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—The arch-enemy of the grafter just now is George Bruce Cortelyou, Postmaster-General. How he is exterminating such vermin as get-rich-quick promoters, gamblers, cheap jewelry bunco steerers, patent medicine quacks and fakirs fattening upon the superstitions of the people is meat for a good story. When it comes to one-man power, he wields more by far than any of his cabinet colleagues and more even than any one prosecuting or judicial officer of the government. By one fell stroke of his pen he can utterly blast a man's business career, and from his judgment there is absolutely no appeal; it is not reviewable by the courts.

What worse fate can befall a business man than to be forbidden the privilege of receiving letters and to know, besides, that all such communications addressed to him are returned to the sender with the awful brand, "fraudulent," stamped across his name in damning scarlet letters? Such is the penalty of the "fraud order" given only to the Postmaster-General to inflict. The first fraud order was issued in 1879, against the promoter of the famous New Orleans lottery. During the few months that Mr. Cortelyou has been in office he has issued more of these judgments than were signed in the first seven years of the fraud order law's existence. He has run out of business more than double the number of grafters who fell a prey to the most energetic of his predecessors during the same months of any year. Promoters of fraudulent enterprises have been excluded from the mails at the rate of more than one per day since the former Secretary to President McKinley took the reins of the largest of our Executive Departments.

AN INNOVATION.

An anti-graft innnovation was put into effect almost as soon as he took up his new duties. Former Postmaster-Generals had been content to simply wait upon the complaints of outraged citizens who had been buncoed. Not until then was the ball set rolling for an investigation. Mr. Cortelyou, however, had more strenuous notions. That busy corps of detectives known as Postoffice Inspectors, had been lately transferred to the immediate office of the Postmaster-General. He ordered these sleuths to search a certain class of journals for suspicious advertisements. Ostensibly, as private citizens, the inspectors now answer these seductive offers and Uncle Sam returns the amounts to which they allow themselves to be buncoed for the sake of gleaning evidence. The bunco shop is then visited, and if affairs there are down to the inspector's suspicions, action is immediately taken.

The man who does the actual work of judging the culprits is R. P. Goodwin, the Assistant Attorney-General for the Postoffice Department. The bunco man is summoned to appear before him in Washington and to make such answer or defense to the charges preferred or such explanation concerning them as he may desire. After a full hearing a brief of the evidence submitted and of the conclusions reached by Mr. Goodwin is handed to Mr. Cortelyou, who either issues the fraud order or dismisses the charges. In most cases the accused person appears with a lawyer, who vigorously defends him. Some of these hearings have consumed a fortnight. If the accused fail to appear action is taken whether or no. The Postmaster-General seldom, if ever, ignores the superior legal opinion of the Assistant Attorney-General, and it is safe to say that a fraud order recommended by the latter will be issued. Although, as stated, there is no appeal from the Postmaster-General in the matter, he may revoke a fraud order when the Assistant Attorney-General so recommends. A large proportion of the 2300 fraud orders issued since 1879 still stand on the record as unrevoked. One Assistant Attorney-General of a past administration was noted for his activity in revoking orders, and it was no uncommon occurrence for him to have one revoked two days after it was promulgated. At present, however, it is more difficult than ever before to have such a verdict reversed. The first fraud order—that against the New Orleans lottery—was, by the way, suspended for a time, but now stands on the record as unrevoked.

DEATH TO LOTTERIES.

The enterprises which may thus be blasted are lotteries or similar enterprises where prizes are distributed on a chance basis or any scheme to defraud. The order when put in effect directs postmasters not only to return, as stated, all first-class matter addressed to the subject of the action, but to withhold the payment of money orders and the return of the money to the remitters. In cases where the senders are unknown the letters are sent to the dead letter office and the money contained, if not finally traced, is dropped into the treasury of the United States.

The detectives who scent out all of these bunco enterprises are under the direction of William J. Vickery, chief inspector of the Postoffice Department, a hoosier veteran of the lynx-eyed corps who before his recent promotion to the top of the ladder had charge of the Cincinnati division of postoffice inspectors. He is the chief "watch dog" of Uncle Sam's mail and to his lot falls more particularly the responsibility of hunting down those who rob the mails, of instructing new postmasters, of tracing lost mail and the location or naming of new postoffices.

Another official concerned in the hunting down of the grafter is Dr. Harvey W. Wylie, chief of the government's bureau of chemistry. Any patent medicine or other article suspected by the industrious inspectors is sent over to Dr. Wylie's laboratory for analysis. Many of the cure-alls thus submitted are found to contain ingredients which have never been known to medicine as a panacea for the human ills in question. Remedies which of late have especially fallen under the ban of suspicion are of that category recommended through very seductive advertisements as having the properties of Ponce de Leon's long-sought fountain. Some of these have been found to be tablets of pure corn starch. Plain salt and water have been found to constitute the sole ingredients of some nostrums. Others are of cheap elements equally impotent in the diseases for which recommended.

Expert medical testimony is often called for after Dr. Wylie's analysis is completed in a case. This was done in a case ending in the issue this week of a fraud order against a medicine, "Nature's Health Restorer," advertised as a cure for diseases which run the gamut from falling hair to broken back. The documents in the case contained not only the statement of Dr. Wylie, but of three Washington physicians called as experts.

INVESTMENT SCHEMES.

The get-rich-quick "investment" schemes are now receiving the special attention of the inspectors. Swindling concerns alleging to place investments of their "clients" money at enormous rates of interest fairly swarm in the country. Although capitalists are glad to loan their money on real estate security at from 4 to 5 per cent. and to the government at 2 per cent., thousands of poor people throughout the country are easily being gulled into turning over their funds to concerns promising 50 per cent., or even more. A concern calling itself the "Neptune Company" recently advertised from Philadelphia that for $2 the investor would be shown how to realize profits of 800 per cent. on a capital of $5, or make an income of $250 per month and work only two or three hours a month. The details, eagerly purchased by gullible persons anxious to get rich quickly, were these:

"Get 500 families in your city who will pay $1 per month for medical services. Get them to pay you the money on a guarantee that you will furnish them a physician whenever they require one. Then make a deal with a physician whereby he will look after the 500 families for $250 per month. Your net profits will be $250 per month. Get 1000 families and you will make $500 per month."

Another 800 per cent. investment was lately offered by a man in North Pembroke, N. Y., who advertised that any one sending him a quarter would receive in exchange a $2 bill and that $25 would be sent to any one who could "detect it." Persons sending a quarter received each eight receipts for 25 cents, which the advertiser said constituted a "two-dollar bill" against him. Henceforth, he can receive no mail, he moves to a strange place and does business under an alias, which would be according to the common practice of the debarred bunco man. For example, one Fred Swartz, charged with conducting fraudulent schemes in New York and Philadelphia, under various aliases, lately changed his name to "Prof. Alex Aires," and from Atlantic City solicited subscriptions of 50 cents each for the "Fortune Magazine," which he alleged to publish and whose columns were said to be devoted entirely to phrenology, astrology, palmistry and the occult sciences. A seductive feature of the advertisement was a statement that subscribers would be permited to participate in a contest for a prize of $100. Mr. Vickery's inspectors found that no such magazine existed.

PLAY THE PONIES.

The most common of the get-rich-quick schemes now being blasted by fraud orders are those which advertise extensively to invest money for clients by betting on horse races. Large profits are always guaranteed. One of these concerns, lately denied the use of the mails, had the audacity to advertise that "all element of chance is eliminated" from its system of investments. Then there are the lotteries, against which Uncle Sam has waged untiring war for decades. Of late, German, Mexican and West Indian lotteries have been reaching out into the United States for customers. Agents of the German enterprise have been particularly persistent.

"Guessing contests," such as have been features of various journals for several years, have lately been put under the ban by Atty.-Gen. Moody, who rules that such schemes are, in effect, lotteries under another guise. Hitherto the Postoffice Department had held that when patrons of such enterprises could use a "dope book," or records, or scientific information of some sort, in making their calculations their guesses were an application of calculation, foresight and knowledge eliminating, to an extent at least, the factor of chance. Mr. Moody's recent reversal of this opinion was based upon an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States.

But, returning to the "bunco games," here we have a peculiar sort, which of late has been sprouting up all over the land with surprising rapidity. This is the "letter-writing-at-home" fraud. The credulous reader is captured by the advertisement which promises anybody $100 a week without hard word if he will but apply for information. Almost as soon as he replies to the advertisement the would-be amanuensis receives instructions that before beginning his profitable work he is expected to buy the inevitable "outfit," just as a guarantee of good faith. The outfit being bought at an excessive price, the applicant hears no more from his promised employers, who are, in fact, merely dealers in "outfits." Almost as common is the cheap jewelry "graft." Under the guise of valuable prizes distributed gratis, brass rings and other trinkets are really being sold at enormous profits, realized in postage stamps sent in by applicants.

MEANEST OF THEM ALL.

But the meanest grafter of all of these for which the postoffice inspectors are gunning is he who gets his salt from the tears of bereaved persons. One of these concerns had agents out over the country collecting from the funeral notices in the various papers names and residences of persons lately deceased. Immediately a letter would be addressed to the corpse. It would state that the Bible which he had lately ordered, and on which he had desired his name embossed in gilt letters, was finished, and would be forwarded upon receipt of a stated rate, always excessive. The family of the dead one would at once suppose that "poor dear John" had longed for the holy book in his last hours, and so they would prize the volume as a souvenir of the lost one, and it must be sold at any cost. The grafter engineering this enterprise had a raft of cheap Bibles, which he sold at a profit of several hundred per cent.

"Throw away your razors, gentlemen! Throw them away!" began the seductive advertisement of another victim of the fraud order. "Try my patent substitute once, only once, gentlemen, and you will never use a razor again! Easy, quick, safe and sure. Never wears out, and always retains its power. Write to me!" Mail was delivered by the hundredweight to this "inventor." One of the inspectors secured one of these razor substitutes. It was a little oblong cake of some substance, resembling pumice stone, and the accompanying circular directed that it be rubbed firmly back and forward over the beard after it had been lathered. Another inventor advertised that he would for 10 cents mail to any youth in the land positively sure instructions as to how to grow a luxuriant moustache. This promoter, too, received mail by the bagful. Each dime invested brought in return only a printed slip: "Lather like the d——l and shave like h——l."

MRS. WILMANS BLACKLISTED.

An alleged "faith healer" of Sea Breeze, Fla., who advertised under the name of "Mrs. Helen Wilmans," claimed power to heal any disease or affliction, including poverty, by a method of concentrating her mind upon the patient taking the treatment. For such services she solicited remittances of $3 per week, or $10 per month. Inspectors detailed upon the case discovered that although the "faith curist" herself opened the voluminous mail addressed to her, and took out the money which came pouring in thereby, she, without a careful reading of the communications, handed them over to a corps of clerks, who answered them according to stereotyped forms placed before them. The assistant attorney-general decided that the curist, however energetic and capable of effort she might be, could not find it possible to send specific and individual thought waves to all of her patients. To this charge she replied that she could think for a thousand sufferers at a time quite as easily as of one. Despite her claim of a mental multiple circuit system, the Postmaster-General blacklisted her.

That she would read from the starry heavens all of the future that any one might hanker for, and that she guaranteed this for 10 cents per reading, Mme. Carlotta Barse Fredericks, a mystical descendant of a long line of seventh sons lately advertised from Gardiner, Me. The gullible person who would mail the 10 cents immediately learned that the web of fate had never been so greatly tangled for any other person since the world began. Ten cents worth of research had developed this interesting fact that the person in question was so far out of the ordinary. For an additional $2, to indemnify her for her loss of sleep, the seeress promised to wrest from the stellar blue the last detail of these amazing complications, and to dispatch the translated information post-haste to the anxious inquirer. If the bewildered patron hesitated too long in sending the $2 the seeress forwarded to her a second stereotyped letter announcing a benevolent cut in the price to $1, because of her unusual interest taken in his particular case. As an added inducement "the magical, magnetic Hebrew charm" would compel love, force fortune or drive yowling cats from the back fence. Some of Chief Vickery's plain-clothes men detailed on the sorceress's case reported that she did not read individual horoscopes, but that she had a dozen stock horoscopes already drawn, one for each month of the year; also that each patron was made to believe that he was the most favored and presented a case of tremendous individual interest. Hence the fraud order which prevents Mme. Fredericks from doing business until she changes her location and becomes Mme. Somebody Else.

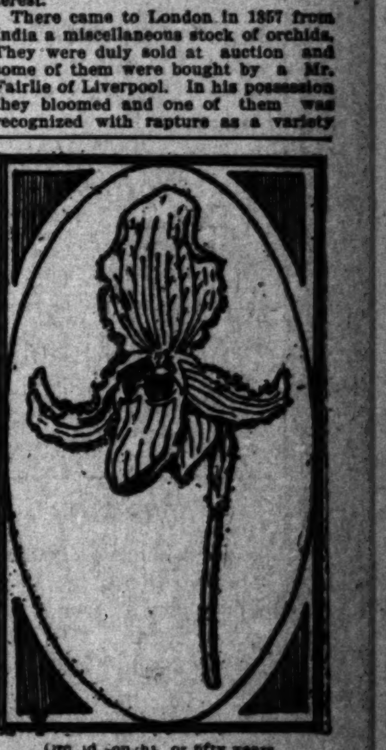
RARE ORCHID FOUND.

CYPRIPEDIUM FAIRIEANUM HAS AGAIN BEEN REDISCOVERED.

[STAFF CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Great excitement has been caused among orchid collectors by the information which has just come to light that a rare specimen whose habitat for neraly fifty years has been sought in vain, has been rediscovered. The ecstatic joy with which the tidings have been received can be appreciated only by those who are devoted to this most fascinating of all forms of horticulture, but the story itself illustrating the romance that underlies the pursuit of these floral gems, is of general interest.

There came to London in 1857 from India a miscellaneous stock of orchids. They were duly sold at auction and some of them were bought by a Mr. Fairlie of Liverpool. In his possession they bloomed and one of them was recognized with rapture as a variety previously unknown and of singular beauty. It was named after its owner Cypripedium Fairieanum. The Indian collection contained several other specimens of the same plant and keen was the competition that ensued for their possession. But most of the purchasers simply wasted their money. The plants did not flourish. The original stock dwindled and died. For many years there has been only one specimen in existence among orchid collections, and a diminutive one at that. But its possession has been sufficient to confer additional distinction on its distinguished owner. Sir Trevor Lawrence, the president of the Royal Horticultural Society. The aim of every orchid enthusiast is to get hold of an orchid that nobody else has. Sir Trevor has several times been offered big sums for his puny Fairieanum, but nothing could induce him to part with it.



Orchid sought for fifty years.

Meanwhile India has been ransacked in vain by orchid hunters for other specimens of the plant. Scores of expeditions have gone in search of it. Not a few lives have been lost in the perilous quest. But the Fairieanum eluded everybody. The money that has been expended in abortive efforts to find it would represent a snug fortune.

The Tibet expedition, which sought to open up the Forbidden Land to the Trade of India brought back specimens of pretty nearly everything that could be obtained in that grim region. One member of the mission who was a botanist discovered a lot of orchids which were sent to Calcutta. From thence two of them were dispatched to Kew Gardens. One of them has just flowered and experts have pronounced it the long sought and rediscovered Fairieanum.

The Tibet find included over two hundred specimens of the plant. The bulk of them are now on their way to London where they will be sold at auction in a few weeks. They will undoubtedly fetch good prices, but single specimens will not sell for anything like the prices that would have been paid for them had there been, say only a half dozen of them. It is rarity more than beauty that determines the value of orchids. Still, it is not likely that another consignment will be obtained from the native haunts of the plant for many years, unless it should be found necessary to send another expedition to Tibet to scare the Russian bogey. Great as are the prizes of orchid hunting, they will hardly suffice to tempt private individuals to incur the frightful risks and hardships they would meet in Tibet.

It is not known that original Fairieanums that startled the orchid world fifty years ago must have come from Tibet, though by what means they were obtained there is no record. It was the natural assumption that they had come from the warm regions of India that led to the failure of the efforts made to cultivate them. The heat to which they were subjected killed them. It is probable that orchid growers will now be able to cultivate them with success. Anyhow Sir Trevor Lawrence will be deprived of his long cherished distinction for some time to come at least.

The plant now in flower at Kew Gardens has five growths and two flowers. The flower has a slender, hairy scape about ten inches in height, a prominent and charming dorsal sepal, one and three-quarters inches in breadth, with a white ground beautifully veined with violet purple, and with brownish green veins near the center and whitish hairs round the margin.

The petals droop and have an upward curve at the tips; they are one and a half inches in length, with a white ground streaked with purple and yellow. The upper margin of the petals is much undulated and covered with prominent purple hairs, the pouch is rather small, greenish brown in color, veined wth brownish red and covered with short hairs.

In the region that lies below Alamitos and Bolsa bays, the greatest activity of the duck club organizers has taken place this year. Within the last three seasons the total of preserves has swelled from two or three to a dozen or more, the completing of the Huntington line to Newport with its ease of communication being mainly responsible for this sudden recognition of a splendid shooting country.

Half a dozen local and Orange county sportsmen have purchased and equipped sixty acres of promising duck marsh lying in a swale between the Westminster and Blue Wing Clubs, which protect them on both sides. What shooting they get will be problematical, but as they lie in the line of flight, they feel that the prospect is good. E. A. Curtis, H. S. Hazeltine and W. D. Longyear are among the membership.

The Chica Land and Water Company, which did considerable duck shooting last year, has increased its membership to eighteen, taking in John Hauerwaas and August Marquis, having a half dozen on the waiting list. Maier brothers are members of this club and had good sport on it last winter, although it was the first season of the marsh.

The Pacific and Newport clubs, which lie below Huntington Beach, have put in extensive improvements during the summer. The Pacific, of which Ed Tufts, Fred M. Lyon, W. H. Holmes and John H. Schumacher are leading lights, has made two big ponds and looks for a year of good sport.

The sinking of several wells and the erection of a commodious new house to cost $2500, are the principal improvements on the Newport marsh. The four members will have a room apiece, and expect to enjoy a very comfortable little clubhouse by the first of next month.

Southeast of Newport, not far from the bay of that name and adjoining the San Joaquin club, a new preserve is being talked of. Local and Santa Ana men are to furnish the capital to purchase the land, and some shooting is expected this winter.

Everything considered, the outlook for big bags of ducks and a greater showing of shooters than ever before is most promising. Many men who never before looked at a shotgun have taken the duck fever virulently and the sporting goods houses are declaring dividends on the profits of the stuff greenhorns buy for which a veteran duck hunter has no need.

FISH FACTS AND FANCIES.

BY HAPPY ISAAK.

Enterprising fish canneries along the South Coast have discovered a use for the tuna and albicore.

Generally regarded by fishermen as worthless, these big mackerel are to be had in great number by any who care to fish for them, and at San Pedro the trollers, who until recently considered their albicore of value only as lobster bait, have been disposing of them at 2½ cents a pound to the canners, who dissect the bellies away as salmon are treated, and then tin them. The product is said to be very good eating, and an appetizing breakfast dish. "Blue tuna" is the name printed on the cans, and it is not as much a misnomer as might be thought, as tuna quite frequently are taken on the trollers' jigs, though when over fifty pounds weight they are likely to smash any gear they strike.

The mackerel canned upon this Coast are not mackerel at all, but big sardines. Why they are not so sold is a mystery, for surely the big California sardine is the best fish of the two.

Robert B. Roosevelt, the President's uncle, recently bought a motor car for his own use. He is 80 years old. He is using the car at his country home, Lotus Lake, near Sayville, Long Island.

"Poor Lo" is getting a move on. Represented by a full-blooded Shinnecock Indian, he is traveling about Long Island on a motorcycle.

EARL DE GREY BEST OF SHOTS.

ENGLISH SPORTSMAN AT FIFTY-THREE IS STILL KEEN.

Marvelous Proficiency With the Shotgun Which Would Stamp One as a Game Hog Has Earned British Nobleman Encomiums Across the Atlantic—Day's Shoot.

[STAFF CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Though 53 years old, Earl de Grey, upon whose estate at Dalgowil the Prince of Wales has recently been shooting, still ranks as the finest game shot in England. Indeed, it is the general opinion here that he is the best in the world. Anyhow, he has killed more game than any other living sportsman on record. Ten years ago it had amounted to 316,699 head. Comprised in this list were 111,900 pheasants, 89,400 partridges, 45,500 grouse, 26,500 hares and about as many rabbits. In one year alone his "bag" amounted to over 19,000 head. In Yorkshire he once shot 500 grouse in a single day and on another occasion brought down 750 pheasants. In Wales, between sunrise and sunset, he once disposed of 950 rabbits.

In America many people would regard feats of this kind as sheer slaughter rather than sport, but English folk do not so consider them, and Earl de Grey is English in everything. His wonderful knack of bringing down birds completely dazes strangers who go away and explain to their friends their firm belief that he "simply can't miss." But to do him justice all his sport has not been of that tame variety where the only risk run is that of being shot by some novice. He has done a lot of big game shooting. In India, where his father, the Marquis of Ripon, who still lives, was Viceroy for four years, many big tigers have fallen before his rifle.

EARL DE GREY.

He is always in good form and does not know from personal experience what it is to be nervous. He is slightly under the average height but his figure is broad and well knit. He never puts on "side" as the English call it. When at Studley Royal—one of the most lovely country seats in England—the grounds of which enclose the famous ruins of Fountains Abbey—he may frequently be met walking or driving in a cap and knockabout suit, and he has on more than one occasion been taken by visitors to be an individual of much less rank than that to which he rightly lays claim. He bears an historic English name and has a lot of blue-blooded ancestry at the back of him but there is nothing aristocratic in his appearance.

Herbert Spencer would have said that the marvelous proficiency he displays with powder and shot argues a misspent life. He has never gone in for anything seriously but sport, though before he was thirty he sat for six years in the House of Commons as the representative of Ripon. On account of his family connections it was easy getting elected for that borough. For many years his father was regarded as one of the foremost of Liberal statesmen, but it is probable that his son's fame as a crack shot will last the longer. He is a favorite at the Court and the post of treasurer to the Queen's household has been conferred on him.

Lady de Grey is as distinguished in society as her husband is in the realm of sport. She has sometimes been called the uncrowned queen of Covent Garden Opera. During the season her stately form appears night after night and year after year in the same box on the ground tier. When she first came out as Lady Gladys Herbert, and for years afterward, she was acounted one of the most beautiful women in society. She still retains a large measure of her youthful good looks. Earl de Grey is her second husband. Her first was the late Lord Lonsdale, from whom she had been separated before his death. She has never submitted to being held down by social conventions and once ran a fashionable tea shop in Bond street, because, as she frankly acknowledged, she wanted to make money. And she made it.

GAME NOTES AND COMMENT.

Sportsmen and other game protectionists are looking forward with considerable interest to the meeting of the California Game and Fish Protective Association to be held in Redding about the middle of next month.

Every year the gathering of the game lovers in Central or Northern California attracts men from all over the State, the social features of the function being of considerable importance, while there is generally more or less of business relative to legislation to be attended to.

The State association aims to unify the sportsmen's interests from San Diego to Siskiyou, and has done some good work in the past, putting the needs of the game and fish before the Legislature in a manner that was generally productive of the desired results.

The social features of the annual gatherings comprise a big dove or quail dinner, hunting parties, and big meetings wherein papers are read and talks on game protection in various counties delivered.

The Los Angeles County Game and Fish Protective Association will probably hold a meeting within a few weeks to determine which of those who go north will carry its proxies. Last year a number of local sportsmen went to Paso Robles, but this season there will probably be a very small representation, as the game law is settled for another year, and there is consequently no imminent need of working to offset the market interests.

Wiley-Keniston party and a day's catch on San Joaquin River.

FISH STORY PROVED.

PARTY BRINGS THE PICTURES.

Frank Keniston, Frank Drake, Joe Wiley and Dr. Curran, a local dentist, formed a party of trout fishermen that recently made a trip to Yosemite Valley and the San Joaquin River and not only brought back some trout to prove it but a number of pictures of themselves taken on the ground. They have been back over a week and are still looking for people who will listen to their fish stories.

They left here September 3, for Yosemite Valley, going by way of Fresno, Paloska, Crane Valley, Chiquito Creek, Red's Meadows and Johnson's Lake. At the last named stopping place they were arrested by a detachment of government soldiers for having guns in Yosemite Park but were released after being taken to Wawona. They report that the scenery is all that the most blasé could wish for and the hunting and fishing most satisfactory. They caught all the fish they could eat; killed one black bear and shot a big lot of ammunition away at deer but did not get any. They saw dozens of beautiful mountain lakes and waterfalls, considerable snow from a distance of five miles, and came back through the Mariposa big trees, and declare they will make the same trip next season. The party was in charge of Bob Langworthy, the well-known guide of Madera county.

Two Heats Wanted.

The drivers at the Grand Circuit harness meetings have signed a petition asking that the three-in-five system of deciding races be done away with and the two-in-three substituted. They declare that the extra heat is unnecessary, in that it lengthens the day's sport, and naturally necessitates the breeding of horses that have more stamina than speed. Harness racing is not as exciting as running races are, and when trotting or pacing races are dragged out for six and seven heats the public becomes disgusted and the sport suffers therefrom.

Jockey J. Ransch of Bakersfield is still winning for the Vanderbilt stable in the Paris races, and is apparently making all kinds of money over there. That seems to be one place of the very few where the jockeys really ride to win all the time.

SPOTFIN IS A HOT FAVORITE.

Catching Croakers is Keen Sport, Say Fishers.

Big Fellows Charm by Their Rare Uncertainty.

Clam Casters as Gamblers. Mid-Week Sport.

With the approach of fall, fishermen's thoughts naturally turn to consideration of the croaker and his charming eccentricities—the playful little ways that to many make these big, spot-finned fellows the kings of all Southern California's game fish.

Lovers of the yellowtail may swell the returns of his gameness; dilate on the bulldog rushes of the amber beauties if they will, but the croaker fisherman answers that such fun only begins after the big fish is hooked, while in the pursuit of croakers it starts with the first tentative nip; the preliminary examination which every "spotfin" makes before really sampling the bait in earnest.

Anglers for corbina are prone to plead their stomachs as partial excuse for the preference, but the croaker crank turns the argument by bespeaking for his favorite, undeniable gastronomic virtues when prepared with discretion.

To the man who loves fishing not only as a science, but also as a keen gamble, the croaker appeals with a force that no other member of the finny tribe in these waters quite equals. The love of gambling is inherent in every man, and croaker fishing gratifies it to the full. No angler, however observing, can predict with much certainty a "run" except by the assumption that "they were there yesterday; the tide's right, so why not today as well?" Yet this reasoning, simple as it is, misses as often as it fits.

The modus operandi of croaker fishing is delightfully simple, and luck plays a big part in it. The fine tackle artist as usual is at some advantage but after seeing seven six to ten pounders landed hand-running on a chalk line that might moor a launch, with hooks like anchors, one may be excused for turning skeptical at times. The best laid plans go wrong, as Burns has it.

Generally speaking, nicely proportioned gut tackle with hooks not too large and succulent gobs of soft clam bait will appeal to the finer instincts of the festive spotfin, whose predilection for the sinker hook is proverbial.

If there is a prescription in croaker fishing, it is "let 'em alone until they hook themselves." The temptation to yank is all but irresistible; a succession of gentle, tentative nips precedes a lusty jerk or two, and then generally Mr. Croaker has contracted entangling alliances. Any attempt to hurry these deliberate piscatorial proceedings is fraught with keen danger of losing the fish, and scaring him away altogether.

Last Monday a phenomenal run of croakers took place in San Pedro Bay and some nice fish have been taken since by mebbers of the mid-week squad. The spotfins divide with the surf the honors of being about the only refuge of the bait caster at the present writing.

At Huntington Beach and Newport the best catches of corbina have been made. These remote points will be liberally patronized today.

BOWDEN'S RECORD.

STILL HOLDS HONORS.

Millionaire H. L. Bowden of Boston still holds the world's mile straightaway record of 0:32 4-5, made over the Ormond-Daytona beach course in Florida last January.

Bowden drove then a specially combined 120-horse-power Mercedes, made by combining two sixty-horse-power engines and coupling them onto the same shaft. Bowden possesses considerable mechanical genius and schemed out many important details of his racing car.

Its powerful engine is so arranged that it can be detached from the car and installed in a racing boat to cater to another of Mr. Bowden's fancies.

Bowden is one of those Americans who wants to go just a little faster than any train, boat or motor car will take him, and many of his friends have predicted that soce day his speed mania will prove his undoing.

The first two games of the world's series will be played in New York and the next two in Philadelphia, provided, however, that the Giants and Athletics are the pennant winners. It is generally believed that the other seven clubs in the National League would be glad to see the Giants get the short end of the series with the Athletics in the post-season games. President Herrmann is going to present handsome gold buttons to the winners of the world's series. Consequently the Giants and Athletics are habing buttonholes cut in the lapels of their fall suits.

SPEND COIN LIKE WATER.

College Football Costliest of Amateur Sports.

Fortunes Laid Out Annually for Winning Teams.

Game at Yale Costs Salary of a President.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

Fortunes for football. The outlay has begun, and the next two months will see money lavished on the greatest of college games in a manner to stagger those who have not examined into the figures, and do not know what the sport annually costs.

Many who have seen immense crowds of 30,000 and more pouring into great fields to see the contests between Yale and Princeton, or Harvard; Pennsylvania and Harvard; Annapolis and West Point, Michigan and Chicago and a half dozen other big college teams, have probably often wondered what became of the immense financial returns, for, as a rule, a price as high is charged for football seats as it costs to go to the best of the theaters.

The impression being general that players volunteer their services, it would seem a reasonable theory that after all legitimate expenses are paid there should still be an enormous profit.

Nothing could be further from the truth.

Football does yield a profit at all the big colleges, but nothing like what would be imagined. It is true that the receipts are stupendous, but to wipe them out are huge expenses.

This article deals only with the proper outlay of money, the kind of expenditure that can be put on the books. That there are other great sums expended is an undeniable fact, but they are spent for such purposes as hiring players and paying the bills of those students who regard their football ability as an asset, and are willing to play only at the college where they can get financial aid.

The advertisement that results from a winning team makes otherwise honest professors ignore practices that would discredit professional gamblers. In hire for football men, every big college spends large sums of money, but that is a closed chapter. The admitted disbursements contain enough that is astonishing.

WHAT YALE PAYS.

The Yale books show that football at New Haven last year cost almost $37,000.

This sum of money represents merely the operating expenses, and does not take into account the outlay for building up the athletic plant or the salaries of coaches.

It is a virtual certainty that the Elis were not able to maintain their high-priced staff of football experts, and keep them from other lines of employment, for less than $10,000, and when to this sum is added another $10,000 as an average of what the playing field is worth, and what the improvements and erection of stands, etc., cost, it is safe to say that at Yale alone football cost as much money as the President of the United States receives for his yearly salary.

And Yale is only one of a dozen big colleges where money is poured out like water.

No team can have a winner without this outlay.

The three big winners of last year were Yale, Pennsylvania and Michigan. The championship of the East rested between the first two, the third was admitted premier of any eleven in the West.

The coaching systems of Yale and Pennsylvania have many points of similarity. In fact, the latter is based on that of the former. The method at Yale is to make the captain of the last eleven head coach, and to give him the assistance of men who have been stars of other years in each of the positions. These former great players are dragged away from their callings regardless of what it costs.

Penn has always spent big money for its coaching ever since the Red and Blue became a factor. George Woodruff, once a Yale player, whose "guards-back" invention really put Penn into the big four, was one of the first really high-salaried coaches. His $4000 a season, for a matter of about three months' work, looked very big, though it has since been surpassed in a number of instances.

WILLIAMS'S BIG SALARY.

Last year Head Coach Williams is reported to have received $5000 for the same work, and had the help of nine men, all of whom received pay ranging from $500 to $1000. Penn's coaching certainly could not have cost less than $10,000.

This year, in addition to having the same high-priced coaching system, with Byron Dickson in charge, Penn will have the services of the highest-priced trainer in the business, Mike Murphy, formerly of Yale, who is admittedly the greatest developer of athletic talent this country has ever seen.

Murphy is to look after the baseball and track and field men, as well as the gridiron stars. For this he will get $5000 a year, and for signing the contract that took him from Yale to Penn, he was made a present of a house.

Yost of Michigan certainly does not make less than $5000 yearly out of football.

Harvard has been equally lavish in the matter of outlay, and this year, in the hope of having its football fortunes retrieved, will pay the biggest salary ever given to a coach, $7000.

This will go to "Bill" Reid, captain of the last crimson team that beat Yale. It is pay at the rate of $28,000 a year, more than any professor in the college or even its president gets.

Harvard and Penn have alike been under extraordinary expenses during the last two years, for the establishment of their new athletic fields. The stadium at Cambridge and the new structures at Franklin Field Philadelphia, are concededly the finest things of their kind in existence, and each cost in the neighborhood of half a million dollars.

HARVARD GENEROUS.

Harvard did not scruple last year, despite the weight of debt under which its athletic association labors, to vote its head coach the use of an automobile, and throughout all the big colleges there are similar prodigal disbursements.

It is interesting to examine into the things for which all this money is expended. The list furnished by Yale is fairly typical.

This shows that railroad fare for the season cost $3230; hotels and meals, $5360; merchandise and sporting goods, $3735; shoes and repairs, $1065; training table, $1831; printing and stationery, $635; stenography, typewriting and clerical services, $1925; cartages, $790; coach's expenses, $940; freight, express and cartage, $45; press clippings, $25; rubbers, $575; doctors and medicine, $450; referees, timekeepers, etc., $485; labor and material at field, $3880; trophies, $120, and legal advice, $365.

It is more than likely that the current season will see a big increase in the above amounts. Princeton and Harvard are especially likely to plunge in for big sums. These colleges are anxious to make up for the apparently inevitable annual defeats at the hands and feet of Yale, and are prepared to put out money like water in order to get the right kind of material to make success possible.

The sums mentioned above are those spent by the bigger colleges. In proportion the smaller ones are equally lavish. It took an offer of $4000 a year to take Coach Glenn Warner from Carlisle to Ithaca, and Coaches Newton and Bull, who look after the football fortunes of Lafayette and Lehigh, each get in the neighborhood of $3000. Chicago is very liberal to Coach Stagg.

When he was writing his now famous series, Mr. Lawson might well have given a chapter to "Frenzied Football."

WINTER POLO UP THE COAST.

SANTA BARBARA TO HAVE BIG TOURNEY IN JANUARY.

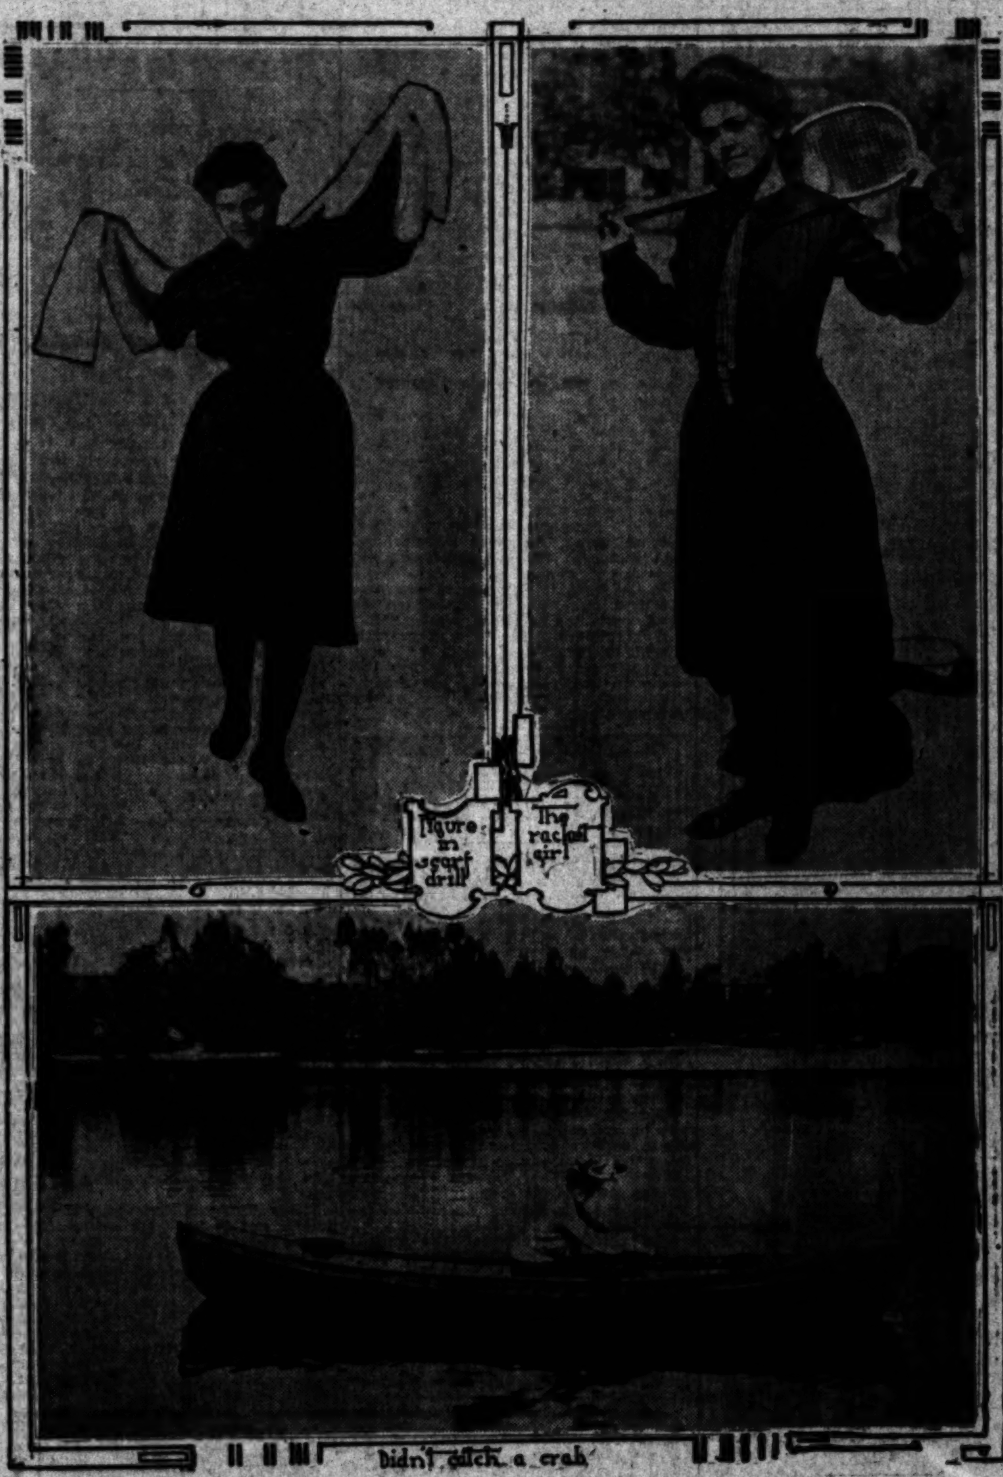
Frank J. Mackay's English Team and a Number of Easterners to Make That City Their Headquarters—Tournament Will Precede the Sports Scheduled at Coronado.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SANTA BARBARA, Oct. 7.—The Santa Barbara County Polo Club will hold a winter tournament in this city during the month of January.

The success of the summer polo games and the large number of eastern and English polo players who have signified their intention of coming to the Coast this winter, has put Santa Barbara in the field for a week of winter polo, which will be played just before the Coronado Beach tournament.

Polo is always popular here during the winter, but large tournaments are rare during that season. Burlingame has for a number of years been the polo center of California during the winter and early spring, and eastern players who make annual pilgrimages to California for the pleasure of the winter sport have always made their headquarters in the northern part of the State.



Athletic activity at Y. W. C. A.

During the last two years, however, some of the biggest events in Burlingame and San Mateo have been discouraged by reason of heavy rains. Last year F. J. Mackay, who has been instrumental in bringing to California a number of English players, and who will have a team in the field this year, expressed a wish to play in Santa Barbara for a month. He said that if a tournament could be arranged, he would bring his team here and would see that other players made this city their headquarters. He will have the opportunity to make his statement good.

It is said by the local polo leaders that six teams will take part in the match. They will come from Los Angeles, Riverside, Burlingame, Santa Barbara, from England and from the Fourteenth United States Cavalry.

Mike Murphy, largest priced trainer in business and Dr Carl Williams, coach who received $5000 for a seasons work at Penn

Lawn Tennis.

Local tennis players have practically nothing in sight at the present time in the way of tournaments, but are looking forward with much interest to the promised visit of the Boston crack, Beals Wright, who says he will come to Southern California this winter. He writes in glowing terms of Miss May Sutton and her fine work in the East. If Wright should come a number of tournaments will be arranged in his honor.

MISS ATHLETE TO THE FRONT.

Y.W.C.A. Girls Going in for Outdoor Sport.

Form Rowing Club and Plan a Baseball Nine.

Physical Culture as Taught, Found Attractive.

Did you ever see a scarf drill? It is the prettiest and newest thing of all in feminine gymnastics, and Miss Elma Smith's classes in physical work at the local Young Woman's Christian Association will be ready to show the wonderful appeal it makes to the eye ere the season is over.

Yellow and white are the association colors, and the scarfs used in the drills are to be of the same pleasing hues, the evolutions of exquisite grace in which the soft pieces of silk are employed forming the rarest of studies in harmony of color and of motion, teaching grace and lightness.

Besides this poetic conception, other new features to be introduced this fall are the regular setting-up exercises of military drill. These are to foster erect carriage, suppleness and poise.

Illustrative of the benefits of Y.W.C.A. training, Miss Smith cites many instances of girls whose one hip was higher than the other, or whose diaphragmatic muscular action can make no greater expansion than one-half inch, the weight being sustained by the wrong muscles.

Measurements are taken when a pupil enters, and when she leaves the association gymnasium, and individual exercises are given to correct individual defects.

To the evening classes, made up largely of young women employed during the day in shops and business offices, relaxation movements are given; to the morning classes, composed of the home makers, and the women who are accustomed to use only certain sets of muscles in household tasks, are given exercises which will bring all muscles into play.

For precision of movement, the regular military marching will be introduced at the Y.W.C.A. "gym." this season, and "by the right flank, march," may be heard echoing up from the depths of the Conservative Life basement floor, where the gymnasium is situated.

The Indoor-Outdoor Club of the association is up and doing this fall. This club was organized last January to further aims of the physical department in arranging outings and sports, in the gymnasium and outside; to assist in providing equipment, and to promote the social and spiritual life of the department.

The new athletic field of Huntington Park belonging to the Y.W.C.A. will soon be in order, and then a Y.W.C.A. baseball team will be organized. A diamond has been laid out for it.

Tennis and basketball courts are to form part of the attractions of this new field, the ground for which was given to the association last spring.

The boating department of the club has a number of enthusiastic members, who are learning to feather the oars without "catching a crab."

Later on in the season this ambitious club is to organize a Y.W.C.A. fleet, which may doubtless be seen on Saturday afternoons upon the lakes of the near-by parks.

Tennis is also to flourish, and the tennis club will alternate on Saturday of each week with the boating club.

TWIN WANTS J. GARDNER.

JOURNEYED OUT FROM BOSTON FOR A FIGHT.

Posts Big Sum to Bind Match With Lowell Boy and Will Let Him Make the Weight Conditions—Sullivan is Believed to be the Equal of Any-one of His Class.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mike (Twin) Sullivan of Boston, arrived this morning and forthwith issued a challenge to fight Jimmie Gardner of Lowell, Mass. Sullivan, in his challenge, says he will meet Gardner at any weight the Lowell boy may name. He then posted a forfeit of $500 to bind a match. Sullivan is eager to try conclusions with Gardner. Once before the men met on the canvas at Philadelphia. The affair had an unsatisfactory ending, the police stopping the mill in the fifth round.

Both sides claimed to have had the better of the bloody battle. Twin declared he came here all the way from Boston to get a match with Jimmy. "The matter of weight will not bother me," said Sullivan. "I will let him name the weight conditions. I can fight him at from 135 to 138."

Sullivan's recent battle with Joe Gans boosted his pugilistic stock wonderfully. Critics who saw the battle were a unit in declaring that Mike had much the better of the go, and censured the referee for giving a draw decision.

Twin is the possessor of a hard wallop, is an excellent defense fighter and can go out and set the pace with any lightweight in the business.

STRONG IN ATHLETICS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] There is no ship in the navy where the officers and men are so proud of their athletic record as those of the Dubuque, the 1000 ton gunboat now at the New York navy yard. With only a crew of 150 men to make the selection from, a baseball team was organized which played the team from the cruiser Tacoma, a tie game on Wednesday and on the day before defeated the club from the Maryland, where the nine men were selected from a crew of nine hundred men. A football team is being organized on the Dubuque, and the men declare that they will defeat the elevens of some of the battleships before the season is over.

BELDAME IS ON THE SHELF.

HAS BEEN RETIRED TO OWNER'S STOCK FARM.

Famous Mare Will Probably Not Race Again—Delhi Also Sent to the Barn to Rest Until Next Season. Jock A. Walsh Badly Injured in a Race at Windsor Track.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LEXINGTON (Ky.) Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Howard Cobb, Ithaca, N. Y., has purchased of Durbin Horn, Pittsburgh, Pa., the five-year-old half sister to Miss Adbell, Emma Brook, by Silent Brook, dam Emma by Socrates. The price paid was $5000.

The famous race mare Beldame arrived here this week to be sent to the nursery stud of her owner, August Belmont, where she will join the brood mare ranks. With her came the famous Delhi, which was sent here by his owner, James R. Keene, to rest up during the winter. Delhi will be shipped East again in the spring for another season's campaign.

WALSH BADLY HURT.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WINDSOR RACE TRACK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Jockey A. Walsh, who rode Christine A. in the third race here today, had his leg badly fractured and it is thought he is also injured internally. He was caught in a jam while rounding the first turn and unseated. Several of the horses following stepped on the lad and he was taken to the Windsor Hospital. When stripped, the bone was protruding through his leg. Walsh is a brother of J. Walsh, also a rider, and was one of the best of the lightweights here. His home is in Toronto.

Stirring scrimmage in yesterday's game at Occidental.

BEATEN, BUT GAME TO LAST.

Burly St. Vincent's Held to One Touchdown.

Pretty Game Marred Sorely by Wrangling.

High School Lads Play Fast, Brainy Football.

St. Vincent's, 6; Los Angeles High School, 0.

Game and gritty as fighting bull terriers though pitted against what seemed hopeless odds, the wiry little football wizards of Los Angeles' High School, not content with a sip, dived boldly into football glory and the St. Vincent's line yesterday.

Overwhelmed apparently by superior weight and strength, the fast little fellows made quick movement play the part against muscle, and so well did their sudden onslaughts and sturdy resistance avail them that only in the last few minutes were St. Vincent's burly Orangemen able to negotiate a touchdown, and there was a savor of fluke about it even then.

A fumble and a fortuitous fall upon the ball by Phillips probably saved the Catholic lads the misery of being held to a zero score by the eleven of schoolboys—a bitter dose indeed for any college to take. During the first half the ball was continuously in St. Vincent's territory. The officials in all penalized the Orangemen fifty yards for fouls of various sorts, but the High School boys played hard, courageous football from first to finish.

Eventually excess of beef bested science, as it always does on the gridiron, and, as one by one the plucky little High School backs dropped on the field hors du combat and physically exhausted, the powerful forwards and full-back Andreas of the St. Vincent's eleven began opening holes in the thin blue line through which they piled up substantial gains.

With Murrietta and Seeley out of the play and Irvine forced to retire early, the Orangemen were probably not at their best, but their showing was a disappointment, even after these things were discounted. Half-back Acker did not play within 50 per cent. of the game that was expected of him. On offense he occasionally made gains, but McDonald and Andreas were the stars. McElroy at end stopped most of the plays that came his way. In defensive ball Acker was practically a failure, and he received little interference in his end runs.

Straight bucking, wherein their superiority of weight told, seemed St. Vincent's surest style of play. Of tricks they had few; one was successfully engineered when by a sort of fake pass late in the second half, Campbell made nearly fifteen yards. The High School lads were full of all manner of football dodges, and made them serve well.

Bill Traeger, who refereed, had his hands full, but was eminently fair; some criticism of Phil Wilson's umpiring was heard, many claiming he favored the St. Vincent's, but there was little ground for the contention.

It was a scrappy, long-drawn-out game from the start. Time out was called as often as the referee's whistle, and the first half took over one hour to play.

COURSE OF THE PLAY.

High School opened the game by kicking off to St. Vincent. The ball was punted back and fell into a High School man's hands.

By a succession of straight bucks the High Schoolteam advanced the ball down the field to the St. Vincent fifteen-yard line.

On the fifteen yard line St. Vincent held and took the ball on downs. Cunningham went through left tackle for ten yards but the ball was brought back and Referee Traeger penalized the Orangemen fifteen yards for holding in the line.

Left End McElroy punted forty-five yards. Demens returned the ball five yards and was downed.

Demens then punted thirty yards to the side of the field. The kick was well placed. St. Vincent bucked three yards and on the second attempt made distance. Then High School held and took the ball on downs.

St. Vincent returned the compliment by holding like a wall, but in the third scrimmage the Catholics were again penalized five yards for holding.

McElroy punted forty yards to Holland of High School who returned the kick with a thirty-five yard punt.

In the next scrimmage the ball was fumbled and a High School man flew to the goal for a touchdown which was [illegible]

High School was penalized fifteen yards for interfering with a fair catch.

[illegible] punted forty yards to [illegible] brought the ball [illegible] and on the next down punted [illegible]

St. Vincent's fumbled, and High School took the ball. Demens punted [illegible] then punted over the line and St. Vincent kicked from the twenty-five yard line. The ball was returned fifteen yards by High School who then punted. The punt was blocked by St. Vincent who took the ball in the middle of the field, as the half closed.

SECOND HALF.

Andreas kicked off for St. Vincent's to Nast of High School who returned the ball three yards. Demens punted to M. McDonald of St. Vincent who returned the ball twenty-five yards. St. Vincent bucked steadily and made gains. Then the ball see-sawed back and forth for ten minutes. McElroy of St. Vincent punted to Holland who was downed in his tracks. St. Vincent was again penalized five yards for holding. McElroy of St. Vincent tried for a field goal and missed.

High School failed to make distance and St. Vincent's took the ball. McDonnell by a series of splendid quarterback runs advanced the ball steadily until within five yards of the High School goal.

Demens and Holland were obliged to leave the team, exhausted. St. Vincent's fumbled on the five yard line and the ball rolled over the goal line and Phillips of St. Vincent's fell on it and secured the only touchdown of the game. Goal was kicked by Wilhoit. Score: St. Vincent, 6; High School, 0.

Andreas kicked off for St. Vincent and the ball was punted back and forth. With the ball in High School territory the game closed.

SLATS DAVIS WON'T BE HERE.

BERT FINALLY HEARS ROARS OF LOCAL FANS.

Bull Perrine is to Officiate at the Closing Games in Los Angeles—Jim McDonald Too Sick to be Depended Upon—New Man Named Rankin Will be Tried Next Year.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] President Bert announces he will not make a shift of umpires this week. J. Ira Davis, who had been slated to officiate at Los Angeles during the next series in the southern town, will be kept in San Francisco. This is due to the fact that Los Angeles players and the public think that Davis has it in for that club. "While I personally consider Davis one of the most honest and proficient umpires in the business," remarked President Bert, "and feel sure Los Angeles is getting all that is coming to it, in order to set at rest the continual complaint that Davis is giving their club the worst of it I have decided to send Perrine south to officiate."

President Bert also said Perrine would be retained on the staff next year, as he thought him a capable umpire. "I am simply having Jack McCarthy come here to fill out," continued Bert, "as McDonald seems an uncertain quality owing to the state of his health. Next year I will give Rankin, a man as large as Jim Jeffries, a chance to show what he can do with the indicator. Rankin is in Portland and comes highly recommended."

A white smoke coming out of the muffler is a sure sign that the engine has been over-lubricated. This should not be allowed to continue, as it is very unpleasant for those following behind; moreover, it is likely to foul the plugs and cause misfiring.

HARD HUSTLE AT STANFORD.

COACH LANAGAN GETTING HIS MEN INTO SHAPE.

Team is Developing Scrappy Spirit Essential to Success and Rooters are Turning Out in Force—Leading Candidates for the Various Positions.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Oct. 6.—During the past two weeks there has been a vast change in football at Stanford. With amazing rapidity Coach Lanagan has brought his men up to a fine point in both offensive and defensive work, although it is generally admitted that the one weak point of the eleven will be in defensive playing.

Both the freshman and 'varsity teams are commencing to get hold of that spirit which is so necessary for speed and snap. Practice, which goes on with open gates takes place every afternoon for an hour and thirty minutes, and during that time the bleachers are crowded with students of a less energetic nature than their sturdy football companions, but who nevertheless lend their aid by vocal acclamations and cheer on the team to the hoped for victory over Berkeley.

Individual work can be best noticed at these daily line-ups and what the men do here decides whether or not they will "make" the team. Crow, Crawford, Fenton, Dole, Chalmers and Stott have been doing spectacular playing and causing more comment than other members of the squad.

Crow has especially distinguished himself in defensive playing; it was he who in the Stanford-St. Vincent's game kept up his side of the team—and it might be said in a good many instances, the other too.

Crawford has shown unusual ability in tackling and it is likely that he will play tackle on the final 'varsity game of the season.

Dole, who has been playing right-half, possesses that rush which it takes to get through a well defended line. Fenton, one of the freshman candidates for quarter, seems well able to manage a team in action, having the same presence of mind and speed that Stott, the last year's 'varsity quarter has.

Chalmers, the 'varsity captain and right half on the team, has improved since last year. It is he who carries the ball for the bucks that Stanford is so strong in this year.

D. Barmore, of Los Angeles is among the most promising freshmen and there is little doubt but that he will make his position, center, on the freshmen eleven.

BIG INTEREST IN MOTOR RUN.

AUTOMOBILES TO COMPETE WITH RAILROAD TRAINS.

Cost of Carrying Passengers by Automobile to be Demonstrated as Less Than by Train—The Route, and Precautions That are to be Taken Regarding the Observers.

The first national economy test of the New York Motor Club, which is to be held during the week of October 23-28, is attracting much attention in automobile circles from the fact that the question of the value of the motor car as a means of traveling cheaply and readily has never been settled in any broad way. A similar test held on Long Island recently, in which members of the Long Island Automobile Club participated, demonstrated that passengers can be carried for about two hundred miles much more cheaply than they can be transported by railroad. Dr. C. B. Parker, in a Franklin, carried four passengers for the distance at an expense of 80½ cents, the railroad fare being several times that amount. Since that time the manufacturers of American cars and many of the importers of foreign cars have been anxious for a test which will have effect in educating the public to a realization of the exceeding value of the motor car from a money-saving standpoint. The Motor Club has now prepared a test which will go far toward bringing out this great fact.

The run is in and out of New York, first to Philadelphia, then to Albany, then to Southampton, L. I. Each run is of a day between cities, or six days in all, with the competitors arriving at New York every second evening. It is primarily a manufacturers' run, though there will undoubtedly be many private owners competing in the test. The work of keeping records of results attained will be intrusted to observers who are nominated by the entrants. These observers will be factory superintendents, designers, constructors, engineers, and others of tried experience and ability. Each will be placed on the front seat of a vehicle for the day, the personnel of the observers being changed each day. None will ride upon the car whose entrant nominated him, so that the observers will be constantly on the look out for the shortcomings on their competitors, and will be inclined to be exact and painstaking for that reason. Another innovation in runs of this character will be the fact that a running statement of the performance of the various cars is to be made public each evening, and there will be an opportunity to compare the work of the various cars from day to day.

The drivers of the various cars will undertake to run against the first-class railway fare for the 482 miles of the test. The total fare for one person, first-class, who attempts to cover the same route would be $14.53. The motor cars must carry each of their passengers at a rate less than this to receive the certificate which is more dear to the manufacturer's heart than gold or precious stones. The charges assessed against the motor cars are for gasoline at 25 cents a gallon, oil at 60 cents a gallon, and for all repairs. Parts which are repaired for any reason are charged for at the catalogue rates, and a charge is assessed whenever any assistance has to be secured by the driver in making replacements, or for any purpose. In other words, the conditions are made to approximate, as nearly as possible the conditions which the ordinary tourist encounters when he sets out to cover the same route. All charges assessed against the car are divided by the number of passengers and the average resulting will demonstrate what is gained by using the motor car instead of the railroad train.

A number of valuable prizes have been offered for the test, including a trophy to the car making the most economical record and medals for the most cheaply operated cars in each of five classifications of price. There are also special medals offered for special excellence of economy in various details and the certificates which go to all cars which lower the railroad rate per passenger.

RUNNERS MAY COMPETE.

MATCH FOR ENGLISHMAN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Negotiations between Arthur Duffey, former champion runner of the world, and Archie Hahn, the crack western sprinter, may result in a match race between Hahn and J. W. Morton, the English champion, at Madison Square Garden next week. Duffey is in charge of the athletic events which are to be a big feature of the second annual Physical Culture show at the Garden next week. He has secured Morton's promise to appear in the games, which are sanctioned by the A.A.U., and in which only registered amateurs can appear. Hahn, who first gained fame at the University of Michigan, is now running under the colors of the Milwaukee Athletic Association, and has practically promised to come here and meet Morton in a short-distance race. Since Duffey retired from the cinder path, Hahn has been regarded as one of America's foremost aspirants for the short-distance championship. Duffey is trying to arrange a hundred-yard race between Hahn and Morton.

NEW SPRINT RECORD.

SOLDIER SETS A MARK.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In the athletic games at the Irish Fair in Madison Square Garden Thursday night, Frank M. Pearson, the Twenty-second regiment's crack amateur athlete made a new world's record in the forty yard dash race, by covering the distance in 6 2-5 seconds, beating F. Slevin, who was protested for professionalism and R. G. Wainright, New York Athletic Club.

FLASHES ON RACES.

SCHEME NOT ILLEGAL.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—The New California Jockey Club has no right to keep a person from the privileges of the track who is caught "flashing" or "signaling" the result of races, according to an opinion rendered today by Judge Hunt.

The case in question is a suit brought by George W. Sanfason against the New California Jockey Club for damages for expelling him from the track at Emeryville.

The racing officials admitted they ejected him from the track upon the ground, that he was guilty of immoral conduct and of violating the ordinances of San Francisco in sending the results to determine bets made in illegally run poolrooms.

The court held that it was not proven that the plaintiff was an immoral character, and said that as to "flashing" the results an individual has the same right in this respect as the newspaper reporters who send in the results of a prize fight.

BUILDS RACER TO BEAT MARIE.

C. H. WEDGEWOOD DESIGNS NEW BOAT TO OUTDO ALL.

Expects to Put His Former Speed Creation Completely Into the Shade With New and Novel Craft Which He is Putting Together Without Any Outside Aid—Specifications.

BY STINSON JARVIS.

Menacing to yachting reputations is the craft being built by C. H. Wedgwood of the South Coast Yacht Club. Within her carefully-studied lines there is much storage room for silver cups. For class A she is big with fate; and her owner intends that she shall sweep the coast from Santa Barbara to Point Loma. Wedgwood's present yacht, Marie, will probably be used as a speed companion for the new craft, and in this way he will know to a nicety how the last design stands with Mischief and Venus before any official race takes place. The Marie's performance with the others of about the same size has in the last year brought her into great prominence and the present attempt to beat her is one that requires much skill. Excepting bad luck in catspaws such as was endured last Sunday, Marie is a pretty sure thing in all reaching races, being then generally able to finish within the time allowance given by Mischief, and apparently able to give the smaller Venus all that the rules demand, with something to spare. Therefore the attempt to beat these three modern and speedy craft is a plucky one, and it is all the more admirable when an amateur conceives the ideas necessary for increased speed and himself materializes them in yacht form.

Wedgwood took a course of five years in shipbuilding, and the work he is now putting into the new racer will stand critical examination on the part of the most expert. The undue lightness of the framing that appeared in the Marie is here rectified by a strength quite sufficient for any probable use of the boat, and when an extra stiffener is added in the region of the forward overhang the boat can be classed A1 in the matter of structural strength.

The idea mainly relied upon by this designer is the development of increased power in the bilges. Of course, this generally entails some drawbacks and for ease of movement in a seaway of good size the new craft will not be as "sweet" as the Marie; but brute power is now a modern desideratum, and that is what Wedgwood is after. These new bilges will beyond question supply great sail-carrying ability, but they are extremely "hard" from bow to stern, and the real experiment in the boat is the trial of these bilges. Proof alone will show whether or not they are too hard for general agility and ease of movement. The flat-floored Independence and many another craft showed that these hard bilges are all right in forceful winds when the development of power is the whole thing, but useless in light airs when the placing of the crew to leeward is not sufficient to lift the windward side from the water. The same model is also found wanting in certain shapes of sea when beating through light airs, in which case the "sweet" model always has advantages.

The over-all length of this new craft is 38 feet and her waterline length is said to be about 22 feet. The extreme beam is 10 feet and the waterline beam about 9 feet 9 inches. There is no centerboard and the draft of the fin is 6 feet. This is shod by an iron casting, the weight of which was estimated at 1100 pounds, but the designer admitted that the weight exceeded this. Yet it is certain that weight is to be saved here, and where Mischief has lately been adding outside ballast in her fin, Wedgwood is taking it off and is relying far more on the old American idea of great beam for the gaining of power and a flat bottom that will pass easily over the surface, rather than oppose resistance and divide the waters lower down.

The frames are of straight white oak bent to design, being one and a half inches square, and the bilge stringers and upper clamps are of great strength in Oregon pine three inches by two inches. The planking from rail to waterline will be of Port Orford cedar, and on the floor will be Oregon pine of seven-eighths thickness. The freeboard amidships is two feet; three feet two inches at the bow and two feet four inches at the stern. This does not indicate much sheer, but the lateral plane is graceful enough for a modern racer.

Owing to a cabin trunk of some height, there will be about five feet six inches of head room inside, and four good-sized bunks are planned, while there will be a forward hatch for the easier getting out of racing sails. The mainmast will be 38 feet long, with a mainsail hoist of 25 feet, the main boom being 26¼ feet long. This, with the headsail, will show a sail area of 810 feet, the same as that of the Marie. A bet that this craft will, for best all-round racing speed, require more sail than Marie, has been made.

Wedgwood says that the forward overhang is 8½ feet and that the after overhang is the same, so that if this total of 17 feet be deducted from the over-all length, only 21 feet is left for the waterline length. In this case, there will be any quantity of room for a large sail area at small expense in the calculation of racing length. There will be no bowsprit work, as the horn is only two feet long, outboard—the overhang taking the place of bowsprit and providing lots of room for the work forward.

For purposes of extra strength in construction Wedgwood has devised a new wrinkle, in having bits of oak and pine, two inches by three inches, laid beside the center of the frames. These short extra bits are bolted across the oak backbone, and the central portions of the frames here get an extra and valuable strength. In his spare hours Wedgwood has made every inch of this boat himself, except the iron keel casting and the wrought metal fittings for the oak rudder.

WOMEN'S GOLF PLAY MONDAY.

Sixty-four Entries for the Championship.

All but Three Reside in or Near New York.

Ada N. Smith of Los Angeles Will Contest.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It looks as if the women's national golf championship title is destined to remain in the East for another year. Of the sixty-four entries given out by W. Fellowes Morgan, the U. S. G. A., secretary, all save three are from this section. Those nominated to come out of the wild and woolly West are Mrs. C. L. Deering of Chicago, champion of the women's western golf association; Mrs. Vernon J. Hall, of Evanston, and Miss Ada N. Smith of Los Angeles, Cal. Mrs. Hall was formerly Miss J. Anna Carpenter, and is regarded by many as the best woman golfer in the West today. While the total is twenty less than a year ago at Philadelphia, the class of the sixty field is full up to any past standard. In fact, the outlook for low scoring was never better. A few years ago it was a rare thing for a woman to make an eighteen-hole round of ninety. Now there are at least a score of players who, under favorable conditions, are good for ninety or better, and that's going some when you stop to reflect that ninety for an eighteen-hole round means an average of five. It is therefore a good bet that the woman leading the field at the end of the eighteen-hole qualifying round at Morris County Monday will return a card totaling somewhere in the eighties.

The women have been working hard to get in shape for this national event and the ultimate winner will know she has been golfing. The title holder, Miss Georgianna Bishop, of Brooklawn, is keeping in condition and must, of course, be reckoned with, though the real favorite will probably be Mrs. Charles T. Stout of the Richmond County Country Club. Even as great a golfer as she is, Mrs. Stout has her troubles on the links. For instance, it was only the other day that she went off so badly with her wooden clubs as to cause her to drive with a cleek.

WINTER LEAGUE IS FORMING.

LOS ANGELES TO HAVE PLENTY OF BASEBALL.

Scheme Now Under Way to Organize a Southern California Circuit to be Made up of Four Teams—Success of League Depends Upon the Lease of Grounds in Los Angeles.

The baseball season of the Coast League will end in this city on Sunday, December 3, and by December 15 it is expected that the local fans will be treated to the first games of a new semi-professional winter league that its promoters expect will furnish a fine article of ball in Southern California all winter, or until April 1.

It is the intention to organize a Southern California League, such as was in existence several years ago, when there was more of a craze on about baseball than there seems to be now. Negotiations have been under way for some time to form such a league, to be represented by clubs in San Diego, San Bernardino, Santa Barbara and Los Angeles, and if rumors are to be believed the only hitch that is holding the league up at this time concerns the local club, who will manage it, and the grounds that will be used. These are really only matters of detail, but they are very important ones, for Fiesta Park is not the best place in this city for a ball game, and there is some doubt about the possibility of getting Chutes Park, and these two lots seem to be the only available ones at this time.

The scheme is to have games on Saturday and Sunday afternoons in this city at least, and possibly in the other cities if the attendance justifies, and without doubt a suitable money prize will be offered the winning team. Both professional and semi-professional players will make up the teams, for there will be bunches of good ones of both kinds here during the winter. Six or eight big league professionals always spend the winter here, during the races and others come to take in the climate, so there will be no doubt about the material necessary. San Diego is strongly in favor of the new league, for the Grief City had a strong club last winter, which was captained by Wild Bill Devereaux of the present Oakland club.

The formation of the league apparently depends upon the action of the interested parties in this city, and it is said they will have a meeting in the near future to decide upon a plan of action. There is little doubt but that the league will be formed, for aside from the fact that Los Angeles is one of the best baseball cities in the country, the sport can be carried on here almost every Sunday during the winter, when the city is full of tourists.

POLO ORGANIZATION.

BIG SCHEME FORMING.

The Los Angeles Polo Club has perfected plans for a meeting in this city the latter part of this month at which an organization will be effected of a Southern California Polo Club to foster the sport in this end of the State.

The object of the proposed organization is to join all the clubs in this part of the State in an association so that Southern California can have a representative club to send to any distant city to defend the honor of the South, if necessary. San Francisco has about all of its good polo players in the well-known Blingum Club of San Mateo county while the good men in this section are scattered over the territory from San Diego to Santa Barbara, some being in Redlands, San Diego, Los Angeles and Santa Barbara. Intercity matches are all right in their way but do not conduce to the elevation of the sport as a matter of fact.

Two delegates each from the clubs at Redlands, Santa Barbara, San Diego and Los Angeles will meet here and in all probability three or four delegates-at-large will be appointed and with this representation it is expected that there will be no trouble in forming a strong association of at least fifty men, each having had considerable practice in the game and many being experts at it. When the association is perfected it will then be easy to secure matches with the Blingum Club and also with the All England team that was here last year.

MILLS LEADS FOR AVERAGE.

Santa Ana Crack Again in Top-Notch Form.

First Day's Turnout Proves Disappointment.

Ideal Weather for the Trap Shooters' Game.

Keen of eye and steady of hand, smashing his birds into impalpable dust with the consistency characteristic of the thoroughly trained trap shot that all local saucer-splinterers know him to be, Fred Mills of Santa Ana yesterday qualified for high average in the opening round of the Los Angeles Gun Club's nineteenth semi-annual tournament over the Sherman grounds with the magnificent average of even 92 per cent.

Given a close race all day by "Bob" Bungay whose remarkable improvement has been the talk not only of local trigger knights, but, since the Interstate handicap, of gunners the coast over as well, there was a pretty tussle for average honors, and it went a long way to relieve the disappointment caused by the smallest turnout that has been entertained in any semi-annual fixture for a long time. Lack of advertisement owing to the short time is responsible, and hereafter the club will see that its events are programmed a month ahead at least.

With two very promising contests in the two-man team cup and Tufts-Lyon medal to feature the usual fifteen bird sweepstakes, three squads of local and visiting trigger-yankers hied themselves to Sherman early yesterday morning. Of the party were E. C. Wilson who came down from Bakersfield; Harry Hoyt, who packed up in a hurry and left San Francisco at an hour's notice, and G. M. Kanouse, late of Indianapolis, but hereafter hailing from this city; Fred Mills, Clyde Walker and a few other outside shooters represent the advance guard of a considerable country delegation which is expected this morning.

Favored by a bright, but cool day, tempered with the balmiest of ocean breezes, it was a pity that fifty instead of fifteen were not on hand to help out the fun.

Of average events, there were programmed 150 birds, and Fred Mills with 138 breaks, carried off high honors, Bungay being only two birds behind. On the whole day, he beat Mills out, but the medals and practice events did not count.

High run went to Mills with a straight string of sixty-one consecutive breaks—the big Santa Ana rancher simply could not miss. No one else was within fifteen birds of doing as well, and it is doubtful if the run will be exceeded today.

Interest as usual centered about the trophy events, and general applause greeted Bob Bungay's victory in the Tufts-Lyon trophy when he snuffed out 23 and 24 for a total of 47, taking the jewelry from Guy Lovelace who has held it long enough. Charlie Julian of San Diego, who was in good, consistent form proved a good second with 46.

Again Bungay ran in the money when with C. D. Hagerman he cleaned up the two-man cup with 24 each for a total of 48. Julian was as ever hot on the trail; he came through with 24, but partner, Fred Gilbert, missed two birds and totalled the team at 47.

The scores in detail are appended:

MACHINES ARE SPEEDING UP.

VANDERBILT CUP RACERS NOW BEING TRIED OUT.

Very Fast Time Being Made by the Chauffeurs—Several Men are Fined for High Speed Stunts—Homery's Good Showing in the Darracq Racer—He Takes Corners Well.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Homery, in the eighty-horse power Darracq, Thursday proved himself worthy of being second favorite for the Vanderbilt Cup race. In the early hours of the morning, when no one was supposed to be looking, he slipped around the Nassau circuit in time that was said to be 25 minutes flat for the twenty-eight miles. The way he took the corners was said to be a revelation in maneuvering at high speed. Those who saw him flash by say that he shot over the Jericho turnpike and the winding Oyster Bay road faster than any other driver has yet traveled these highways. At the finish he was as cool and unconcerned as if he had simply made an ordinary run. Other drivers who were credited with fast runs were Sartori, in A. G. Vanderbilt's ninety Fiat and Cedrino in a one hundred and ten Fiat. The former's time for the circuit was said to be only a fraction under 25 minutes. It must be remembered that fast preparatory runs are contrary to the rules of the race, and that no practice time may be officially recorded.

Robert Lee Morrell, chairman of the Vanderbilt Cup Commission, is on the Nassau circuit soon after daybreak every morning, and fast runs are made only when the drivers are assured that he will not be encountered. The time reported here, though unofficial, is none the less reliable. C. L. Campbell, in S. B. Stevens's ninety Mercedes, made two rounds of the circuit in one hour, including a stop for ignition trouble. Others who made fast time over the course in cup cars were Duray (Dedrich,) Szisy (Renault,) Jonatsy (Mercedes,) Chevrolet (Fiat,) and White (White.)

Other cup contestants made the round of the circuit in touring cars. Duray (Dedrich,) was arrested and fined $50 for speeding his car, being a second offense. John B. Warden (Mercedes) while piloting his cup car from New York to the course, was stopped and fined $25 for speeding.

EVEN BREAK.

GIANTS WIN AND LOSE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Winning one and losing another constituted the regular season wind-up for the Giants at the polo grounds this afternoon. The first game they pulled away from the "Phillies" in the tenth inning by a rally that savored of the good old summer time days, the score being 4 to 3. The second game they lost, 6 to 1, in five innings, at the end of which period the contest was called. Brady was not very much of a puzzle to the champions, Elliott was even less so to the Philadelphians. That was the difference and it won the game.

USUAL ACCIDENT.

CAMBRIDGE MAN HURT.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CAMBRIDGE (Mass.) Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Alph Bradley, a graduate of Groton School and a candidate for an end position on the Harvard freshmen eleven, fractured his skull Thursday afternoon in a fierce scrimmage between two freshmen elevens. Bradley was rendered unconscious in the mix-up and when taken to the locker building a hurried examination revealed a fractured skull. He was conveyed to his home in Boston and several surgeons were called to attend him. It is the first serious accident this season at Cambridge.

FINAL GAMES OF BASEBALL.

Champion Series to Begin the Coming Week.

New York the Favorite Over Philadelphia.

Great Interest is Shown in Both Cities.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Next week two professional baseball clubs will play for the championship of the world. The Giants are one of them, and the Athletics of Philadelphia will be the other. Every man is entitled to his opinion as to the winner. Everybody is trying to guess the winner. In Philadelphia they are loyal and stick up for their own team, first, last and all the time. If there are any who think down deep in their gizzards that the Athletics will be unable to win, you can't induce them to say so. In that respect Philadelphia is like the small city, which will stand by its own baseball nine, though the municipal treasury is cleaned out. There is a great deal of the same loyalty shown in New York. Harlem "rooters" have upheld valiantly the cause of the Giants in the past, and it is going to take a great deal to induce them to change their minds just as the team is about to enter upon the first world's series that it every has played. Occasionally there is a New York man who says the Giants will be beaten, but take the general run of baseball enthusiasts here as they come and go, and they are ready to take the side of the champions of the National League as against anything which Philadelphia has in store for them.

There has been a great deal of discusion about the superiority of the American League as to ball players. As a matter of fact, it doesn't exist. On the other hand, the American League race is decidedly more evenly matched than the National because the clubs are better balanced in relation to one another. Already the Giants are slight favorites for the world's series, although the uncertainties of the national game are believed by close followers of baseball to warrant even money. The first big bet on the series was recorded yesterday, when "Jake" Fields bet "Dave" Johnson $10,000 to $9000 on the Giants against the Athletics. Fields is a well-known Wall-street operator, and Johnson is a bookmaker.

GUARDSMEN LOSE.

OCCIDENTAL DEFEATS CO. F.

Occidental's football team rolled the guardsmen of Co. F over the gridiron at the Presbyterian school yesterday afternoon and piled up a score against the soldiers of 50 to 0.

The game was a one sided contest from the kickoff, as the picked-up team of guardsmen had no chance whatever. Bi Fulback Willett was the strength of the Co. F team and by strenuous efforts the soldiers held the collegians for downs once during the first half and succeeded in making distances several times during the game.

Occidental tried out about twenty men against the soldiers. Merril, Marshall and Welman, the backs showed up well in the game.

NEW ZEALAND WINS.

ENGLISHMEN ARE EASY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Quite a stir has been caused in English Rugby football circles by the repeated and overwhelming victories which have been scored by the New Zealand team, which is over here on tour. The visitors so far have played half a dozen games, and although they have on each occasion been opposed by a good combination, they have yet to be beaten. Their record up to date is 231 points to 4, the scores being made up as follows: Fifty points against Devon, 41 points against Cornwall, 41 against Bristol, 32 against Northampton, 28 against Leicester and 34 against Middlesex. The only score obtained against the tourists is a dropped goal, in the first match against Devon. One or two English teams have already adopted the New Zealanders' style with good results.

On Selden Patent.

A decision in the test cases on the Selden patent is expected from the U. S. Circuit Court this fall. Both sides are prepared, in case of losing, to appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court, and it is possible that a decision may be obtained from it before the winter is over.

A Nutmeg State legislator thinks that the question of what to do with the emancipated and idly multiplying horses is to become, in the near future, as great a question as the negro problem.

WHAT IS THE ELEPHANT?

T story is that three blind men went to see the phant. One felt the leg of the animal and said: The elephant is a great pillar which upholds ing." "No," said his comrade, "the elephant is house. I feel the side of it." The third llow replied: "What are you talking about? you thinking about? Are you both gone ? The elephant is nothing but an old rope. I have hand." He was holding the tail.

surely it may be said in all seriousness, "thereby a tale." Every question we approach is an ele-. All of us are more or less mentally and morally. We all of us approach every problem from the and shadowy jungles of thought as this trio did from the jungles of India. Not one of them over the whole beast with his hand and tell all him. Not all three of them, nor a dozen like could grasp the elephant in his entirety. So with possessed of a very partial conception of their, they all fell into a rancorous dispute, each persuaded that his piece was the whole ele-. Hot waxed the dispute, and when blind reason- failed to convince and patience came to a full stop, began a three-corner fight, thinking by blows to argument had failed to do.

the fable not "point a moral" as well as "adorn" The elephant is as much an element in all as the sphynx was in the lives of those who about the riddles of existence by the banks of or in the mountain fastnesses of Greece ages by. The elephant is sometimes a religious sometimes he belongs to the realms of politics, to the natural sciences. He is found in the of a woman's hat or gown, in the necktie of a " or the cut of his pantaloons. The plainest kitchen has its elephant, and the shop of the has its. In learning just what any elephant each seeker after information approaches the with imperfect vision and must depend largely groping after the truth. And this elephant no matter what the truth relates to, is so reaches so far, is so vast, that none of us can touch more than some small part of one side of it. Then, with this partial, imperfect, inadequate impression in our minds we proceed to discuss this or that vast or abstruse subject. The man who is dimmest of vision and most paralyzed of touch is always the one who is most positive that he and he only is right. He talks the fastest, shouts the loudest and is the quickest to clinch his purblind logic with a blow of his fist or of a cudgel. When the Greek orator was trying to convince his audience one of these only-right bigots threw a brick at the man on the platform. "A weighty argument, but not conclusive," said the speaker. When Themistocles, another Greek, had silenced his bigot, the man who had been "convinced against his will," struck the man with greater force of mind a heavy blow with a stick. "Strike, but hear me," said the man who knew the elephant best.

None of us can be sure we are right at any moment on any matter of opinion. The clergyman who rails at his brother because of some difference of opinion would have gone to the stake for his own opinions in "the good old days" when burning heretics was fashionable in church policy. The bigot in the medical profession who is so sure his nostrum is the only thing to cure corns, headache, bilious attacks, make hair grow on bald heads, soothe children cutting teeth and restore amputated fingers, all by the same treatment, is himself a recent convert to his own views. The student in natural science who thinks his theory solves every riddle of the universe may live to find tomorrow one great fact heretofore unobserved which upsets his theory root and branch. Religious, philosophic, scientific, sociological, political, medicinal, theological and every kind of view on every kind of subject that men have ever held have been so often, so radically modified, reformed, turned inside out and upside down that there is no place on earth for the bigot to stand in which he will not appear ridiculous.

Convictions? Yes, by all means have convictions. The man who has none is not worth the food he spoils. Live by your convictions. Stand fast upon them. Guide your life by them. If they be in your eyes important, seek to convert all men to them. But do it as one possessed of reasoning powers, as one dealing with the facts and possibilities of life. Do it as one who has once thought otherwise himself, as one who may have to think differently tomorrow or next day.

Remember the elephant. Your hand does not cover all of him. Remember the brick-bat. It may be a weighty argument, but it is not convincing. Remember, too, when you engage in controversy with the man who knows it all, with the bigot, that you are wasting time and breath. You can't convert him, because he can't reason. He is not worth converting. Go, rather, and preach to an ass.

President Buchanan is said to have frequently drank a gallon of old rye whisky in a day. They had other whisky, and other men, in those days.

A WOOING.

(From the German.)

A man once wooed a maid divine,
And asked what you may guess, guess, guess;
And said, "Sweetheat! will you be mine?"
She smiled and answered, "Yes, yes, yes!"

And then (in business such as this,
Men love to act just so, so, so)
He asked for just one little kiss:
She smiled, and answered, "No, no, no!"

"Unless you'll follow where I lead,
Follow for good or ill, ill, ill!"
Then swore that swain, "I will, indeed,
Sweetheart, indeed, I will, will, will!"

"Then will we to the church repair,
And in due form be wed, wed, wed!"
Alas! he had no time to spare,
And so he turned, and fled, fled, fled!

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

HEADS AND FIGUREHEADS.

A HEAD is commonly known to be the uppermost part of the human body, or the chief structure of the human anatomy containing the brain or brains, so closely associated with the human understanding or the intellectual faculties, the emotions, resolutions or the will.

Heads are therefore generally identified with mind or soul assumed to be the leading or directing force and controlling agent of all psychical activity. Thus we speak of a "good head" or a "bad head" and of "no head at all."

A figurehead, on the other hand, may be defined as an object of convenience resembling or having the form of a head, but which may be easily shifted about from place to place, and like the poor manikin in the puppet show, the figurehead may be made to say "yes" or "no" at the will of the operator, who needs only to pull the string and, if you will pardon the allusion, "the dummy does the rest."

Quite different is it when an attempt is made to operate a real live head that actually does its own thinking and is moreover capable of a certain amount of self-direction; then the "strings" fail to work, and hence unlike readily movable mechanical contrivances, such as figureheads, heads with an inherent, impelling power of motion often prove extremely unmanageable, and are consequently the most inconvenient of all objects.

Especially disagreeable are they when deliberately assuming an attitude, or persisting in a direction diametrically opposed to the dictates of the operator.

There was a time when refractory heads were summarily removed. Today, however, excepting the cases in which they have been found responsible for deeds of violence, resulting in death, they are in most civilized countries left on the shoulders of individuals.

Other heads caught in the act of brewing serious mischief in a given community are variously dealt with according to the laws which there obtain.

Aside from these evil heads, there are other difficult heads without malicious intent—provoking heads, tantalizing heads, heads which, contrary to the undemurring figureheads, obstinately oppose the direction of the "wires" or "strings," heads on their own errand bent, whose will none can stay, for they are bound to "gang their own gait." Now the problem is what to do with them.

Here we are reminded of a seminar discussion of the Freedom of the Will in which an eminent psychologist made substantially the following statement:

"Without initiative, or self-conscious direction of energy, a human being is nothing more than a machine; for to be a moral being is to put forth self-conscious, purposive effort." Whereupon a pale, scholarly gentleman whose ideal of virtue evidently consisted in negative goodness, falteringly, and with an air of parental and pious concern, advanced a question something like this: "Would you not, Professor, rather have your son, for instance, a good machine than a bad man?" To which the psychologist promptly and emphatically replied "No," and further implying that even a bad man might become a better man and ultimately a good man, but that a machine, no matter how fine or intricate its construction, has no such alternatives. In other words, the very best possible machine can never extend its "being" beyond, so to speak, its machinehood. A machine can never become a man. And therefore, however excellent as a productive agency, it can never fulfill the place of man as a moral being, for no machine has thus far been able to generate an idea, nor to express the power of choice.

Hence we see that the vital thing is not merely to be a good machine, but to be a worthy and helpful man or woman; and in order to be men and women, we must have wills—we must exercise our volitional powers to the end of governing or controlling, however imperfectly, our own actions. Endowed with the capacities said to reside in heads, we should perform the functions of heads and not of figureheads.

A figurehead may have its place in the general scheme of things, but it has no will of its own. It is always at the mercy of the will of an operator or determining factor outside itself, and hence ought not to be substituted for a head, a habit of doing which some of the human family have inherited from their ancestors and confirmed by long practice; hence, like a toughly-twisted cable, it is hard to break.

It is frequently urged in defense of this habit that figureheads are preferred to heads on accounts of their neutral character; as images or nonentities, they are more easily handled then entities or real beings, with definite powers of resistance. But then, heads or real beings contribute something of their essence to the sum total of experience, whereas figureheads can add nothing of themselves. However then we may be disposed to criticize the measures of so-called strenuous heads, it is far better for the mental and moral education of the present generation and for the generations to follow to let every mind do its own thinking or willing. No sane or healthy mind expects to have its reasoning and resolving done by others. Such freedom of thought and action does not, however, mean that there shall be no reference to other opinions or that due deference should not be paid to better or superior judgment.

Knowledge should be welcomed from every source Babes and fools may teach us, but we must live and learn by our own activity.

It is impossible, therefore, that self-active beings should be satisfied with the empty performances of quiescent or inanimate figureheads so long as they are enlivened by the subtle psychical processes peculiar to virile human heads.

Cuba's Labor Famine. By Frank G. Carpenter.

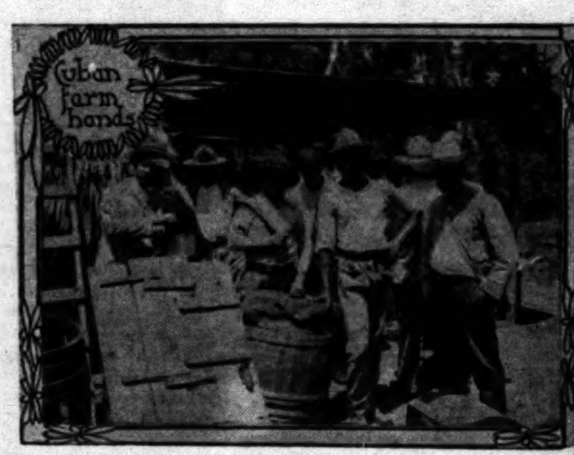
WORK AND WAGES.

MORE HANDS NEEDED FOR THE SUGAR AND TOBACCO PLANTATIONS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, September, 1905.—Cuba is suffering from a labor famine. Wages were never higher in the tobacco districts, and some of the sugar crop of the past season was not harvested for lack of hands. Thousands of Americans who have purchased lands here are doing more or less to develop their holdings, and the good times have created an increased demand for workmen in every part of the island. There have been a number of projects before Congress to encourage immigration, and some of these will probably be adopted. The immigrants most wanted are those from the Canary Islands and Northern Spain, and they already constitute a large part of the white labor. They are thrifty, industrious and easily controlled. They are in many respects better than the native Cubans, and are considered the best unskilled laborers of Europe.

Attempts are also being made to bring in Italians. The climate here is about the same as that of Italy, and the Italians have proved a success in Argentina, Brazil and other South American countries. At present, there is a floating immigration to Cuba from Spain which comes and goes every year. The men are brought in for the harvest season, working chiefly in the tobacco districts. It costs them about $40 each for their round trip, and the wages are such that each can save $40 in a single harvest. A similar immigration is carried on between the coffee plantations of Brazil and the wheat fields of Argentina, the men going regularly back and forth.



Railway Conductor, Station Agent, and Rural Policeman

Farm Hands in Cuba.

The greatest demand for labor is on the farms and plantations. Cuba is an agricultural country, and one-fifth of the whole population works on the farms. The island has about 1,500,000 inhabitants, and of these 600,000 are workers of one kind or another. Three hundred thousand do farming, and only a little over 90,000 are engaged in manufacturing. There are less than 10,000 at work in the mines, and four or five thousand employed on the railroads. I have these figures from our Department of Labor, which is my authority for other statements made further on in this article.

Farm hands get all the way from $10 to $20 a month and found. In some places they are paid $1 a day, and at harvest time the wages rise to those of the United States. A great deal of work is done by contract. A man will take care of a certain piece of land on the shares, or keep it clean at so much per acre per month. I know of men who make $30 and $40 a month in this way. They have their children help them in the fields and do the work by the piece or by the day in addition to their contract.

Work on the Shares.

Many of the farms are rented out. Near Havana a tenant gets the use of five acres and a yoke of oxen for half the crop. Two-thirds of the tobacco of Pinar del Rio is raised by tenants, and a great deal of vegetable gardening is carried on on the shares. The land is so fertile that a small tract will produce three or four crops a year. There are tenants raising corn near Havana who cut five crops of fodder a year. They can raise about ten tons to the acre, and a man can, I am told, realize $300 a year from a five-acre crop.

Much of the sugar raising is done on the shares, a tenant taking care of so much cane for a part of the crop, which is disposed of at a sugar mill nearby. Such farming, however, is more profitable in the tobacco regions. The labor is lighter there, and it is such that almost all the members of the families can work in the field.

There is quite a movement now in coffee planting. There is a high tariff on home-grown coffee, and this will probably be continued for many years to come. It takes three years to get the first crop, and during this time the tenants are paid about $50 per annum for attending to a tract of thirty-three acres, with the understanding that after that time the owner of the land and the tenant shall divide the crop equally. The tenant takes care of the plants, he picks the coffee and delivers it at the drying place.

Wages in Cuba.

Wages are high here, considering that Cuba is a part of the West Indies, where the common laborer often gets but 25 cents a day. In Havana such workmen get from $1 a day upward. Outside they receive $1 silver, and at flush times $1 in gold and more. Board is often included in such contracts, but the board consists of rice, jerked beef, beans and little else. The wages are higher in the tobacco regions. These men are paid from $1 to $2 a day, and sometimes even $4 a day. There is a great deal of work in raising tobacco and it requires skilled labor to a large extent. The seeds have to be sowed in beds and the plants transplanted. The plants have to be weeded, wormed and budded, and when the leaves are gathered they must be cured, bunched and baled. Much of this is done by the piece. Five dollars is paid for setting out a thousand plants, and the packers get from $6 to $9 a bale. It is estimated that one can raise and tend about 10,000 seed plants. It requires that many to set out an acre, and to tend five such acres it will keep one family busy. Much of the best tobacco is now raised under shade at a cost of several hundred dollars per acre.

Big Pay of Cigarmakers.

The workers in the cigar factories get big pay. There are thousands of such men in Havana who receive from $2 to $5 a day. They have men to read the newspapers to them while they work whose wages are $10 a day. Indeed, the cigarmakers might be called the aristocrats of manufacturing Cuba.

Some of these men work by the piece and some by the day. The wages vary according to the work and also according to the locality. They are higher in Havana than in the suburbs and other cities scattered over the island.

In these factories the men make considerably more than the women. I visited one in Havana where 400 girls were employed in stripping the leaves from the stems and spreading them out for the cigar rollers. These girls make on the average $2 a day, the pay roll for female labor in that factory alone being about $800 per day. The most of these girls are young. Fully 200 of them were under 18, a few were middle-aged, and one or two were gray-haired.

There are about 1600 women employed in the tobacco trade in this island. Some of them work by the piece, some by the day. The cigars are packed by women and the same is true of cigarettes. In some factories the women earn $12 a week, while in others they make something like $30 a month. In most factories the women and men have separate rooms, and in some no women are employed.

Cuba's New Sawmills.

New sawmills are being started throughout Eastern Cuba. The country is just opening up, and a large number of men are employed in getting out timber. There are hundreds hewing mahogany logs which are carried to the ports on the railroads or down the rivers at the times of the floods. Others are making railroad ties and others sawing lumber and preparing it for shipment. At such work unskilled men are getting $1 a day. The price for cutting down and barking a tree which will make a log thirty feet long and four feet in diameter is 50 cents, and 80 cents is paid for trees above that size. The sawyers in the Havana lumber mills receive from $50 to $100 a month, and the mahogany hewers are paid from $5 to $7 per thousand feet. Engineers are paid $100 a month, while head sawyers get $3 or $4 a day. Wood choppers receive $12 a month and board, and charcoal burners about the same.

There is an enormous business in charcoal here. This furnishes the fuel for domestic uses. All cooking is done over braziers or in little holes in ledges built up against the wall of the kitchen, making a sort of brick stove as it were. The houses seldom have chimneys and only the fewest have cook stoves of the American or European pattern. The charcoal peddler is to be seen everywhere. He carries his fuel in a cart drawn by a mule or horse, and goes from door to door like a huckster.

The Building Trades.

Mechanics of all kinds are paid less here tha United States. The native Cubans are naturally Many of the workmen are jacks of all trades, mechanics would probably say masters of they do excellent work and some of the build by them are magnificent. There are about 14,0 ters in Cuba. They work almost altogether by th of thumb. In building they cut the pieces too then saw or shave them down to fit. When the a roof they will construct the framework on the until they get it of the right dimensions and They will then take it to pieces and reërect it proper position. Such methods are time consum the Cuban carpenter at half price is dear in comp to ours. Good carpenters are paid from $1.50 day in the cities; in the smaller places they much less.

Cuban Masons Versus Americans.

The wages of masons are equally low, but work is quite as costly as ours. The ordinary bricklayer does well if he can put up 500 bricks The American on rough work can lay 1800. Th ority of our masons was shown in the build brewery which was erected in Havana not long gang of bricklayers was imported from the United and was worked side by side with the Cuban brick The Americans laid three times as many bricks as the Cubans. It was a repetition of the made on the Westinghouse Building, at Manchester, land. The contractor there was an American. came disgusted with the slow work of the English layers and imported a large number of American to work side by side with them. Before the Am came, the English bricklayers laid 400 bricks They opened their eyes when the Americans lai 1800 to 2000, and they gradually put on a spurt, brought them up close to the Americans.

Skilled bricklayers in Cuba get $1.50 to $2 a carriers $1 and whitewashers and brushmen $1 ward. All buildings here have thick walls. Th is laid up in the rough and the wall covered with ter or stucco where it faces the street. It is then in bright colors.

Among the Iron Workers.

Most of the public buildings have a great deal about them. Their windows are covered with a work of iron and iron balconies extend out from th ond stories. The material used is wrought iron, making requires considerable skill. The men upon it get daily wages of $3.50 in gold, while the ers and apprentices receive $1 and upward.

There are several machine shops in Cuba. One Havana works about 300 men. It pays its best ics $4 a day, and this wage is received by pattern- molders, foundry men and others. Such men are here. Helpers get $1.50 a day, and apprentices same. Firemen are paid from $1 to $2, and laborers from $1 to $1.50.

Engineers and Railway Men.

There are many engineers employed on the tions. Every big sugar mill has to have one and there must be at the same time mechanics the machinery in order. Many such mills cost hundred thousand dollars for their machinery they require skilled men. Blacksmiths are emp every plantation. They get $30 and upward a

There are about 5000 men at work on the and among them a large number of engineers men. The wages are different on different everywhere they are less than in the United Few of the plantations pay more than $100 a their best engineers, and on the roads the locom gineers get from $60 to $150, and firemen from On the Cuba road a large number of Americans ployed. They are, I suppose, paid better wages.

The most of the railroad conductors are native are polite and efficient. They receive less than neers. Brakemen get about $30 a month and agents from $40 to $60 a month and quarters. age men employed in the traffic service of the C do not earn more than $600 a year, and many much less.

Hours of Work.

In railroad building the natives work under civil engineers. This was the way the Cuba constructed. It had at times 10,000 men, and them as they had never been pushed before. cials once attempted to change the hours of wo customary here to start the day at 6 and work then lay off until 2, when the work goes on the evening. I understand that the Cuba Road tried to extend the morning until noon and hour earlier in the evening. This did not natives, and it had to be abandoned. One that the men start the day on a light meal, come played out if they work after 11 o'clock further food. They like the noon hours for after their 11 o'clock breakfast of rice, jerked plantains with coffee, take a nap, lying backs. In the evening they have a good after it coffee and a smoke. The first breakfast taken before going to work, consists of little a cup of black coffee and some bread. It is short ration for four or five hours of hard wo

Negroes and Chinese.

A large part of the labor here is done by ne lattoes and Chinese. The Chinese were imp ago under contracts to work for eight years at from 20 to 20 cents a day, and the negroes originally came in as slaves. Cuba had slaves as late as 1880, and it is estimated that it has imported more than 1,000,000 negroes during its slave history. At present about one-third of the population is black, and there are many mulattoes. Race antipathy is not so strong as in the United States, the lower classes of Spaniards and negroes having mixed. Indeed, the negro has a higher standing here than in the United States, and, for this reason, it is said that the Cuban negroes do not welcome Americans, fearing they will not be so well treated by them as by the native whites.

Cuban Negroes vs. American Negroes.

A large part of the negro labor is lazy and unreliable. The men are not equal to our negroes. This was found in the work upon the street railroads of Havana, which belong largely to Americans. In relaying the tracks, not long ago, a gang of Cuban negroes was employed, but the work went so slowly that American negroes were brought over and put on the work at about twice the wages received by the Cubans. Both sets of hands were boarded, but the Americans did twice as much work as the Cubans, and they would have been cheap at double the money. This increase of pay, however, caused a strike on the part of the native negroes, and the result was that they got a raise of wages, although the Americans still did the most work.

In closing, I would say that I doubt whether Cuba is a good place just now for the American mechanic or common laborer without money. While the wages are high for Cuba, they are comparatively low as regards the United States. Our workmen cannot live on the ordinary Cuban fare. They will find the hours of work different, and it will take them a long time to become accustomed to Cuban social life. If they have places beforehand, or can come here assured of work in some of the American colonies, they may do well; but otherwise the venture is, to say the least, doubtful.

AN UMBRELLA INTERVIEW.

SELL SAGE AND THE "FREE-LANCE" NEWSPAPER MAN'S EXCHANGE.

In an article on "Writing for a Living," in the World's Work for October, Gilson Willets tells the following anecdote of a memorable interview with Russell Sage:

"In that early morning of my writing life, and in the evening of my day, I interviewed Russell Sage. The editor who gave me the assignment had said: 'Persistence and impudence will do it.' I rang the bell at No. Fifth avenue. Mrs. Sage opened the door, and behind her I saw the gaunt form of Mr. Sage. 'Well, well, what is it?' he asked, rubbing his hands as if they were chilly. I told him what I wanted, and he replied: 'You must excuse me.' Putting on his weather-beaten y, he added: 'I am going out.'

"I told him that I would go out with him. He smiled as he buttoned his faded overcoat and stepped out. It was raining. I asked him to take my umbrella, for it was larger than his, and as we turned into Forty-second street we exchanged umbrellas. He was going, he said, 'just down the street,' to Dr. Paxton's Presbyterian church to prayer meeting. At the church door he said: 'Good evening! we part here.'

"But I, too, went in to prayer meeting. When Mr. Sage bowed his head so did I. The meeting over, I joined him at the church door. I had prayed in that meeting, and now my prayers were answered. For, as we walked back through the rain to his house, Russell Sage answered my questions 'for publication.' We both forgot the exchange of umbrellas, and the skeleton of his umbrella is still in my attic."

Disciplining a Wife.

A PERTINENT AND IMPERTINENT HONEYMOON CONVERSATION.

Contributed by Helen Rowland.

Author of "The Digressions of Polly."

"WHAT on earth——" I began in blank astonishment.

"Sh!" said Polly, holding up a warning finger, smudged with flour.

After an almost hopeless hunt, I had discovered Polly in the kitchen—a place that by no means suits her—with her flowing sleeves tucked up to her shoulders, a huge gingham apron tied over her silk petticoat, and her arms buried in a bowl of sticky biscuit dough.

"Gardenia's husband has been beating her again," she vouchsafed in a whisper, taking one hand out of the dough and placing it affectionately but disastrously on my shoulder. "She's in the next room where I made her lie down after I had bandaged her eye. I'm getting breakfast," and she buried both hands in the dough again, much to my relief.

I took a seat on the kitchen table and dangled my feet over its edge while I watched Polly disapprovingly.

"How very absurd you look," I remarked after a moment's reflection.

Polly jumped.

"I—Mr. Cutting?" she inquired stopping with her hands half-raised from the bowl, and staring at me incredulously.

I gulped. It was the first time since our marriage that Polly had addressed me by my surname.

"I can't see what I've done to deserve this," I mumbled. "It isn't I have been beating my wife, but Bilkins."

"There are more ways of beating a wife than one—Mr. Cutting."

"Ouch!" I cried.

"What is the matter?" inquired Polly quickly.

"It's Cutting, I know—very cutting—but please don't do it again. It hurts."

"It hurts—to be beaten," said Polly shortly.

"But, as I said before," I protested, "it isn't I, but Bilkins——"

"And as I said before, it isn't necessary to lift your fist and bring it down on your wife's pompadour, in order to impress upon her the fact that—that she is objectionable to you. There are subtler and more refined methods," and Polly shot me a look from under her lashes that made her meaning perfectly clear.

"For instance?" I inquired.

Polly patted the dough and gazed at it critically.

"Well, for instance," she continued, when she had decided that it was still too sticky and had added another handful of flour, "you might tell her that she looked absurd, or that she wasn't pretty——"

"Oh, she would never believe that," I protested. "There isn't a woman living so utterly devoid of what they call attractions that she doesn't secretly believe that she would do for a book heroine or would make a hit on the stage."

"She would believe you thought it," insisted Polly, "and that would be very much worse. A woman may know that she is anything but pretty. She may look into her mirror with clear, unshifting eyes and see reflected there an awful nose and an unhealthy complexion that even powder won't help, and stringy hair. Other women may assure her in a thousand gentle, sympathetic ways that she is a fright. But she always preserves an illusion deep down in her heart, that to her husband at least she is outwardly a substitute for Venus. She consoles herself with the thought that his love for her has blinded him to the plain truth and that at least he meant some of the things he said before they were married," and Polly pounded the dough with unnecessary vehemence.

"But," I argued, "he may never have said she was pretty."

"Then he must have hinted at it," announced Polly, "or she would never have married him. A man may tell a woman that she is magnificent and good and gentle and intellectual and possesses all the other virtues, but, if, in the meantime, some other man comes along and compliments the curve of her nose and the color of her eyes—she will marry the other man. No husband can do a more awful thing than to tell his wife she isn't pretty or to fling her physical defects in her face. He might just as well strike out from the shoulder and give her a black eye at once, as Bilkins did Gardenia. Call a woman a fiend, a cat, a fool, if you will—but do not call her a fright—unless you are looking for a delicate upper-class way of beating her."

"How absurd!" I exclaimed thoughtlessly.

Polly shot me a dark glance.

"I hate that word!" she cried.

"Why?" I asked innocently.

"Because," replied Polly, "it's what you think I am."

"How absurd!" I cried—and clapped my hand over my mouth. I was getting hopelessly entangled.

This time Polly did not even look at me; but there was disdain on her lips and in every movement of her fingers which seemed to be getting as fuddled in the dough as I was in my conversation.

"Hem!" I began, with an effort to make a fresh start. "How does Gardenia's beating strike—I mean, how does she take her beating?"

"She appreciates it," said Polly.

"Appre——?"

"Yes. She won't let me say a word against Bilkins, and trimphantly declares that, whatever else he may have done, he 'nivver tuk a foot to her!'"

"It would have been different, I suppose, if he had called her——"

"Absurd!" broke in Polly; "no. The way in which a woman takes her beating depends not in the least upon the kind of beating——"

"Nor the kind of husband."

"The dogged silence, the dull patient endurance shown by the bruised and battered wife of Bilkins is no different in quality from the smiling calm which covers the bruised and battered heart of the wife of the man in the dress suit."

"For shame, Polly! Wife-beating in a dress suit!" Who ever heard of such a thing."

"I've seen it!" declared Polly. "It's the fine, insinuating, scarcely perceptible sort of beating, the beating that is conveyed by a sneer beneath the overdone bow, the uplifted eyebrows after the wife has made what she considers a clever remark, or the polite statement that his lordship will not be home to dinner conveying the full intelligence that he considers dining with the woman who bears his name a distinct bore."

"Taken all in all, it's rather interesting," I remarked; "something like the Verdi or Wagner of wife-beating."

"Exactly," said Polly, "to which the drunken collier's beating is nothing but rag time."

"Or like electrocuting compared to lynching."

Polly was silent.

"In other words," I pursued thoughtfully, "a man can give his wife 'a beating' across the cut glass and silver of the dinner table; he can 'thump 'er in the eye,' between the soup and the fish, and 'smash 'er 'ead' between the olives and the nuts. It's well they like it," I concluded meditatively.

Polly turned, almost upsetting the bowl.

"Who —likes—it?" she inquired scornfully.

"The wives, of course," I replied calmly. "It agrees with them. Go to history and the drama for your proof. Napoleon beat Josephine—in a dress-suit sort of way—but she adored him for it. Petruchio made a worshiping angel out of his Katherine by a little less refined method of regular beatings. The savage who dragged the woman forth by her hair to make a happy home for him was the one who made a devoted slave of her. The Indian wife loves and admires her lord according to the number of her bruises. And if you won't be convinced by history, art, or pre-historic nature—look at Gardenia. Every wife needs a good beating now and then—if the husband would impress upon her the true meaning of his superiority. That is why the American husband is such a small factor in his own house. Beatings are out of fashion here—and wives, as wives—are ruined."

Polly gave a sudden movement of impatience, and just then something happened which I had been expecting all along. The bowl of biscuit dough fell with a crash to the floor.

"Oh!" cried Polly, clasping her doughy hands tragically, "see what you've made me do!"

"I?" I protested.

"Nivver mind, mum," said a good-natured voice at the door, where a rotund person with one eye bandaged stood watching us, "it's Oi thet'll git the breakfust fer ye now. Ye poor little darlint! And how perfectly reediculous ye do look in thet get-up and wid yer hands all over flour. How on airth cud ye make her do it, Mr. Cuttin'?" she added, looking at me accusingly.

"I didn't!" I cried.

"He did!" said Polly. "He was beating me, Gardenia."

"An' it's the gintlemin as know how to ill-trate their wives!" cried Gardenia, looking at me scornfully. "Did he take a foot to ye, honey?"

"N-not exactly," said Polly.

"Bilkins nivver tuk a foot to me in his loife!" announced Gardenia proudly, while she picked up the pieces of the fallen bowl and divested Polly of her apron.

I caught Mrs. Cutting up in my arms and carried her out of the kitchen.

"Come along," I said, "and show me the bruises. I want to kiss them and make them well."

"How absurd!" said Polly.

"The American husband is always absurd," I agreed.

"Absurdly nice," said Polly.

"And absurdly devoted."

"And absurdly handsome."

"And absurdly slavish and browbeaten and tyrannized over."

"By whom?" inquired Polly, as I dropped her down on a hassock.

"By an absurd——"

Polly dared me with her eyes.

"By an absurd——

"Go on, Mr. Cutting!"

"By an absurdly pretty wife." I finished, catching Polly under the chin and kissing her on top of her pompadour.

GOOD REASON.

Representative Adamson of Georgia says that when he was judge of his county court a fellow was before him charged with having stolen a pair of pantaloons—they call them "britches" in Georgia. There were several witnesses, but the evidence was rather meager, and the accused was acquitted. He was told that he could go, but he remained in his seat. His lawyer, to whose successful defense he owed his liberty, hinted to him that he was free to depart, but he didn't budge.

"I don't want to go," said the fellow.

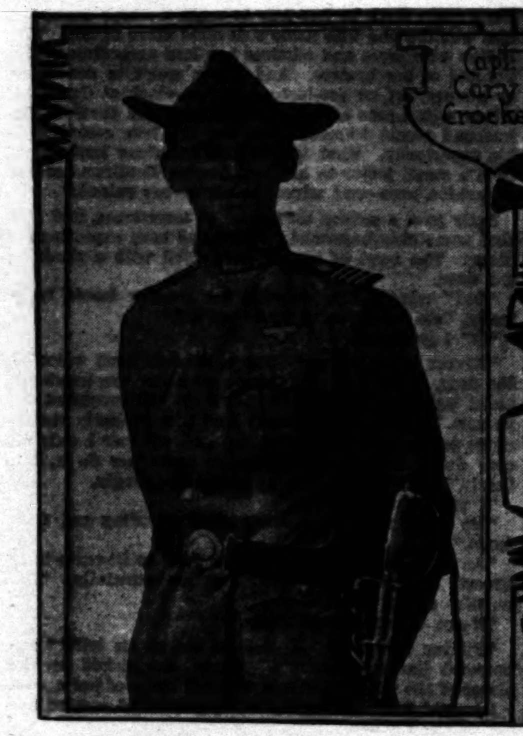
BRAVE DEEDS DONE BY AMERICANS IN THE ISLANDS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MANILA, September, 1905.—The effort to stamp out Ladronism in the Philippines has produced a number of heroes whose exploits were equal to Funston's sensational feat of penetrating the jungle and capturing Aguinaldo in his lair. The last American to distinguish himself is Cary I. Crockett, a captain of constabulary. This young man is from Virginia and comes well by his fighting spirit, being a descendant of Davy Crockett, of Alamo fame. He came to the Philippines as a wagon master in Gen. Lawton's division.

He has performed valiant service in a number of expeditions against the outlaws. On the last of these he was absent eleven months, during which time he "hiked" 2000 miles through the tangled fastnesses of Samar, the unruly island which the Spaniards never conquered, and which the Americans have not wholly succeeded in pacifying. About half of these Samarites are fanatical desperadoes, and the question of their subjection is one of the problems which confronts the administration.



Young Crockett was sent into the country with a small detachment of constabulary to penetrate a district infected with hostiles. There are no roads in Samar and when the troops are sent after these bandits the warning is spread by means of sentries who blow conch horns from the hill tops. By this means of signaling the news of the approach of an enemy, the alarm is echoed over the valleys for hundreds of miles in a few hours' time.

Fierce Fight in Jungle.

Crockett and his men soon found themselves in a deserted country, but they held pluckily to the trail. The young American and his faithful native soldiers suffered every conceivable hardship. They waded in mud to their waists; were thrown into streams by capsized boats, and marched many weary days and weeks with wet feet. As a consequence half of the command were soon ill from fever and rheumatism. Only on three occasions were they able to corner the outlaws and force a fight. Once when the command was separated, a force of 200 Ladrones was surprised by a squad of thirteen of the constabulary. By the time Crockett, with only sixteen men, arrived to reinforce them, eight of the original thirteen had been killed.

The fighting which took place on this occasion was of the most desperate character. The American was in the heart of the jungle, miles from the nearest army post, his support consisting of only a small, worn-out, bedraggled force of Filipino soldiers. Yet the outlaws were finally repulsed, leaving seventy-three of their number dead on the field. Crockett did not lose a single man of his squad of sixteen reinforcements who had saved the situation. That the plucky Virginian was in the thick of the fight is shown by the fact that he was shot and cut four times and grazed twice. He himself killed eleven of his antagonists. If he had fallen during the fight his men would have been annihilated.

Had to Eat Snakes.

Their greatest hardships came later. There was no doctor to treat their wounds, which they had to sew up with hemp. Before they could reach the coast their rations gave out and for fifteen days they suffered terribly from the tortures of starvation. At first they tried to get along by eating roots and bark, and by making salt from sea water. Bats, hawks and lizards soon became acceptable food. They managed to exist for several days on the meat obtained from a shark and a devil fish. Finally, when despairing, they encountered two large, fifteen-foot snakes, which they proceeded to kill and eat. Crockett eventually delivered his brave command through to the coast without losing a single man, except those killed in the fight. Although the expedition ended several months ago, Capt. Crockett has not fully recovered from his wounds. He is considered one of the most dauntless men that ever served in the Philippines, and has been given a medal for his bravery.

Lieut. Edward Y. Miller is another American who has won renown in the Philippine service. Miller is Governor of the province of Paragua, the most isolated portion of the Philippine archipelago. He, too, has successfully led native troops against the renegades. He is the Governor of a zone containing 200 small islands, the total land area of which is 6000 square miles. In this province there are 50,000 savages who speak ten different languages, yet the total white population consists of only thirteen Americans.

Never Had a White Visitor.

Type of Filipino Agitator

These exiles are Gov. Miller and his secretary, two constabulary officers, three school teachers, one custom's inspector, and three discharged soldiers who have embarked in the lumber business. The only white women in the province are the wives of the Governor and the custom's inspector. These two ladies live 150 miles apart. Gov. Miller's capital is 100 miles from the nearest port of any other province of the Philippines, and is 275 miles from Manila. Although the Millers have been in Paragua three years they have never had a white visitor. The people of their islands know almost nothing about the ways of civilization, because the Spaniards made no attempt to occupy this portion of the archipelago when they were in possession here.

The outlaws of the Philippines, called pulajans, ladrones, and bandoleros, have long existed in this part of the world. They rarely molest white people, devoting their energies to preying upon helpless members of their own race. The statement has been made that a white man could walk from one end of the islands to the other with perfect safety, and while there are a few localities, like Samar and Mindanao, that are unsafe, they are exceptions. A short time ago two prominent capitalists from America, who contemplate making railway investments here, were in the interior alone for weeks, entirely traversing the proposed route without being molested in any way. Yet since my arrival in Manila a band of outlaws shot up a village within three miles of the city limits.

Seeing that the guerrillas do not interfere with the whites, the question may arise in the mind of the reader why the officials pay any attention to them. Until they are suppressed it will be almost impossible for that portion of the rural native population which would engage in peaceful pursuits to do so with any degree of safety. The outlaws demand tribute from a community, and if this is not forthcoming they down upon it to murder, loot and burn.

As Cruel as the Turk.

The atrocities the desperadoes commit on th sions are too horrible to describe. They dash the streets murdering men, women and chil They visit special vengeance upon all who the authorities in any way, cutting off their ing out their eyes, and perpetrating other too horrible to mention. archipelago are still enshrouded in the ignorance and barbarism that marked the lives of their forefathers. The independent rural natives are preyed upon by the bandits and their accomplices, the local bosses known as caciques; while laborers living on most of the great plantations are like so many serfs. The owners of these estates often treat their employés with heartless brutality.

Pitiful Plight of Serfs.

An American told me of one case which is typical. A man forty-two years of age was sentenced to prison on the charge of having killed a carabao belonging to his master. This man was born on the plantation and had never been outside its boundaries until he was brought into court to be tried on the trumped-up charge. He had never received a penny for the servitude of a lifetime, his only compensation being a supply of poor cotton clothing and a measure of rice. On account of hardship and overwork his health had been undermined so that he was of no more use as a laborer, and his comrades were forced to swear that he had maliciously killed a carabao, which in reality had died of old age. Being of no further use to his master the latter had, without honor or pity, used the courts to get rid of him.

Slavery is generally brought about by a poor man becoming indebted to a plantation owner. No matter how trivial the sum may be, if the debtor enters the employ of the rich man to discharge his obligation by personal service, he is doomed. The master will see to it that the debt is never discharged. The debtor and his whole family will be forced to continue in the employ of the feudal lord until their servitude becomes permanent. Considering that there are millions of poor people who have been subjected to such humiliating and [illegible] toil for hundreds of years, it is no wonder they are not enthusiastic about work, and that hundreds of them eventually find their way to the mountains to join the outlaw bands.

[illegible] to Outlawry.

It is said that one of the noted bandolero chiefs, who is now causing a great deal of trouble in one of the [illegible] provinces, was formerly an independent farmer who turned bandit because the local hemp buyer, who was a cacique, continually cheated him out of the fruits of his toil. This farmer would carry his little [illegible] on his back over mountain trails for miles, only to receive a few cents for it, when in reality it was worth many dollars. If he tried to sell to anyone but the [illegible] he was punished. As a consequence of such treatment he gave up trying to make a peaceful living, and on more than one occasion has visited terrible vengeance for his wrongs.

In explaining the workings of the cacique system, a country school teacher told me how the edibles were secured to provide a banquet for the first Taft party that went through the islands, and the same will apply to the delegation now touring the archipelago. Every native within miles was assessed a chicken or a pig, or some item of produce. Enough supplies were raised in this way to feed fifty times the number of people included among the guests. The surplus was put up for sale in the market and the proceeds pocketed by the [illegible] officials.

The travesty of the situation is apparent. The [illegible] by the well-meaning Americans were followed by [illegible] from the seemingly enthusiastic natives, not one of whom dared to hint that the contents of the [illegible] table had been procured from their slender [illegible] by coercion. In the Philippines, more than anywhere in the world, things are not what they seem. It is not safe to accept surface indications. The members of the official party could not be blamed for being enthusiastic about their reception, yet the invisible [illegible] of injustice and intrigue was all about [illegible] strong and defiant as in the darkest days of [illegible] misrule.

[illegible] are Encouraged.

The poor countryman has no conception of the idea of liberty or personal privilege. He is as much a slave [illegible] today as ever. If he dares to rebel against those who hold him in bondage they have the power to [illegible] him in more ways than one. The government will have to suppress the rule of the petty bosses and feudal lords in the Philippines before there will be peace and prosperity in this benighted land. Striking proof of the wretched state of affairs is shown by a great case now engaging the attention of the courts of Manila. The richest plantation owner in the Philippines is being tried for encouraging outlawry.

This man owns a principality consisting of many acres of land, upon which there are thousands of employés and countless herds of cattle and carabao. It is known to the authorities that he had given aid to the ladrones in that locality. The evidence brought forth at this trial revealed how deep-rooted and [illegible] this system has become. This millionaire admitted that it was cheaper to pay the bandits a [illegible] sum not to molest his stock, or people, than to refuse their demands and suffer loss from their depredations. How hopeless is the case of the average man when the richest and most powerful citizen of the country is found yielding to the influence of [illegible].

Another case was found where a rich plantation owner had kept a band of ladrones in his employ in order to keep other thieves away from his locality. This after [illegible] years of American rule! Will the reader [illegible] that the officials deserve much sympathy in their attempt to establish law and order in a country with such systems as these?

[illegible] Must be Stopped.

It should be said once and for all that the continuation of brigandage in the Philippines cannot be charged to American misrule. These uprisings, instead of being revolts against the government, are native quarrels. Although outlawry in the islands was undoubtedly conceived by abused natives who had no other way of avenging their wrongs, it has now become an inviting calling for shiftless dare-devils, who are abetted by unscrupulous men of power, some for the sake of plundering the population, others because they have not the courage to resist its demands.

Where the American administration has erred has been in the exercise of too much patience and tolerance. Although this is true, the officials could hardly have done otherwise. President McKinley's mild policy of pacification had to be thoroughly tried. That soft measures cannot suppress the outlaw, and his confederate, the boss, is now understood. The strong arm of authority must rescue the serf from bondage, and protect his life and property. There is no use to build and educate by day, if organized cut-throats are allowed to burn and kill by night. Unless the American people can be reconciled to the drastic measures that will be necessary to wipe out ladronism, the success of American rule here will be hindered for years to come.

Because of Macaulay.

THE RIFT IN THE LUTE AND HOW IT WAS MENDED.

By a Special Contributor.

THEIR honeymoon had flown past like a dream—just like all other honeymoons—and now Mr. and Mrs. Clemens DeForrest had returned from their wedding tour to the new suburban home.

By their united efforts the couple had succeeded in establishing order in the cosy little rooms of the bungalow. Geraldine was sitting on the floor, Turkish fashion, dusting the books and placing them one by one on the pretty weathered-oak book shelves. Clemens was reposing in the depths of the Morris chair that the boys of '99 had given them for a wedding present. He held the morning paper in his hand, but his eyes rested admiringly on Geraldine.

"I say, Jerry, you look cuter in that rig than anything I've seen you in yet!" he excialmed, as he surveyed the white ruffled apron that enveloped her from chin to toe. "It's real becoming."

Jerry looked up quickly with a roguish sparkle in her eyes, pushed back the little frilled dust cap, and said in a tantalizing tone: "Oh, so you enjoy seeing me work already, do you! Well, Mr. Clemens DeForrest, you may just sit down here and help dust these books!"

The toss of those adorable curls, the coquettish pucker of those rosy lips, the flash in those brown eyes, were challenge enough for Clemens. In two seconds he was beside her on the floor, though it cannot be said that he assisted much with the dusting. Rosy lips are more inviting than dusty books. A pair of little white hands are preferable to a dust cloth.

"Oh, Clemie! Such a silliness! Do you suppose that I can dust when you are holding my hands? Give me that book, please, that volume of Macaulay."

She took the book as he handed it to her, dusted it, then opened it carelessly and scanned the page before her.

"It seems like ages since I read Macaulay. How familiar this is!"

"What is it?" asked Clem, glancing over her shoulder at the page.

"I don't know. Wait until I read a little farther. Oh, of course! it's the essay on Warren Hastings. Here, put it on the shelf. I hate the very thought of Hastings. He was such a despicable tyrant."

"Don't say that, little girl," said Clem. "Hastings was one of the noblest fellows England ever knew."

"Clemens Douglas DeForrest! How can you say such a thing about a man who was a cold-blooded murderer? He was a villain, a disgrace to his country and its history. He was worse than worthless!"

"My dear girl! If you would refer to the history of India, you would find that Hastings was not guilty of the terrible crimes with which Macaulay and Burke and various other prejudiced writers have charged him. Again I say, Hastings was undoubtedly England's greatest statesman. Macaulay is not authority on Hastings." Clem spoke with conviction.

"Why do you insist upon saying that England's greatest criminal was her greatest statesman? You are telling a fib every time you say it."

Clemens sprang to his feet and looked down at her. His face was flushed. "Thanks for the knock, but in the future kindly oblige me by keeping silent if you are in total ignorance of the subject under discussion."

"Without another word he turned and left the room, slamming the door as he passed out. Geraldine heard him walk down the path and turn into the avenue.

She piled the books on the shelves upside down, crosswise and sidewise, with a vengeance.

"The very idea of his telling me that I am ignorant! He might as well have said that I didn't know as much as he. Oh, dear! How could he be so mean? But I might have expected it. All men are just alike—the horrid things! Oh, why did I ever get married! What shall I do now?"

Her eyes were full to overflowing, and she shook with a heartrending sob.

"Oh, I know what I'll do!" she thought as if by inspiration, "I'll just call up Molly and get her to come over. She'll be able to tell me what to do."

She stepped to the telephone. "Red 4723, please. . . . Hello! Is that you, Molly? . . . Oh, yes, I'm fine, but say, won't you please come over as soon as possible? I have a problem for you to solve. . . . No, I'm not in trouble exactly, but . . . Yes, that's it! We had awful quarrel, and he treated me simply terrible!" she sobbed. "You can't? Molly Burton! What shall I do? Well, all right, dear. Thanks for the advice. All right. Good-by."

In the meantime Clemens had walked over to the Burton residence in hopes of "talking it over" with Chester (Molly's brother), but Chester was away to the city, so there was nothing left for him to do but return home to supper and Jerry.

"Gosh, what a little tyrant she is! She'll lead me a happy chase, all right. By George! I don't believe that I ever loved her. It was just her pretty face. She's just like all women—too spiteful and mean for any good use!"

When he reached home, supper was on the table. It was a cold meal! Cold—in every sense of the word. He imagined that Jerry's hand trembled as she dished out the salad, but one glance at her haughty countenance forbade such a thought to enter his mind. The meal progressed in silence until Jerry glanced into the mirror on the sideboard and saw her reflection.

The threatening brow struck her fancy as being ridiculous, and she had a hard time in repressing a smile. Clem noticed this, and decided that she was ready to plead guilty and beg his pardon if given the opportunity, so he relaxed slightly and remarked: "This salad is good, Jerry. Lemon in it, isn't there?"

Instantly every shadow of a smile vanished from Jerry's eyes.

She raised her head and replied sarcastically: "In the future, kindly oblige me by keeping silent if you are in total ignorance of the subject under discussion."

Clemens DeForrest held his peace!

After supper Jerry prepared to take the usual evening stroll. What difference did it make if Clem wasn't along?

She sauntered slowly down the avenue toward the pine grove. At the same time Clem started off in the opposite direction.

Jerry began to think over the events of the day, as she strolled along; so did Clem.

"Thoughts upon thoughts a countless throng, Rushed countless thousand thoughts along."

She wondered if he intended to apologize. He wondered if she intended to apologize. "What right had he to tell her that she was ignorant?" she asked herself. "What right had she to say that he was lying and dispute his word?" he asked himself.

She gazed over toward the hills and knew that somewhere beyond them was the university with its numerous halls and colleges. How dear they all seemed to her now! What wouldn't she give to be climbing the stairs of Old North Hall once more, with the other girls?

She thought of the days when Clem and she had walked across the campus together. He loved her then, and she had loved him, but their love was a thing of the past. Was it? The very thought made her shudder. "Impossible! Of course I love him yet—but does he love me? Oh, why did I quarrel with him? How could I be so mean, when I love him so? Will he ever forgive me?"

She was in a frenzy of fear. Was it too late? Heaven forbid! She would find him and beg his pardon. Her feet flew even faster than her thoughts as she retraced her steps along the old path.

Meanwhile, Clem had permitted his thoughts to wander back into those "rare old, fair old, golden days." He thought of the evening when he held Jerry's hand for the first time. It was under the old oaks. They had loved each other then. Did they love each other now? "Heaven knows I love her more than ever. Oh, why did I quarrel with her? How could I be so cruel to her, when I love her so? I have injured her feelings irreparably! Oh, Jupiter, but I'm a brute! I deserve to be kicked! Why doesn't someone horsewhip me? She won't forgive me now. I'm too late."

His face was flushed as he turned and hurried down the avenue.

Geraldine was standing in the shadow of the large maple with her hands on the gate, when two larger ones were laid gently over them, and she was enfolded in the arms that she knew so well.

"Jerry," his voice trembled with emotion.

"Oh, Clemie, I'm so sorry!"

His cheek was pressed softly against her face. Her head was on his shoulder. Again, Clem found attraction in rosy lips.

"Poor little girl! It was all my fault."

ANNIE L. ROGERS.

PERSIAN PEACOCK THRONE.

Two Frenchmen, who have just returned from Teheran, and who while there were privileged to see the Persion peacock throne, thus describe it:

"A sign was given that the gates of paradise were to be opened for us. We were in the throne room, a room containing jewels and gold that would have astonished Aladdin. The carpets were of silk, the chairs of gold—there were fifty golden chairs. We sat in one chair with back, arms and legs studded with pearls, and turquoises and emeralds worth £100,000.

"We stood by and discussed and marveled over one of the seven wonders of the world—the peacock throne. It is the size of a massive bed, with seven legs. It is entirely of gold, chiseled and incrusted with thousands of precious stones. The two steps, sides and legs glisten with jewels. The raised back is nothing but a mass of gems, with a scintillating circular star on the top, and two little birds, which can only by courtesy be described as peacocks, on either side. It is the most costly throne in the world and is said to be worth £3,000,000.

"In the throne room there were bowls full of pearls. There was a globe containing seventy-five pounds of gold and 51,366 gems that cost £320,000 to make and is valued at £947,000. The sea is of emeralds, Persia of turquoises, Africa of rubies, India of amethysts and England and France of diamonds. There were besides pearl-bedecked gowns, superb tiaras, jeweled swords and heaps of uncut stones—an array of wealth amounting to £50,000,000."

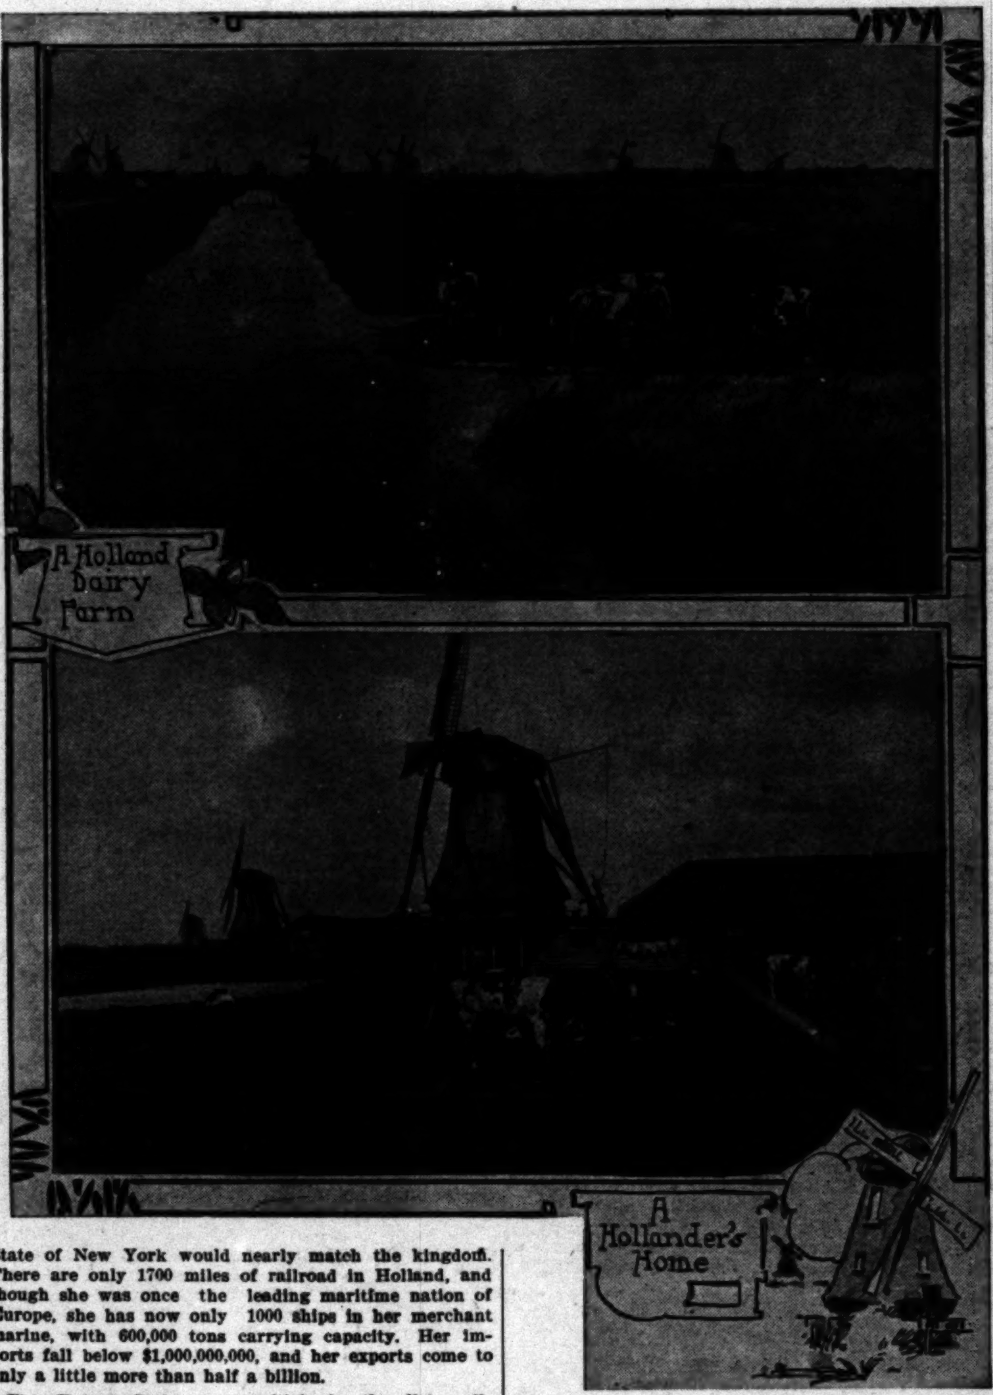
Life in Old Holland.

HOW THE DUTCH LIVE AND MOVE AND HAVE THEIR BEING.

By a Special Contributor.

SURELY we ought to be interested in old Holland. Her daring sailor, Hendrik Hudson discovered the river called after his name at whose mouth is the metropolis of our hemisphere, and I think perhaps the most beautiful stream on earth. I have seen none to compare with the Hudson. The Dutch settled in, not only New York, but parts of New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Delaware.

Holland today is a small country, and does not figure as in the days of Van Tromp, who nailed a broom to his masthead as a threat to sweep England from the seas, or in the days of Van Riter. There are less than 13,000 miles in the kingdom of beautiful Queen Wilhelmina, and the population is only a little over 5,000,000. The State of New York would nearly match the kingdom. There are only 1700 miles of railroad in Holland, and though she was once the leading maritime nation of Europe, she has now only 1000 ships in her merchant marine, with 600,000 tons carrying capacity. Her imports fall below $1,000,000,000, and her exports come to only a little more than half a billion.



The United States comes high in the list, selling to Holland $100,000,000 to $120,000,000 worth of goods a year, only Germany outranking us, and our sales being one-eighth of all the imports into the kingdom. We do not treat her as well as she treats us, for we take only $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 of her goods, ranking fourth among her customers. But little of what we sell Holland is for her own account. It passes through her ports, going mostly to Germany.

What We Sell the Netherlands.

Among our exports to Holland wheat comes first with a value of about $12,000,000 and flour $2,000,000. Then copper comes worth about $10,000,000. Very little of this is used in Holland. Petroleum is third with a value of $6,000,000, and then oleomergarine and lard with $5,000,000 each. Cottonseed oil and oil cake combined amount to $7,000,000 and raw cotton from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. The meat bill comes to $1,500,000, and tobacco to over that figure. The tobacco is in a raw state.

When it comes to our purchases it will be seen that few of us have much direct interest in the bill. Diamonds, cut, come to $7,500,000; uncut to $1,700,000, and leaf tobacco, mostly Sumatra wrappers for fine cigars, to $3,800,000.

These two items are in value half of all our imports from Holland.

The cut diamonds are not set. The Dingley tariff law settled that by putting a stiff duty on the manufactured article, and thus creating an important industry at home where the gold and silver are mined. And by the way, this business of jewelry has seen a great change in the last thirty years. Paris is a great center still for these articles of high luxury, but not almost the exclusive center it was thirty years ago. And thereby hangs a tale. After the Franco-Prussian war, when the terrible Parisian Commune broke loose for the last time and committed horrible excesses, the perpetrators of these crimes were known to the police, who, although powerless to make arrests, noted those who set fire to buildings, wrecked property and took life. When order was restored, these human wolves knew full well that they were "spotted," and took flight. They fled in large numbers to England; many sought shores further away. Thousands of them were skilled workmen in many trades, or, rather arts. They took their skill with them, and having to make a living, set up shops in London, New York, and many other places. So London is today a great center of the jewelry trade, and diamonds are set in New York as skillfully as in Paris or Amsterdam.

Holland's Industries.

The Dutch have always been good sailors and good shipbuilders. While at present the merchant marine of the country is so small compared to that of the great mercantile nations many ships are built in Holland for sale to the world at large. Europe is a great place for feather beds. In Holland, Germany, France and Belgium few beds are considered complete without their feathers. Besides the mattress full of feathers into which you seem to sink almost to suffocation, there is a big bolster under the head of the mattress. This is as big as three or four pillows. Then come the pillows, fat, square things, twice as large as we generally use. The effect is to make you half sit up and only half recline. The pillows are so square that it is impossible to adjust them perfectly under your head. Last of all is the foot cover of down or feathers, and this is half as large as a feather bed. The foot cover is the only part of the outfit which commends itself to my mind. The feather bed is too soft. It has a sort of flabby, effem The bolster is entirely superfluous from my view, and the pillows are entirely too large, square shape is not right, but of a cold night, mercury is about the freezing point of water is full to saturation with dampness, creating a side through which an electric light struggles culty and utter lack of success, the foot cover, if of light down, is a sure-enough comfort. the place to find all these things made of live feathers in perfection. They are all varieties which claim their presence in loud tones, and need no light to discover them. I have to plead to the taste of liking them all without exception, although impression is that those made for home consumption stronger than those usually sent to the United But the Edam and similar Holland cheese are the best on earth. By the way, the Edam cheese, made in round, red balls, is not the very salt know as Edam in the United States which is saloons to create a desire for more beer.

Of course Holland is a great country for choco all the products of cocoa. Since the days of her greatness when Dutch ships traded with both the raw cocoa has been brought here in great quantities these people were among the first to bring the of the material to perfection. Dutch chocolates sold in all parts of the world as they were of home the variety of ways in which it is served cake shops is bewildering. These preparations tempting, but I wonder how the natives manage so much of it.

With Sumatra from which to draw raw leaf, der Holland is a great center for the cigar trade products of the cigar factories are sent broadcast the world. The damp climate keeps the leaf in working order, and no difficulty is experienced ling it. Labor is so cheap that it is easy to with any country not protected by its tariff.

Harvesting the Sea.

Fishing flourishes all along the west coast of from the Straits of Gibraltar to the furthest Sweden and Norway. Holland does her full harvesting the sea. The fish markets are a astonishment. Where meat is so scarce and fish ily procured the amount of the latter consumed ing, and such a picture as the fish markets pres in the morning as a whole city comes forth to fishermen just in from the sea, and secure the the day! Preserved in one way or another, much exported. Smoked salmon from Holland is sold at $1 per pound. It seems to me as if Columbia and Alaska salmon cured in this way should find ket here in Western Europe, where such prices

The distilleries and breweries of Holland form important part of its industries. Gin and beer great products. No portion of the globe is a Holland gin. It is a very mild be no means equal to that produced at Munich noted centers in Germany. In Holland, mild tails as cheap as 3 cents a quart bottle. In cheapest is 4 cents; this is American currency.

How the People Fare.

The manner of life, the wages earned, the clothing, the houses of the common people in naturally differ a little from those of other tries.

The working people toil for ten or twelve hou sixty to seventy-two hours a week, and some ductors on the railroads have a week of up four hours. The best bricklayers do not mak a week for the sixty hours. For hod carriers is high wages. Stone masons and their attend terers and their tenders, cigar-makers and pations are paid $4 to $4.50 a week. Good got about $5, and their strikers $3.75. The conductors who work eighty-four hours a week are paid about $5. Weavers make $3.75 and common laborers $3.25.

The plain people in the country live in small houses, or in the city in small apartments often having only two rooms. The front one serves as kitchen, eating and living-room, and the whole family often sleep in the one back room. Those whose income permits of it have three and in some cases four rooms. The only difference is the family divides into two or three sleeping-rooms. The main one is in nearly all cases used as kitchen, eating and living-room. The two-roomed apartment or house costs 40 to 50 cents a week rent.

Many a family composed of man, wife and two or three children live in two such rooms. Their income is short of $1 a day, often much short of that. In the short winter days the income will be nearly cut in two. If it amounts to 60 cents a day it is considered good. With a gross income of $250 a year he will pay $60 for rent, $20 for clothing, $150 for food and fuel; for sick fund in some society about $10. There is $240 gone, and with $10 to spare he is happy. I have given a higher rate of wages than the average. Many women make cigars for as low as $1.25 to $2 a week. Factory girls work for as low as $1 a week.

GEORGE W. BURTON.

WHY IVORY IS EXPENSIVE.

Tusk Buyers in this Country on the Jump for Bargains.

[Jewelers' Weekly:] It is a curious fact that notwithstanding the marked advance in the price of ivory in recent years the volume of sales has not diminished, but has actually increased. Tusks have been selling in the markets of London and Antwerp at an advance of about 50 per cent. over the prices charged a few years ago.

The causes which have led to this advance in price are very interesting. It is not due to any artificial manipulation of the markets in the great centers, nor is it due to increased demand or scarcity of elephants. For the cause we must look to the heart of Africa where a spirit of genuine commercialism is manifesting itself among the natives. Their wealth is in ivory, and they have learned to value it as such. Indeed, the wealth of leading men among the natives was once commonly counted in tusks.

They would say of a dusky capitalist of this kind that he was worth so many tusks, just as one in this country would say that a man is worth so many dollars. Of course, that was a natural phase in the development of a primitive people. The red man estimated his riches in wampum, and the Laplander in furs. They often would part with their possessions for a few beads or trinkets. They did not know the value of a dollar. Certainly it can no longer be said of the natives of Africa that they do not know the value of money. They have learned. Thus it comes that the "heathen in his blindness" is not so blind as has been supposed.

Increased transportation facilities and telegraphic communication have brought Africa into closer touch with the rest of the world. It is said that a native may be working 1000 miles in the interior, and yet he can tell you the cash value of tusks in the Antwerp or London market.

Of course, it is a far cry from Africa to the United States, and yet there is a very good market for ivory in this country. Alert and enterprising buyers are always on the lookout for opportunities to pick up good tusks. If Bostock or Barnum & Bailey ever chance to have an elephant die on their hands in this country, it is not a dead loss to them by any means. It is likely that an energetic buyer of ivory will be bidding for it before the carcass is cold.

American manufacturers confine themselves mainly, but not exclusively, to such workings of ivory as are suitable for toilet goods. The process of manufacture is a delicate one, requiring considerable skill. A tusk weighing, say, from seventy-five to 125 pounds, is attached to a moving table, on which it is sawed into plates. During this stage the tusk has to be kept thoroughly wet down to prevent burning, as ivory is very brittle and a good deal of heat is generated by the friction. From these plates or flat pieces various rough shapes are sawed out, acording to the forms or designs which are to be perfected later on. In sawing out these shapes care has to be taken to avoid spots or blemishes in the ivory, and at the same time guard against wasting valuable material. To be able to do this good judgment and discrimination is one test of a good workman in ivory, and the number of men who are competent to do this kind of work is very limited. Indeed, ivory working seems to be a "select" sort of craft, into which but few are initiated.

ENGLISH HOUSE GARDENS.

American children learn that London is a center of trade with a dense population, and they grow up with the idea that it is a mart perpetually overhung with fog and smoke. To have a private residence in New York City is a luxury possible only to the rich, and none but a multimillionaire could live in a house with a garden.

When the American girl, therefore, went to have tea with some friends in moderate circumstances she was surprised to find them living in a large house with a garden in front and a spacious one in the rear. Tea was served in the garden.

Her mind reverted to a suburban house at home that had about as much land as this English one. The "back yard" was used as a drying place for clothes. The front yard was a smoothly clipped, flower bedded lawn kept for show, so open to the street that it was of no use to the family.

"But it is not like home," said the American girl, wondering if everyone in London had a garden or a terrace or a park.—[London Telegraph.

The Pasteur Institute.

A Visit to the Famous Experiment Hospital.

By a Special Contributor.

BEFORE leaving the French capital, I decided to pay a visit to the famous institute of Pasteur, which has lately been the Mecca for the nineteenth century biologists of all nations.

The buildings are located out in the suburbs of Paris, in a neighborhood so quiet and isolated that it is difficult to realize it a part of the great, noisy French metropolis.

These buildings are quite new, and reared in the stiff and monotonous style of a too scrupulous symmetry, so characteristic of the French architecture. Surrounding the buildings on all sides extend large, unvaried, tiresome lawns. These new hospitals are not half as interesting or pleasant-looking as the old ones inside the city, which are less imposed upon by a too scrupulous regularity and exactness. The attractiveness of the older hospitals is furthermore enhanced by being surrounded by large, shadowy parks, with their tall, venerable-looking birches and lindens, behind which are glimpses of old medieval Paris, with its dusky squares of gray, seven-story houses.

A young man comes to the door and lets us in. "This young man," says Dr. Eskilsen—the Danish bacteriologist, who ciceroned us through the institution—"is probably the only janitor in the world who takes care of his own statue."

"? ? ?"

"Well, he was once a patient himself, and the first one cured in this institution from rabies. He was bitten while trying to save his brother from the attacks of a raving canine. This struggle is immortalized in the group of bronze you see yonder in the lawn, and the lad himself, here, posed as model."

We entered a spacious hall where a large number of people sat quietly on a long row of chairs lined up against the stone-paneled walls.

"Are all these people rabies-stricken, and waiting to be overtaken by the horrid desire to bite each other?"

"By no means. They know better, as all of them have been treated and cured. Come this way, and I will show you the treatment."

In an adjoining room is found a physician sitting in a chair on the middle of the floor, just punching a long awl to the very shaft into a man's stomach. No blood was visible, nor did the man scream or sink to the floor in a dead swoon.

"The adipose tissue," remarked Dr. Eskilsen, "is so thick in the abdominal region that the bowels sustain no injury from the treatment."

"What is the object of that punching process?"

"Why, he is injecting an anti-poisonous preparation into the patient, and the somewhat unusually large syringe is a late improvement which has been found very effective. The operation gives rise to no pain whatever."

As to this latter statement, however, I had my private doubts, and have them yet, though as far as the men were concerned I saw no positive signs of pain. But my doubts were born from the effects the injection had upon the women, who frequently moaned, and the children, who cried as if they were butchered.

"Is it serum you inject?" I asked the physician who did the punching.

He gave me a disdainful look, and without taking any further notice of me, continued to punch holes in the variety of stomachs presented to him.

"No, it is not serum," whispered Dr. Eskilsen; "on the contrary, it is the rabies poison itself, obtained from the spinal marrow of diseased dogs, after having first been somewhat weakened through exposure to the sun. When injected in the human body, it at once calls forth a reactive agent called anti-toxin. As each subsequent injection is held in a stronger solution than the next foregoing, it follows that the patient, after a few injections, can stand the poison in its original undiluted strength. This signalizes the triumph of the treatment and the recovery of the patient."

"What, then, do you understand by serum?"

"Serum is the natural anti-toxin prepared not in the laboratory of the chemist, but in nature's own laboratory, the animal body. It is generally in the organism of the horse that the biologist selects a field for his vital experiments. We will now go and watch the animals."

It looked as if we had stepped inside a menagerie. The floor was covered with baskets of all sizes, and each of them served as a cage for one or more animals. There were rabbits, chickens, guinea pigs and pigeons. Every animal had a label fastened to its ear on which was recorded the name and character of the anti-toxin culture and the time the bacilli were let loose.

The poor creatures seemed happy. They were well cared for; had good food, and plenty of it. They jumped around in their cages, oblivious to the dark fate awaiting them. They received medicine to counteract the diseases which are continually inoculated on them—thereby giving the savants an opportunity to test the capacity of science to grapple with death, after the latter is given a longer or shorter start in the race.

Representative men of science of all nations put in their daily appearance to watch the races and calculate the ominous chances.

And the little animal jumping about in its cell, indulging in a good meal, gives no heed to the keen, clever human eyes that watch it with painstaking interest through the roof of the basket. Nor can it interpret the sinister significance contained in the little pasteboard ticket attached to its ear, and is utterly unconscious of the fact that its veins and arteries are turned into a race track where life and death in mortal earnest are trying to outspeed each other.

Gradually, as the relentless struggle increases in intensity, the physiological functions weaken in their recuperative power, and the animal grows more and more quiet. And as its interest in food and native sport is on the wane, the pathetic little creature seems to take more interest in the outward world, and returns timidly the keen, searching glances by which it is bombarded from a throng of serious-looking spectators.

And if, as frequently occurs, death goes off victorious, the animal is dissected and brought to a savant, who is given credit of being wiser than the rest, M. Meschnikoff, who is spending his life in a hot pursuit of the old-age bacillus, with the avowed intention to destroy it, when found.

The rest of the savants have, each one, their specific bacillus, which they pursue with relentless energy, armed with all the aids and paraphernalia within the reach of scientific ingenuity and mental acuteness. They starve, chase, trap, poison and beguile their prey in thousands of guises.

"What special bacillus have you selected?" I asked Dr. Eskilsen.

"The gonococcus."

"Why, I thought the gonococcus was already discovered and fairly indexed in the bacteriological annals."

"I know, for long ago. But my object in view is to find an anti-toxic remedy by which this malicious microbe may be rendered inoffensive. I have a horse in the institute's stable in whose organism I am just on the verge of developing a culture, in which I have all reasons to believe the proper serum shall be found."

"What is this noise about?"

"It is the dogs."

"Mad dogs?"

"Precisely. Come this way and we will go down and take a look at them. Certainly they are caged."

And there they are! With froth dripping from their wide-open mouths; with eyes glassy and fixed, limbs tottering and with incoherent movements, while in grim fury they throw themselves against the fence partition separating them from us. Their hoarse, demoniacal bark fills the air with an impression of something uncanny and ghastly. A couple of dogs lie dead on the floor, having succumbed to the ravages of the disease. A sweet little spaniel, whose inoculation has not yet developed into disease, is the only one which has a pleasant look for us.

"A week from now, if we return, we shall find this little fellow receiving us with the same ghastly bark, glassy eye and frothy mouth."

The next place of interest to which the courteous doctor brought us was the underground chapel, where the earthly remains of Dr. Pasteur are consigned to their last rest. I noticed an altar with lighted candles; and walls, floor and ceiling of marble, color and gold. Around the walls were allegories wrought in mosaic, apotheosizing the different phases of Pasteur's benevolent activity.

"How strange that this man, who never enjoyed the advantage of a medical education, has yet been able to teach the medical profession so many great truths."

"True. And yet in this very fact lies the key to his phenomenal success. Having no prejudices to overcome, he could devote every power of his genius to a positive and constructive work."

In the stable we found a number of beautiful horses afflicted with various kinds of diseases. A noble Arabian mare lay suffering from child-birth fever.

Dr. Eskilsen showed us with some degree of pride his microbe culture—an ugly ulcerated boil on the horse's neck. To increase the action of the virus, the doctor took some powder from a paper he brought with him and scattered it over the sore. The powder, prepared by the doctor himself in his laboratory, consisted of an artificially generated microbe poison.

"This boil has nothing common with the gonococcus, as this microbe can act directly only after having been inoculated in the animal brain. The cause of this boil is not the gonococcus proper, but the poison secreted by the gonococcus."

Having left the institute, the good doctor invited us home to his laboratory, where we inspected, among other strange things, a centrifuge for skimming bacilli. We were also shown a preparation in which, by the aid of the microscope, the observer was able to see in a drop of blood the white blood corpuscles charge ferociously the tubercle-bacilli and mercilessly devour them.

Finally we were shown a veritable procrustean bed of nickel—an exquisite instrument of torture—on which the bodies of guinea pigs and rabbits were fastened by a mechanical contrivance for the purpose of vivisection.

I ventured to ask the doctor if "the Society for the Protection of Animals" did not consider such practices as downright cruelty to animals.

"Certainly," was his impassive reply, "but if we are restricted in our experimentations on the animals, we shall have to attack men. And, as you know," he added, with a shade of regret in his voice, "the vivisection of men is still prohibited."

A CASE OF DOUBT.

The following good story on the Americans comes from Scotland. Soon after Andrew Carnegie bought Skibo there was a circus exhibiting in the neighborhood of the castle, and one of the main attractions was an orang-outang. One night the ourang-outang got out, fell over the cliff and was killed. In the morning, two of the keepers looking over the grounds, ran across the body of the dead orang-outang. One of them scratched his head and said: "He ain't no 'ighlander; that sure." The other said: "He ain't no lowlander; they ain't got that much hair on 'em." After awhile one of them proposed to the other fellow as follows: "I'll go up to the kirk and see the parson, and you go to Mr. Carnegie and see if any of his American gentry are missing."—[Deseret News.

Fete des Vignerons.

FESTIVAL OF THE VINEYARDISTS AT VEVEY, SWITZERLAND.

By a Special Contributor.

THE twenty-fifth celebration of the festival of the vineyardists, or Fête des Vignerons as it is called, in Switzerland, is over, and it can well be said that it surpassed in magnificence of costumes, scenic effects and beauty of music all its predecessors.

The origin of the Brotherhood Confrérie of Vineyardists takes us back to the early part of the seventeenth century, when a brotherhood was formed to supervise the cultivation of the grape, rewarding those who did the best work and fining those that were careless or negelectful.

The earlier celebrations of this festival occurred about every fifteen or twenty years, and took the form of a procession or parade through the town, representing the four seasons. Stops were made in front of the residences of various prominent functionaries, where dances and songs were given.

It was not until 1797 that a stand of seats was erected on the Place du Marché (market place) and a regular performance given of the lyrical poem of the four seasons. In 1811 the first public awards were made to the vineyardists who had done the best work during the year.

The Confrérie des Vignerons, Brotherhood of Vineyardsts, whose motto is "Ora et Labora," "Pray and work," is governed by a council of twelve members. A subcouncil also of twelve members, has supervision of the finances. The head of the council is called the abbé—president. In addition to these there is also a secretary, a constable and a loqueten (herald.) The brotherhood has not been without its troubles, as in the eighteenth century it had many quarrels with the Calvinistic church, the latter claiming that the members were worshiping pagan deities.

The stand on the Place du Marché, this year, had 12,500 seats, ranging in prices from 2 francs (40 cents) up to 25 francs, was built in the shape of a semicircle, with straight sides, the other semicircle being formed by the gates of Pales, Bacchus and Ceres; that of Bacchus being the center one and the largest. They were all of the Doric order of architecture and simulated marble. The orchestra numbered 150, and there were five brass bands, while the performers numbered 1800. In addition to these we must mention about twenty-five or thirty oxen, cows, horses, sheep, goats and dogs.

I have not sufficient command of the English language to do justice to the magnificence of the spectacle, the charm of the music or the beauty of the costumes, which, when massed, surpassed as a color picture all that imagination could fancy.

Friday, August 4, broke clear and warm, and at 5 a.m. the cannon on the hill thundered forth its twenty-two minute guns (one for every canton) and by 6 the town was astir and boats and trains were discharging their loads of people from Geneva and elsewhere.

We dressed as thinly as possible. The shops sold thin white linen hats with green visors and neck protectors, as parasols were forbidden, and thus rigged out and carrying cushions and some cakes, fruit, etc., and creasing cabbage leaves in our hats we sallied forth and were in our seats by 7:30.

According to the programme, at 7:45, the curtain of the center door was drawn, and to fife and drum in marched the Swiss, in their superb dress of crimson, with puffed sleeves and breeches, and bearing long lances, at once spreading out to the full width of the arena.

Lining up on either side, they made way for the abbé-president, superb in Louis XVI dress, black silk coat trimmed with gold, lavender waistcoat, black knee breeches, white stockings and combined hat and wig. Behind him walked his loqueten or herald. Then followed the council of the Confrérie, also in Louis XVI dress, of a beautiful salmon color, and the sub-council in light blue of a beautiful tint.

They took their places behind the orchestra, who were in brown costumes with large hats turned up at the side.

The curtains of the three portals were now drawn, and out of each showed the gorgeous colors of the seasons. A pause. The clock of the church tower is at one minute of eight. At eight the chimes of Saint Martin on the hill break out, the cannon roars. At the eighth gun the composer and leader, Gustave Doret, gives the signal and the orchestra strikes up the "Marché Triumphale," which is taken up by the five bands as they enter at the head of the different troupes, the first band being the "music of honor," as it belongs to Vevey and is dressed in its colors, a superb dark blue with yellow revers, three-cornered hat, wig, etc.

The four other bands led the seasons, winter coming first, it being the season of rest, when little work is done in the fields. It was represented by a sled with an excellent imitation of snow, then wood choppers, huntsmen and the village wedding, the waltz of Lauterbach as danced by the guests being a feature of the fête.

Then followed Pales (spring) personated by a pretty young woman with black hair. The band, in pearl-colored dress preceded her car, which was drawn by four beautiful cream-colored oxen with garlands of pink roses around their heads and bodies.

Following the car were young shepherds and shepherdesses, gardeners, haymakers, etc.

Next came Ceres (summer) in red poppies, as well as her attendants. Her car was also drawn by four fine oxen.

In this group were the cows with bells on that played the chorus in the Ranz des Vaches, a song that is sung by the herders in the mountains where the cows graze. It was admirably sung by Mr. Curat, who sang it at the festival of 1889.

Bacchus was represented by a youth wearing a leopard skin and seated on one, and his attendants were similarly attired.

His car was drawn by six superb black horses, led by six blackamoors in yellow flowing robes. A dozen satyrs walked on either side of the car, while immediately behind came Silenus on his donkey, admirably done by a fat man in tights with his face made up to look drunk and with his right arm around the neck of a man on foot to keep him from falling off. Then followed a host of fauns and bacchantes with tambourines, wearing crowns of grapes and garbed in golden yellow robes, and who kept up a lively dance.

Next came the "feuilles mortes" (autumn leaves)—wine dressers, vineyardists, etc.

All the groups having taken their places, the opening hymn to Agriculture was sung by the entire company and played by the orchestra and five bands; and here one realized the imposing beauty of the spectacle. The beautiful music of Doret as sung by 1800 voices, the glorious sun throwing its rays on the beautiful costumes, and the chiming of the church bells made up a scene never to be forgotten.

The distribution of awards to the vignerons was then proceeded with, after which the different groups went through the programme of singing or dancing allotted to them.

I cannot go into a detailed account of all the music, for it is all good, but will note that the invocation to Ceres, the songs of the ploughman (laboureur,) Ranz des Vaches, and the glaneuses (gleaners) achieved the greatest success.

Of the dances that of the "feuilles mortes," dead leaves, or, more correctly, autumn leaves, was the most original and beautiful. About forty wo

When all the groups had finished their Money in the Far East.

CURRENCIES OF THE COUNTRIES AND THEIR EXCHANGE.

By a Special Contributor.

PROBABLY the most complicated monetary system in the world is that of the various countries comprising the great section known as the "Far East." To fully understand all the mysteries of pesos, taels, yen, ticals, rupees, etc., involved would call for a financial mind greater even than that of William J. Bryan. Perhaps if he had once to contend with the various currencies of countries on the silver basis, he would abandon his silver theories.

The most general monetary unit in use in the East is the Mexican silver "peso" or dollar. At first glance it seems strange that this should be the case. It is, of course, due to the large amount of silver produced by that country. In the early days of discovery and exploration in China, India and the other eastern countries, when a medium of exchange became necessary, the silver of Mexico was found very desirable. It was most convenient to ship it across the Pacific as coined dollars, and it then arrived at its destination in a form in which it could readily be used in exchange. This was doubtless the cause of its adoption, and it has never been dethroned. Although such shipments have now practically ceased, it is still the prevailing currency, and many "Mexican pesos" are coined in the countries where they are to be used and never see Mexico at all. In fact the term "Mexican currency" is now applied to almost all of the silver circulating there, though the coins may show no reference to that republic. This money passes at its current worth as silver, and many of the coins have no value whatever stamped upon their faces.

Perhaps the simplest method of treating such a broad subject is to consider the money system of each country in a general way as a complete study of the subject would require a very large volume.

In point of American interest and because of the changes which are still in progress, the Philippines naturally demand first attention. Before the arrival of Admiral Dewey in Manila Harbor, and until August 1893, the only money in general use in the Philippines was a mongrel currency generally known as Mexican, or more often "Mex." for short. This was composed of various coinages, with the regular Mexican peso predominating. Side by side and of equal value with this floated the coinage of the Spanish-Filipino Bank, or "Banco Español de Filipinas."

The Mexican currency is on the decimal basis, and the peso is supplemented by the following silver coins: the "media peso" or half dollar, the "peseta" or twenty-cent piece, and the "media peseta" or ten-cent piece. The least valuable coin, which corresponds to our one-cent piece, is the bronze or copper "quarto," eight of which equal the value of a "media peseta." Subsidiary coins of every conceivable kind pass at par throughout the islands. Silver pieces issued by various provinces of China, with their value stamped upon them as one mace and 10 canadareens, being of silver and the proper size, pass as "pesetas," and a similar coin half as large is accepted as a "media peseta." Although these Chinese coins are current in the Philippines and in Shanghai, they will not be accepted in Hongkong. The face value of the "quartos," or copper pieces, is generally about the same as their intrinsic value as copper. They assume every form, from the one-cent pieces of the Straits Settlements and Hongkong to the rough, unstamped coppers which are pounded out of native copper by the hands of the Igorrotes of Northern Luzon.

When American gold and paper currency arrived in the Philippines, it was recognized as of superior value by the Chinese money-changers, while the natives were unable to appreciate its worth or to understand its relation to the mongrel currency to which they were accustomed. As a result, the wily Chinese money-changers began gathering in all the American gold which made its appearance and paying out the silver of China in its stead. The relative values of the two currencies constantly fluctuated, and the crafty Chinamen took advantage of the changing market. The American soldiers, who were paid in gold, were compelled to exchange it for "Mex." to have money which could be used in trading with the natives. The salaries of the civil government employé were on a gold basis, but paid in "Mex." A clerk whose salary was stipulated to be $100, gold, might receive 200 Mexican dollars this month and 260 next month. These 260 Mexican dollars being paid in silver, it can readily be imagined that they filled a good-sized bag and made quite a load for the hundred-dollar clerk to carry home. This was no hardship, as the officials of the Federal government and the soldiers who were actually paid in gold were compelled to change it into Mex. to get it in a form understood by the natives with whom they dealt. The gold was then promptly shipped to China for use in meeting foreign obligations. The government rate of exchange, however, was seldom the same as the commercial rate. The latter fluctuated daily, while the former was fixed at long intervals by the governor.

Everybody became involved in money speculation, whether he wished to do so or not. One never knew, when he went to bed, how much his money would be worth in the morning.

The greatest objection to this system was, of course, the lack of stability, but another almost as great was its inconvenience. Aside from a few notes issued by the Spanish Bank—which were always distrusted—the only single piece in circulation was the "peso." As the value of this coin in relation to gold was constantly changing, it generally averaged about 40 cents. In other words, the ratio of Mex. to gold ranged from about 200:100 to about 260:100, making the value of a gold dollar from $2 to $2.60 in Mexican currency.

The inconvenience and confusion resulting from this complicated arrangement can be better imagined than described, though many amusing illustrations might be offered did the space of this article permit.

For five years our government debated and pondered over a remedy. At last one was proposed, embodied in the Conant Act and passed by Congress. By this Act the archipelago was placed on a gold basis, the standard being a gold peso with a constant value in American money of 50 cents, this value being guaranteed by the government. It was no simple matter to introduce this system and to gain for it the confidence of the natives, who found it hard to comprehend. Many difficulties arose and were squarely met, and the result is a sound, stable money system.

The gold peso is a theoretical value, and there are no gold coins in circulation. The peso in use is a very pretty silver coin minted in the United States. It is about the size of an American dollar and, as before stated, has a value of 50 cents. Its intrinsic value is very nearly the same. It is supplemented by half pesos, pesetas, half pesetas, five and one-cent pieces, and even a half-cent piece, the value of which is, of course, one-quarter of that of our smallest coin.

The paper currency, which is engraved in America, is very similar to our treasury certificates, though the bills are considerably smaller than the ones in use in the United States and consequently much more convenient. The denominations so far issued are two, five and ten-peso notes.

Though the Eastern Chinese money-changers are very keen and are seldom taken in, many of them took these bills for American money when they first appeared. Such a mistake could be made but once, however.

Much of interest could be written about this introduction of a new and strange currency. An entire article might well be devoted to the reasons for its necessity, its advantages, the difficulties encountered and how they were met, but they must be passed over in a discussion so general as this.

Without undertaking an exhaustive study of monetary conditions in Japan, it will be possible only to say that, after going through the chaotic state that formerly prevailed in the Philippines, this country is now on a gold basis, with the gold yen, worth about 50 cents, as the standard. Paper money and subsidiary coins form the currency in common circulation. The value of the yen is made permanent by government guarantee. The decimal system is used, the yen being divided into 100 sen.

Taking up the money of China, we find the most complicated system, or rather lack of system, of all. Each province, each large city, every treaty port, has a system of its own. The money of one city is discounted in another quite near by, and unless the traveler is wary and cautious, he will suffer much.

Throughout the interior of China, the only money universally recognized is the "cash." These are brass coins with a square hole in the center. They are strung and carried around the neck. It takes 186 of them to make a Mexican dollar, or 40 cents in American money. For a trip up the Yang-tse River, a young man supplied himself with a large box of cash, but they were exhausted after the second day.

In Shanghai and other important ports the Mexican currency rules. Hongkong has a system of its own in force under the British rule, and a similar currency is supplied by the British for the Straits Settlements, the value of the coins being the same as those of the Mexican currency. Dollars bearing the stamp of the republic of Mexico circulate freely all along this coast. Those of Hongkong and Singapore, however, are discounted in Shanghai, and vice versa, although the difference is an almost imperceptible one in the milling of the coin only. In Shanghai the dollars are stamped with the Chinese "chop" or trade-mark of the various bankers. These are called "chopped" dollars, and are generally preferred, as the "chop" is a guarantee of their quality. In Hongkong, however, "chopped" coins are discounted and often refused entirely.

Throughout these silver-using countries, there are countless counterfeit coins in circulation, and every coin should be "rung" whether one or a thousand are involved.

The Hongkong-Shanghai Bank, an English corporation with branches in Manila, Singapore and all other centers of the East, has greatly enriched itself in the process of facilitating the trade of the Orient. The notes of this bank circulate widely, in that section, and greatly aid the business world. Those issued in Hongkong are discounted in Shanghai, and so on, a premium of exchange being demanded in every city. This corporation, therefore, has the unique distinction of discounting its own notes. It is the largest corporation of its kind in the East. Other important concerns of a similar nature are the Russo-Chinese Bank, the Bank of Indo-China, the American Bank, and several others, each with its branches in all large cities.

In all large transactions in China, the tael is used, and each treaty port or large business community has a tael of a different value. The Haikwan tael is the one used by the customs throughout the empire. Its value is about $1.40 Mexican.

A word about the customs of China might not be out of place here. The duties have been guaranteed in payment of various obligations contracted by the government, one of the largest being caused by the indemnity demanded by the powers as the result of the Boxer troubles. At the head of this great collection system is that master mind, Sir Robert Hart, one of the greatest organizers ever known and probably the most able of all Chinese scholars. He is an Englishman by birth and education but virtually a Chinaman by adoption. The power of life and death over the subjects of the celestial empire has been conferred upon him and, in token thereof, he is entitled to wear the peacock feather. The enormous duties of China are collected with surprisingly little friction. The traveler is not annoyed in the least.

The currency of Siam is in the form of little buttons with a small eye, very similar to shoe buttons. These are of silver, the value being determined by the size. The largest is the "tical" with a value in our money of about 30 cents.

To Ceylon and India Britain has given a stable currency, with the silver rupee as the standard. The value of three rupees is equal to that of one of our dollars. In Ceylon the rupee is divided into 100 cents. In India it is divided into 16 annas, one anna being equal to an English penny. On the excellent electric railway system of Calcutta or the horse-car line in Bombay, which is very extensive, one can ride a very long distance for two annas.

Among the most acute of all men engaged in trade are the Eastern money-changers. The majority of these are Chinamen, and it has been well said that the "Chinaman out-Jews the Jew." Large sums of money are handled by these men, and many of them are very wealthy. In India much of this exchange of money is carried on by the Parsees, who are also very keen traders. Every boat coming into port is met by numbers of these men, ready and eager for business, with their money sacks on their shoulders. They carry with them their entire capital, which often amounts to a very large sum. They know without hesitation the exact value and character of any coin or bill which may be offered them, and can usually produce a specimen of the currency in use in any country in the world.

The rate of exchange which they offer is usually considerably more in their own favor than they are really willing to accept. The experienced traveler, in turn, offers an extremely low rate. After a great deal of dickering, a compromise is effected, and a very fair exchange is usually made.

The tourist can generally get a larger amount for his money from these men than from the banks, but he must be very watchful for counterfeits and other deceits.

The various little schemes and methods of these money-changers are interminable. For instance, in Shanghai, if an ordinary Mexican dollar is to be changed for small silver and nothing is said, an even hundred cents in dimes and twenty-cent pieces will be given for it. If, however, the person making the exchange demands it, the money-changer will very willingly give him $1.10 in small money. This is because the single piece is ordinarily more convenient to handle. The single dollar is known as a "big dollar," while a dollar in change is called a "small dollar." In this way a good sum can be saved by the knowing in making small purchases, paying for rickshaw rides, etc.

Though the men who have no other business than that of changing money are very clever, they do sometimes make a mistake. When the American troops were going to the Philippines by way of the Suez Canal and the Indian Ocean, a good many Confederate notes were passed by them as good United States bills.

From this very general discussion it may be seen that the Oriental traveler can save himself much annoyance and no small expense by becoming fully posted on the vagaries of eastern finance before setting out on his journey. One good rule to follow is always to buy the money of a country you expect to visit, before reaching that country. In other words, money is always cheaper away from its home. WILLIAM BREEDEN.

TO THE LAST DAISY.

All dusty-faced, beside the lane
That winds along the upland wold,
Where sky and earth are blue and gold,
She sways, last of the daisy chain
That girdled hill and dale and dune
Throughout the mad sweet days of June.

Fled are her gladsome, wayward moods,
Yet see her bravely beck and nod
To sumach and to golden rod,
Whose mystic mother, autumn, broods
In gown of amethyst flung far
O'er wood and headland, glen and scar.

Wistfully toward the dying sun
Look how she yearns in piteous plea
For one last kiss e'er vale and lea,
Swather in the shroud that dusk has spun
In misty lowlands, fade from sight
And frosts creep shuddering down the night.

Like to some dwarfed and withered child,
Born when her parents' youth has flown,
She droops, unwelcome, pale and lone,
Dreaming of dead springs, of the wild
Lush meadows where her sisters swung
Ten million strong when June was young.

A WISE CAT.

J. H. Heath, 2 Torbay road, Brondesbury, writes as follows:

"Two or three years since my daughter, who lived at Forest Gate, was disturbed several nights in succession by knocks at the front door. The knocker was low down, under the glass panels. On the door being opened on each occasion no one was observed, but the cat was always noticed to slip in.

"At last it dawned upon my daughter that by standing on its hind legs the cat reached the knocker, and readily lifted it by its front paws. The cat was watched, and her surmise proved to be correct. Since then my daughter removed to another house in the neighborhood, and we purposely fixed a knocker low down on the garden door. The cat repeated the same trick when it wanted to get in, and continued to do so for a period of two or three years—in fact, during all the time my daughter occupied the house.

"Was this humor, instinct, or reason? To my mind there was a bit of reason in it."—[London Daily News.

The Black Colonel.

HE LEADS THE BOY FORWARD TO GREAT CONQUESTS.

By a Special Contributor.

THE Black Colonel and his black horse are on the mantelpiece of a sunny upper room now, where they have been for a long time. The horse lacks half of a hind leg, and one prancing forefoot is gone, so that he sags as he stands and threatens to limp painfully should he start; but the Black Colonel keeps his seat militantly, heedless of a battered face, and if either of them is suffering, you cannot prove it. The point of the Colonel's saber is bent inward—it was bent in a fight—so that it is just beneath his chin, which seems to make him sit all the straighter. His eyes stare to the front, his yellow tin plume stands out behind, and he is, indeed, fully brave even unto this day.

It was in the old days, long ago, when the tiny wars were on, that the Tin Regiment was called into the field. Many were the brave deeds of those little yellow-plumed warriors when there were weary hours to climb and rivers of tears to cross; but they had never failed—until the wars in the upper room were forever done, and they were mustered out, as was inevitable. Only the Black Colonel remained in the service.

That first morning they charged hither and thither, rescuing Mother from the always-talk of the Little Boy, safeguarding the Little Boy's fund of joy, and claiming content for all the household at the point of the sword; until noon passed over, and victory was achieved for that day. For peace lay over the Plains of Floor, and where it lay stillest, in a little patch of sunlight near the window, the chieftain sat and puzzled. His soiled bits of hands were clasped about his knees, just where the droll brown apron fell back from his weely trousered knees; and he had curls that shone lustily with gold, for he was six years old. Someone who was sewing in the big chair by the window looked furtively at times toward the resting army, and wondered. Then the Little Boy asked a question.

"Mamsey, when'll they win?" There was something distant in the Little Boy's thoughts.

"When will they win, darling? Why, when they have driven all your idle hours and your whines and tears away, until they are afraid to tease this Little Boy any more; until he is a little man and can fight for himself; until he deserts them, and wonders how he ever played with tin soldiers. Then they will have failed, and won."

"Is it long, Mamsey?"

"Not long," answered Mamsey, with a sigh sadder than her smile; "just a little while."

The Little Boy looked frightened, then indignant. The Black Colonel sat stalwartly at attention in the bright patch of sunlight before his chief. He seemed faithful unto death, brave beyond compare, never failing; and the Little Boy felt that a cruel thing had been said that day before the hosts on the Plains of Floor.

II.

Thus through the days that count up even into years the Tin Regiment drove the enemies of the Little Boy; and yet, more and more, as the wars grew older, he came to fear lest the warriors should really win the final fight, and he would wake to sound in vain the recall of that loyal band; for, after all, the Prophetess down on the Plains of Floor had never yet been wrong, and perhaps there was just a little while, as she had said.

And in truth there finally came that day when the greatest battle of all was fought—the death struggle of the Wars of Fun, wherein the faithful regiment at last won all it could win for the Little Boy, and the soldiers lay where they fell. Even Mamsey, in her circle of seeming peace, felt the impending tragedy of the ultimate conflict around her chair.

The Little Boy went into that morning's fight with an unaccountable weight of sadness in his soul, and the bands played so faintly, faintly, and so out of tune! Where was the old spirit of the Wars? And Mamsey—why did she glance over the Plains from her diligent pursuits with such a queer, regretful look?

For the first time, reality clutched the general's heart, where only the vague fear had been, and tears came from his eyes. The fight waned, and Fun was almost lost. He nerved himself, in terror of defeat. The regiment took spirit a bit in his heart, and fought desperately, so that after an hour of dogged strife all about Mamsey's confines of apparent peace, the warriors again put the enemy to flight—all save a spying sadness. This they could not seem to ride over or beat off, and the Little Boy looked pitifully upon his men, fearing their rally, lest it be that in which they should lose—and win.

So he went over the Drowsy Peaks—a trail that he had not yet lost, though it was growing dim—hoping with a great hope that they would follow him down through Afternoon as they used to do, and make a new stand in the Uncouth Country—even though it be fatally victorious.

And after awhile they came, all straggling confusedly, but still battling on with the desperation of an impending fulfillment. From a commanding vantage point of sleep the Little Boy, all a-quiver, watched the wee warriors fight to the very Phantom Peaks. Once, after a rally and a charge that seemed to have the old-time thrill in it, he thought that they were really driving the Sad Feeling at last.

But from the shadows of the Peaks they never returned—none, save the Black Colonel. He came riding down the darkening slopes of the Little Boy's heart with the same brave front, his saber point thrust unconditionally beneath his chin, so that he could in no wise look elsewhere but forward—the same old Black Colonel, yet different, greater; and the Little Boy knew, as he watched, that he, of all the beloved regiment, was destined to survive the final charge, the Inevitable Change. Though even the Black Colonel was never again to return to the Plains of Floor. The wonderful wars of Only Fun were ended, and he was to reënlist by the side of the Little Boy for widening wars far beyond the Plains, the silent, bloodless carnage of which the Prophetess knew, and they were to learn.

So the Little Boy saw the tin squadrons seem to fail, though really they had won the greatest, deadliest battle of all—had fought the Little Boy's way through the What-to-Do on the Plains of Floor to the foot of the Must Do Hills of Life, and further they could not go. Now he must fight almost alone up and over the Heights that are the World, where there are no plains, but only Ups and Downs. Almost alone, because the Black Colonel would go with him always—he swore it, and woke up to find the warrior tight in his hands.

He tied a string firmly about the Black Colonel and his horse, and hung them both around his neck, underneath. Then he went slowly up to see the Prophetess on the deserted floor.

Today, all seemed deathly silent there. Surely those ancient morning wars could never have waged openly, on that narrow, sunlit floor! He crossed what had been the Plains, to the throne whence sweet peace—it seemed—had always overlooked the Wars, and stood before the Prophetess with his hands clasped behind his back. He bit his lip. She—the Prophetess—was sewing, just as it used to be. She did not seem to grow tired of anything—to lose heart. But the Little Boy did not know.

He sighed heavily and looked over the floor. "M—Mamsey, I guess they've got there," he faltered.

"Yes," said Mamsey, sighing too, "they've won."

"N—No," he contended, choking down an uprising in his heart, "they just never came back—'cept the Black Colonel." He put his hand furtively to his chest. Mamsey looked inquiringly toward a box in the corner.

"No, that's not them," protested the disheartened general. "Just the Black Colonel—he's going with me always."

Mamsey dropped her sewing and took the disconsolate little figure in her lap. "He is brave, is the Black Colonel," she said. "Indeed, he is brave," and she sighed deeply.

III.

Then there came the time when he was no longer a Little Boy, but a man, though they still called him the Boy; and he learned to love a woman. Learned to love her almost too much, till he worshiped her. She was soft and graceful, large-eyed and beautiful; and he grew to think that all the sweetness and purity and worth doing of the whole world came from her unprofaned lips and out of her glinting hair. And so he took his life, thought by thought, and builded it above and around about this woman; wove her in with faith and hope and dreams—builded and wove stoutly, but blindly, as only an honest Man who was but newly a Little Boy can. The woman worshiped too—or so it seemed, for one cannot always tell.

But as yet the Man—or the Boy, as they knew him—was nothing. She told him so, and bade him go out, and Do. He felt of the firm little Colonel on his breast, thought upon the saber, placed his faith beneath his chin, and went beyond; climbed up from the hills of mere Restless Things to the Heights that are the World, far from the Plains of Floor; and there he took up the wars again alone—he and the Black Colonel.

These new wars put to shame the belief of the Boy and his staunch ally that they had ever been to war before—grim, lonely ceaseless wars, these latter were, without any Drowsy Peaks to rest beneath or Afternoons to stray through, dreaming. They found a city, and there they chose their battleground. From pole to pole, through all the wastes of earth, there is nothing so frightful as a city, though there be deserts and jungles and seas, both strifeful and desolate.

But the Black Colonel did not lower his saber on entering here, and, neither did the Boy lower the point of his faith; so together they joined the surge, the one to Be and Have, the other loyally, because he was still in the service.

The Boy's great ambition was to be an architect. He used to wish to be only a soldier; but he later learned that every man must be a soldier anyhow, and something else beside. And so, in his mind, he fought and builded too; and sometimes so high he saw his structures of stone and skill rise that the crowd paused and stared against its grudging will, to view his name written across the face of achievement. So high, indeed, they often rose, when he was lost again a moment in the old Uncouth Country, that they looked even beyond the Heights and Hills down onto the lowly Plains, where the Prophetess sat, alone now, in the same patch of sunlight, sewing, never tiring—it seemed.

But mostly, he settled to the fight, forsaking dreams, and steadily he forged ahead.

IV.

The Boy had lived for two years with Dick Burton in two rather bare rooms, high in a tall building in the city's heart. Although Dick was not of his kind, he extended a certain sympathy to the Boy when the latter entered the school, where both had gone to learn the same profession, and he grew to like him in a way. "Happy Dick" was city-wise, and helped the Boy out of some of the perplexities of his new life. So the two agreed to share living expenses, and were friends in their mutual ambition; though in all else they were strangers, each an enigma to the other. For Dick was not in the fight as the Boy was; he had no heavenward watchtowers of the soul, as the Boy had, looking into a far, pure country; and above all, his ways with women repelled the newcomer up into his strongholds, away from him.

The greatest shock of the Boy's life had been —Dick's Miriam—a gaudy, forward, vivacious girl—well, whom some man had started wrong yet, whenever he was in her presence, some sympathy, inexplicable to him, and always kept by him, warmed his heart as nothing else in all vast city ever warmed it. Some inner vision of trated her boldly impulsive ways to a hidden that he felt rather than understood; his unfouled saw, through the depths of her lustrous, wayward eyes, that the hot vivacity by which most men her really shone through a scum of anguish, though was not yet wise enough to fathom the mystery.

To pretty little Miriam there had come what for real happiness—she loved Dick, the promising architect, and yielded him, unashamed, her all.

She often visited Dick in the apartments he with his fellow-worker, and to her the Boy was amusing in his simplicity. Yet when she was with him she, too, felt a sympathy for and from there was something corresponding in these parently different souls.

The Boy's student years were ending—years of work, some failure, some success, and lastly, faith was a hot summer's night that was bringing his campaign over the Ups and Downs to a close. little table of the bare sleeping-room, between the beds, was spread a great sheet of white paper, sheets of blue paper, pencils and rulers; and across papers lay the Boy's folded arms. His perspiring was buried in them. Stillness was in possession room, save for the hoarse, monotonous voice congested life below, wafting up and in. Down the open window, behind the bowed head, glared uneasy city, away, away into the night and black with rivers of light coursing glitteringly through Far out on the slopes of distance sparkled luminous springs, whence the streamlets, then rivers, widening, flowed to the city's center.

Inside, the heavily-crusted end of a candle and flared as the warm breeze puffed through the dow, casting alternate shadows and gleams on a tin horseman sitting his crippled mount at attention the table. The Boy faltered, for a moment, in the of the fight.

For, that day, as he toiled over his prize plans the great competition he had entered, he had been tacked by a familiar sadness, and abandoning his he had wandered out among the city's homes. he had seen a little boy leading a tin regiment across some plains. He had gone straight back to lonely abode, had thrown off his coat, had leaned Black Colonel against the candlestick—and had his head without a stroke of work.

He remembered now that he had envied that little boy with a sudden pang, and that he had that the prophetess of those plains would not too wisely about such wars. And he had hoped that there was a Black Colonel in the little regiment—a Black Colonel in all that the name to him now.

The shortening candle reached over in the and caught a lock of his hair, and he did not though it singed with a miniature crackle. It reaching smokily over again when the door opened someone fluttered in. A scream roused the dreamer.

"Look, quick—it'll burn you, Boy!" Then the puffed out in the double draught. Almost in the breath with the first came another exclamation:

"Where the devil's Dick?"

The Boy roused, clutched the tin horseman in barrassed way, and stumbled from the chair.

"Oh, it's you, Miss Miriam? I don't know is. Working on his competitive plans at the suppose."

"I so want to see him," said the girl, longingly. walked to the bed by the open window and sat The Boy rummaged nervously about the table. light the candle again as soon as I can find a he muttered, apologetically.

"Never mind," answered the girl shortly, soft, meditative voice.

"But, Miss Miriam——"

"Oh, bother your properness; please don't more of it on me, Boy. I'm comfortable and afraid of you, so that's propriety enough But I want Dick—I want him awfully bad."

They sat for awhile without speaking. again felt that irresistible sympathy for Miriam studied her face, silhouetted against the the streets below. It was wistful and almost when she thought that no one could see the Later the girl said thoughtfully, as she at the turmoil: "It's good music that the makes, isn't it? Yet it has a lonely sound now. know what's the matter with me."

The Boy leaned forward, pleased and "Then you hear it that way, too?" he asked, caressingly, with a thrill of hope in his voice, personal love, but like the soul saver's when the first yielding of repentance in the person called a sinner.

"Yes, Boy, since——" Miriam stopped broke into one of her vivacious laughs. ever have thought it of me, sitting here ishness—and to you, of all people, you No, the city is life itself, it's happy, happy. But the next moment her voice belied her again.

"I thought," she continued, in a soft tone, would be here tonight, working on his plans, are on yours. I'm afraid he's not at work at I hoped that he would show them to me, and about them and—everything!" She smothered of fear under an ecstacy of hope, and leaned into the half-light of the window, toward invisible companion.

"Boy, do you know whether he still money?" she asked, almost in a whisper.

"Yes, Dick needs more money to get his work as he wants to," answered the Boy, "but I guess he'll get it in time. I wouldn't worry."

After a moment, the girl rose from her seat on the bed. "Good night," she said, with a friendly cheeriness, and placed her hand gently on the Boy's head as she passed to the door.

V.

Just before dawn the Boy was aroused by the pop of a match in the room. His awakening glance fell upon Dick, standing close over the flickering candle, examining a large gold coin. He seemed undecided, yet gratified. As the Boy rose on his elbows in bed, Dick glanced hurriedly around, and attempted to conceal what he had in his hand. But the next moment he laughed out and revealed the coin.

"Under my pillow," he explained. "Who the devil could have put it there?"

"I don't know, Dick," the Boy answered. "No one entered the room last night except Miriam. I saw nobody place money there."

"The devil!" ejaculated Dick, sourly, at the mention of Miriam's visit. It hurt the Boy in his heart to hear the way Dick spoke. "Well," continued Dick in a moment, "I don't care where it came from, but it will just pull me through. Lord knows, I've spent enough on her."

When Dick rolled out of bed in the morning he fell to jesting with the Boy, who was already hard at work. "You ought to have a girl like mine, old Lonesome, to cheer you up; they are confidence in human form. But if they're beyond the mountains, as you say, my dear fellow, they're beyond hope—there's nothing in it at a distance."

The Boy bent over his work in silence.

A couple of nights later Miriam fluttered up to No. 49 again and found the Boy alone. She slipped in quietly, hesitatingly this time. She did not find him bowed down, as before, among dreams; he was sprawled flat on his stomach on the cleared floor, laboring diligently over scattered papers. The Black Colonel stood guard under the candle light. Tomorrow the plans were to go to the judges, and the victory hung in the balance.

Miriam closed the door cautiously and tip-toed in. "Boy?" she inquired, timidly, as if half afraid to approach. It was the first timid note he had ever heard in her voice. Hastily concealing the tin soldier under a corner of the blue print, he scrambled to his knees.

"You, Miriam?" he exclaimed, in a dazed way, without rising further. "Dick has gone to the office with the plans."

"Yes, I thought so," she answered, in a low tone. "I wanted to speak to you alone, Boy." She, too, dropped to her knees, close beside him. He shrank slightly from her, as if fearful of her physical seductiveness.

"Boy, didn't you ever love?" she whispered in his ear.

The Boy laughed nervously. "Why, little woman, how curious of you!"

"I know it," she went on, with subdued intensity, "but then, Dick says you are so queer and cold and all that. And—and I wanted you to win the second, anyway."

"Well," acknowledged the Boy, reservedly—for it was a subject he would rather leave unmentioned—"there is one over yonder, she is waiting."

She crept on her knees closer to him, so that her magnetic body touched his, and softly turned his face with her hand so that it looked into her own, full in the light of the candle that gleamed up at the two.

"And, oh God, Boy, you will be true—true, even if you win the first?" she asked, passionately.

"I will," answered the kneeling man, coldly. He did not understand her and her fears; he shrank away again. He held his silence, and the girl rose to one knee, to go, but hesitated, and glanced curiously toward the bulging corner of the blue print.

"What is it?" she asked, timidly, settling to both knees again.

"Nothing, nothing," replied he, provoked. He edged a bit further over the object.

She leaned forward on one hand, and with the other pulled up the corner of the paper. For a moment she gazed at the Black Colonel, tumbled there into [illegible]—not through defeat, but for the Boy's sake, as always. The girl's face shone pure as she leaned, her red lips parted in almost tearful delight. Her beautiful face, nearly in the candle's flame, was like a lustrous gem.

"Her—little—soldier," she repeated fondly, as if to herself, with admiration, wonder, caress in her tone, and smiled as the Boy had never seen her, nor a woman smile.

She leaned back again, and fumbling in her dress, drew something from next her heaving bosom. It was warm with her warmth, and she held it out toward the Boy, and dropped her eyes.

"Another one—a woman's," she said, simply. No tears fell, nor even dimmed her eyes, but their sound came to her voice, and her lips quivered. In her two soft hands lay a tiny, battered china doll, white and shiny and naked save for a wee frayed garment that clung about it in disorder. "It was my fun and my ideal," she said, more firmly, after a pause, "when I was Mother's Little Girl, way back at home. Good night, Boy."

A flush of confusion overspread Miriam's softened face as she extended her hand to the man, thrust her little treasure back into her bosom, and went out into the night.

VI.

The Boy won. Dick came second, but he seemed fairly contented, for it had been nip and tuck between the two.

To the Boy, his soul yearning for the home land, and the Eyes, quietly made ready to go back over the mountains.

Dick celebrated noisily, and was out a good deal. Miriam clung close to him these days and nights; but otherwise she stifled any semblance of doubt under a [illegible] hope. From her soul the mantle of gaudy vivacity had fallen, and she stood forth womanly, earnest, wondrous fair, not outwardly exultant, but all a-tremble with the expectation of a consummate joy. For on the day before the Boy was to journey into his own country to gather his reward, she confided to him—with her hand creeping in where he knew the symbol that had become her crucifix lay—that on the morrow she was to become a new, honest woman, Dick's wife. He had promised her the priceless privilege.

The Boy then bade Miriam farewell, wishing her unbroken purity and happiness in her new life. Dick had gone out early, saying that he would not return to No. 49 until the next day, so the Boy was to spend that last night alone.

When the night was already well worn, the Boy still sat contemplatively beside the taper, reviewing the wars that had been his lot since he had taken to the field. The Black Colonel occupied his old stand beneath weird lights and shadows. The Boy smiled admiringly on the quaint veteran. How often had that mere toy fought off the legions that strove to break his faith as he worked!—fought them off, not with thunderous charge, nor any tunes, but silently, with his sword beneath his chin. How often had he stood at bay against his commander's breast and parried from his heart the doubts and fears and falterings that blocked the way, and driven them, not over any Phantom Peaks, nor down through any Afternoons, but openly, grimly across the world! How often in these same cheerless rooms had he struggled for his Boy, not fording any rivers of Tears, nor rescuing any Fun, but marching always on before, across the desert places! The Black Colonel was still a great warrior—to the Boy. The Prophetess had not quite understood that day down on the Plains.

The musing man was roused by the opening of the door. He had not heard any footsteps, and he started in astonishment. Miriam wavered for a moment in the doorway, irresolute, her face like the uncrumbled ashes of some beautiful thing that, licked by a fast, consuming flame, still retains its features moulded in the nothing that remains. Closing the door, she felt her way into the room and threw herself down in a chair that faced the Boy. Her clasped hands fell heavily across the table, and her ashen face sank into their cold, upturned palms.

"Miriam! Miriam! What——"

"He—he has gone, Boy." It was just a moan, but he caught the meaning, and it smothered his heart for the moment.

"You mean that——"

"He told me, O, Boy, he told me that it could not be—that he was too respectable now!" Then suddenly she half rose with the impulse of fully realized anguish, and stretched her arms out over the little table piteously toward the Boy, who had risen to catch her, thinking she would fall. Against the palms of her slender hands lay the tiny white china doll, shiny and denuded.

"And this is all—all I shall ever have!" she cried. She sank heavily across the table. Her limp hands unfolded over the further edge, and the doll, that had always nestled at her heart in purity, and sin, and purity again, tinkled into fragments on the floor.

The Boy watched his last city night through beside the tortured little figure moaning on Dick's bed. In the morning she bade him go.

"No," she said, gratefully, "you cannot help me by staying over. I am not a stranger to the city or its ways—especially now. You must go—you and your little soldier. Mine broke on—on the—floor. She is waiting for you over there, Boy. Forget all this." She smiled wistfully, and flitted from No. 49.

The Boy and his little soldier took up their triumphant—as they thought—return.

When at last they had scaled the mighty ranges far over in the West and looked down on the other side, breathless at the magnitude of the unfolding scene, the Boy's heart leaped with a joy it had never known before. For once more under his eyes stretched his own untrammeled country, away till it joined in friendly communion with the stainless sky; dreaming, smiling, working and accomplishing all in good season, ennobled by the sublimity of its mountains, inspired by the sound of its urging sea. There is no faith like the worship of a land. A fearless eagle launched from the heights out into the freedom of those valleys, catching up and bearing on his unfailing wings the whole inner being of the Boy; and the Boy knew, by sweet remembrance, that the lowlier but gentler mocking-bird also was abroad in that fair realm below. And where the mocking-bird was, there the Eyes were, he said to his heart.

So the two homing warriors descended toward the Plains of other days.

Deep peace still lay over the narrow, tuneless, funless floor of the ancient upper room; the sad peace that had been bought at the point of the sword. The Prophetess sat in the great arm chair, still sewing—but not tirelessly, as it used to seem. Few things seemed any more; most things were evident—though not all, yet.

VII.

Again the Prophetess, from her throne of apparent peace, was forced to speak wisely and cruelly about the Wars; these latter wars, that were still to see some great victories, but never an enduring truce.

"No, my Boy, you don't understand all about war, even yet," she said, patiently, mothering the man in her arms as she had mothered the Little Boy. "Yes, I could see your watch towers, my Soldier, far across in the beleaguered city; but no other eyes down here could stand the strain—none that have ever yet followed you into the world. The fight was long and distant, Boy, and the mists that blew between were many, that none but your mother's eyes could pierce. Go forth again, and some day perhaps you will find another pair that will never lose sight of your signals."

Hours afterward, when day and night lay evenly divided over the Boy's country, and light and dark hung for a moment in the balance, each equally dimmed, the Prophetess slipped into the dusk of the little room where the Boy used to look at pictures of great buildings and draw and dream before he went forth to the further Wars. She entered noiselessly, yet her presence filled the room, as a woman's can, and she tiptoed her way, almost as Miriam had once approached the same man. Only this time the man was down, and the woman strong.

The Boy, a dim outline against the twilight, sat beside the old bench where he had done his boyish work, and his head was bowed down on it. His arms lay stretched out across this barrier, the hands just over the further edge, with the fingers loosely clasped.

As the Prophetess bent silently over the beloved figure, that breathed as if struggling for air, she saw the Black Colonel and his crippled mount clinging desperately between the loosening palms, fighting for a foothold, it seemed, yet surely slipping. The mother's face contracted with a gripping comprehension of the tragedy of it, and she knew now that even she had not understood the Boy until this moment. If the Black Colonel should at last fall, the very saber point that had inspired him—and another—would be his—and the other's—piercing death.

As the fingers continued to relax, the imminent tragedy filled the woman's heart with a terrible fear for the man. She was seized by an impulse to throw the weight of her soul in against the stealthy foes, and stem the tide of fatal retreat. She laid her head lightly, yet firmly, on the Boy's shoulder.

"Boy!" she said, with a ring of benign reproof in her voice, "has even the Black Colonel won all he can for you—and lost?"

At the touch of the hand on his shoulder—it seemed on his heart—the man's mind went back like a flash to that last scene in No. 49; to the woman's field of combat, swept bare by disaster and retreat that night. Silence and darkness covered for a moment the swift errand of his thought, while his own fate hung, imminent, but withheld by that hand. He saw the quivering Miriam fall heavily across the table in the very hour when he had thought his own triumph attained; saw the ashen face lying hopeless on Dick's deserted pillow, by the open window, where the sound of the grinding of the city's mill of souls called up sickeningly; saw her stretch out her arms so piteously toward him in the agony of accepted defeat; and heard—how distinctly; how piercingly, that ominous sound echoed through his being now!—the tinkle of the broken doll upon the floor.

Convulsively the Boy grasped the Black Colonel, recovering him just as he would have fallen to the floor; and he rose and looked the Prophetess in the eyes.

"No!" he answered, strength struggling to ascendancy in his voice, "not yet."

"The Black Colonel is brave," said the Prophetess, "and you are braver. You cannot lose your soldier now. Then to arms again, Boy!"

LANIER BARTLETT.

THIS WAS THE SONG.

We have forgotten. This the rowers knew,
  Straining within the galley's reeling night.
Life bent to breaking, while their great souls grew
Strong in the ancient purposes of Time.
  This was the song whereby they made their fight,
Laughed as they swung. Gods! how the cord bit through.

This was the song the pagan lovers heard,
  Wakened by flowers in a rose-red dawn,
Through the bright dew they fled, like ocean stirred
With morning. Bare and beautiful they ran,
  Holding each other's hand. Through leaves they're gone,
Cleaving the silver pool with flash of bird.

Carven in stone, Abydos holds it fast—
  The little eastern dancer with her lute,
Wild Erin'sfaeries crying for the past.
They keep the deathless secret of the word
  Hid behind Nature's lips, who, grave, remote,
Guard from this profanation till the last.

Not unto us who bide the ebb and flow,
  The senseless order of the tide of law,
We have forgotten to be free, we know
Only the iteration of the day.
  The priceless moon, white pearl without a flaw,
Drowns in the muddy stream of worldly woe.

We take the pretty part and leave the whole,
  Lost to our ken the song of Nature's youth—
The great barbaric winds that sweep the soul
  And leave it emptied of all else but truth.

MY SHIP.

My ship has come, and her sails are white,
  She's freighted with health, and peace, and love.
She rides on the sea of pure delight,
  Where the sky bends gold and blue above,
And ripples gladness 'round her play,
As she folds her snowy sails today.

I looked for her oft, and waited long,
  But mists hung heavy, and dark below.
Sometimes I thought I could hear the song
  Of the Seraph band, or caught the glow
From their crowns of light, but doubts and fears
Obscured my beautiful ship for years.

But she's here at last, my ship, my ship,
  My beautiful ship of health and love,
She's moored to the "Rock of Ages" fast
  And Calvary's Banner floats above.
And I rest secure from death and sin
Since the day my beautiful ship sailed in.

SPECULATION AS TO HIS METHOD OF LIVING AND DYING.

CONSENSUS OF OPINION THAT COLD WILL DESTROY HIM — HOW EXTERMINATION BY FIRE MAY OCCUR — OLD SOL HASTENING TOWARD SISTER SUN. BUT MAN MUST FREEZE BEFORE COLLISION—DANGER FROM SOME DARK STAR—EARTH MAY CEASE REVOLVING OR SHIFT HER POLES—PERHAPS LAST MAN WILL SMOTHER.

By a Special Contributor.

THAT the last human inhabitant of our planet will be frozen to death I find to be the consensus of scientific opinion. One astronomer, widely known, made for me a carefully computed estimate that eight-ninths of the sun's energy has already been expended; that at least three millions of years must elapse before the remaining ninth will burn out. The entire solar system will then be bathed in perpetual night, but will continue to move through space.

All life, animal as well as vegetable, will have been exterminated before the last glimmer of the dying sun has been seen. Man will have learned to manufacture artificial daylight millenniums before the curtain of perpetual light has been drawn. He will have learned, too, to make sun heat, artificially, on a wholesale scale; but he will be unable to cope with his frigid surroundings after the great central star now warming him shall have lost its last spark.

This cooling and darkening of the earth will be very gradual, the astronomer went on to specify. Eventually the great oceans will freeze over. Later their moisture will be utterly absorbed by the land and they will be dry abysses. Later still, our atmosphere will have entirely ceased to be vapor and will lie like snow upon the crust of the earth. Earth will thus become like the moon. Even the snow will eventually vanish. All moisture and vegetation being gone, there will be nothing left to keep our planet's crust dark. It will become white and parched like the sands of our desert as it dries. There will be no electricity; no thunderstorms.

The French astronomer, Flammarion, pictures the last great focus of civilization as flourishing in the center of equatorial Africa—London, Paris and New York having been buried beneath ice a hundred thousand years before. Smaller remnants of the human race will struggle almost as long in South America, at the mouth of the Amazon River, and on the island of Ceylon. But the last of his race will die in the great Sahara, his habitation being buried deep in overpowering snow.

Earth will revolve more and more slowly upon her axis; the days will grow longer, the moon more distant, the air dryer, according to this picture. The sun, once bluish white, will become golden, then reddish at midday in the hottest weather. These changes will be perceived long before the last day of man's reign.

May be Frizzled up.

Next in likelihood, we will be burned to extermination. This was the favored theory of the ancients, who saw much biblical basis for the fear. But there is no scientific foundation for any theory that our planet will [illegible] frizzle up arbitrarily, so to speak. The heat must come from the sun, made hotter by some other glowing body fallen into it, or must be generated by our own collision with one of the denizens of ether.

The sun is darting through space at the terrific speed of [illegible] miles per hour, or about 1000 times as fast as our express trains. It is carrying earth and her sister planets along with it. Imagine the sun to be a great cannon ball, darting straight for some mark in the heavens, carrying a volley of buckshot and fine bird shot along with it. The buckshot, representing the planets not only revolve about the central cannon ball, but also, each on its own axis. The pieces of birdshot, representing the moons, revolve about some of the buckshot. This means that the earth, whizzing spirally like a rifle ball, is covering the same space. It might be compared with a bee buzzing about a moving cannon ball. Old Sol must hit something, some day, it would seem. "There are more stars in the heavens than there are grains of sand on the seashore," one astronomer told me. These scientists have been carefully figuring as to the direction of the sun's flight. To further verify their calculation, D. O. Mills, a millionaire New York banker, lately donated a generous sum.

[illegible] Headed for Another Sun.

We are headed for the stars forming that constellation called the "Lyre" or "Harp." Such is indicated by the measurements so far made. The "Lyre" is one of the great star groups of the northern heavens. It is formed of five distant suns, four of them marking the corners of an oblong, and the fifth, brightest of all—above and to the left—is known as Vega. Vega is the particular star toward which we are aimed, so it seems. In early winter it has fallen below the horizon before the sun sets, but in late summer we may see it above our heads, brilliant and blue, brighter than what astronomers term "the first magnitude."

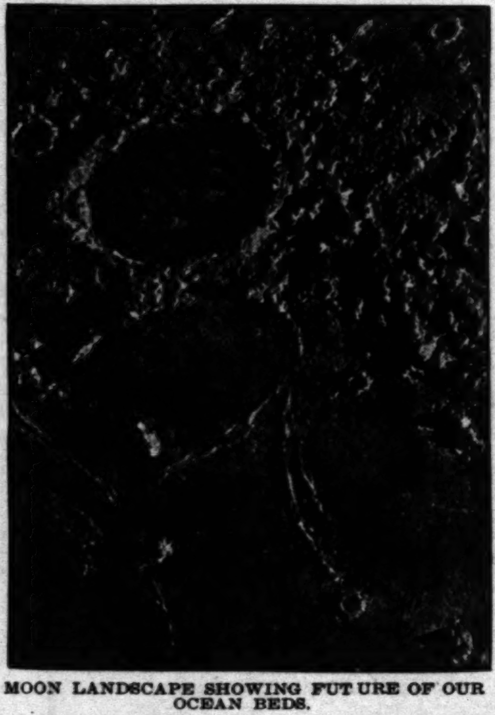
It would require nearly three billions of years to reach Vega on one of our mile-a-minute express trains, traveling at even speed, without interruption. Indeed, the great bull's eye of our stellar target is so distant that a quarter century is required for each of its light waves to reach us. Thus Vega might drop out of the heavens tonight, but be visible to us until 1930. Were any of its surrounding planets inhabited by people equipped with telescopes powerful enough to bring you into view they would see you today as you were twenty-five years ago.

[illegible] be no Men Then.

Earth will reach Vega in about four millions of years if aimed straight at her. This is, of course, a mere approximation. The most learned astronomers are unable to calculate with any approach to accuracy the distances of the stars, so many millions of times further away than the planets of our system. Twelve million generations will pass before the catastrophe is due, and if we accept the hypothesis presented in the first part of this article the sun will have totally lost its light a million years before it may reach Vega. Millenniums before this time our entire posterity will have frozen to death!

"Earth will probably pass through the Lyre without damage," answered one of these learned men, "granting that we ever reach constellation. There is only one chance in a million that our solar system will ever strike one of these stars. Of course, if our planet were to collide with a body relatively great, it might be swept entirely away from the sun. Astronomers will give the signal many centuries in advance of our reaching any other obstacle lying directly in our path. Meanwhile we will jog quietly along through space."

"Two effects would result from earth's or the sun's collision with any body in the Lyre," answered another savant. "Earth would either become a glowing ball of fire or would lose its present position in the solar system. If a large body should strike our planet sufficiently hard to alter its present poise in space the sun's great attraction would probably draw it in. Then all living things not already frozen out would be frizzled up. It might take a year before we would reach the sun, but we would all be destroyed before reaching half way there, for earthly temperature would have gone up to five or six hundred degrees. Supposing that we should reach this half-way point after the sun should have sufficiently cooled for us to withstand its heat? A year would be but three months long. Earth's velocity would be four times as fast as it is now. All movable things, including ourselves would be thrown off into space by centrifugal force, as would our buildings.



MOON LANDSCAPE SHOWING FUTURE OF OUR OCEAN BEDS.

"Earth would never burn up entirely, even if striking some heavenly body so hot as to set it on fire. It would develop from an incandescent to a gorgeous form, ultimately cooling down into a solid again."

Dark Star May Strike us.

A dark star may collide with our sun, I am told by other students of the heavens. Recent investigations indicate that space abounds with these burned-out suns, many of them larger than our own. The dog star Sirius, for example, has a dark companion star wholly invisible but which can be measured by delicate astronomic instruments. It is equal to our sun in size, but one of its years makes fifty of ours. One authority tells me that there probably are more dark luminous stars. Each of these cold suns has undergone the process in store for Old Sol. Sometimes one reawakens and glows with fire, as did the star Nova Persei, suddenly visible in the heavens in February, 1901. This once-dead sun really blazed forth anew a century ago, the intervening time being required for the vanguard of its light waves to reach us.

A picture of what might happen were Old Sol to collide with a dark sun is drawn by Dr. Simon Newcomb, professor of astronomy at Johns Hopkins. Such a body, having no orbit, is first seen through a great telescope on the Himalayas. Combining its mass with that of our sun it imparts to the latter an unearthly glow, which spreads over our landscape, whose pebbles glisten like diamonds. Man sees the sun doubled in size, its brightness fourfold. People remove to their cellars to keep cool while fire engines sprinkle the roofs of buildings. Man finally takes refuge in caves. The ocean boils like a pot, lightning flashes everywhere and scalding rain falls. Above the subterranean caverns giving asylum to the last remnants of humanity bubbles a sea of hot mud. They cannot escape. They starve.

May Pass Through a Nebula.

The last man may become engulfed in a fiery mist of that category which astronomers call "nebulae." These are supposed to be the raw material out of which stars and planets and moons are made. They are gaseous bodies, millions of miles in extent and glowing—some say—with heat so intense that it could not be measured by any of our standards of temperature. Spinning with terrific velocity, shrinking and cooling, they gradually congeal into stars; fragments of the latter into planets, which send off lesser fragments, forming moons. It is one of these truant mists of glowing gas which set fire to the star Nova Persei, mentioned above. What if our sun should pass through one of these masses and add to its heat? And what if earth itself should become enveloped in one.

The heavens are filled with these floating bodies. Indeed they cover, in an irregular patchwork, almost the entire background of the sky. Some astronomers believe them to be cold masses and, granting that this is true, the friction caused by the earth's darting through one would be sufficient to frizzle us all up. Some are thousands of times larger than the entire solar system and apparently contain solid matter.

Collision with a large meteor is feared by some stargazers whom I have visited. "Suppose earth were struck by a meteor one-half its size," one astronomer explained. "There may be meteors of such magnitude. If there can be small ones there can probably be larger ones. The largest which has struck the earth within historic times has weighed only a few tons, however. Such bodies falling upon our crust might kill one or two persons. But if earth should be struck by a meteor half its size our balance in space would be disturbed and the sun's great attraction might draw us in."

If Comet Hits us—What?

Of course, a comet may hit us. I queried several professional star-gazers on this point. "Suppose it should? It might knock down a skyscraper or two. Nothing worse would happen," was one reply. "A comet hitting the earth would produce about the same relative shock as a feather hitting a baseball," quoth another. "A comet is a gaseous body. We went through the tail of one in 1883, when Hawaii's volcano went into eruption. The only effect was a haziness and red glare in the sky. There has never been record of a comet sufficiently large to knock the earth out of position. The largest would give us a red sky; nothing more serious."

There are millions of comets in space. Indeed, the great astronomer, Kepler, used to say that there were more of these bodies in the heavens than there are fishes in the sea. The material of the head of a comet, or that part which glistens like a star, may be solid, liquid or gaseous. Astronomic opinion varies. One view is that the particles are separated like flakes of snow in a winter storm. One authority opined before we passed through the comet's tail in 1883 that the near approach of a large body of this category would greatly heat the earth, perhaps to a disastrous degree.

Any sudden stopping of the earth would be fatal, according to another wise doctor, who says: "The earth would be heated more than 190,000 degrees by being stopped—that is, it would at once become more than sixty times as hot as melted iron." Hence, according to this view, our collision with even a cold body would generate enough heat to roast us to powder, were the shock to stop us on our path through space.

A lava flow might engulf us all were we to collide with some cold body, imparting an impact sufficiently great to liberate the interior heat of the earth, but too small to stop our motion through space.

Earth May Stop Revolving.

Earth, moreover, may cease to revolve on her axis and may hang in space with one side toward the sun. This suggestion I have from an astronomer who is studying the polar wobblings. This wobbling, perhaps, results from a slackening of earth's speed of revolution. If this were to continue to the point of cessation what would be the state of affairs. Only one-half of the world would be habitable. The entire human race would have to crowd into it, for freezing would be the fate of those remaining on the shady side. Were the sunny side mostly sea a greater part of humanity would have to live in boats. Those unable to withstand the intense heat at the center of the sunny hemisphere might find more bracing climate by approaching the boundary between the light and dark halves of the globe.

"Our planet may slip around until the present poles fall within the temperate zones, or even the torrid," suggested another learned scientist. There is a theory, based like all of the above, on some logical foundation, that Mother Earth has before performed this antic and that what are now her poles have not always been such. In Spitzenbergen and Greenland, now covered with Arctic ice, fossils of plants such as grow today only in the tropics and semi-tropics have been found. Among these are species of lime, magnolia and swamp cypress.

Man will have a grand moving time when the somersault is turned by Mother Earth. This will he experience if any of his kind survive the great freeze-out and flood which would inevitably result. Should you wake up some morning and suddenly discover the north pole to have shifted into your back yard over night, what would you set about to do? Perhaps you would have to wait six months for daylight to appear, for a polar night is a half year long, from equinox to equinox. The railroads near you would all be buried in snow, the rivers all frozen. It would be a sorry plight indeed to have to grope your way out through the prolonged blackness of things.

All posterity must smother, say others, for no less a light than Lord Kelvin, the great British physicist, has lately pointed out that there is only enough oxygen left in the air to last us 300 more years if we continue our present extravagant rate of consumption by furnaces and what not.

The nitrogen supply, too, is becoming exhausted, others figure. If it continues to dwindle, life must die. The animal life must eat itself up.

The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Grounds.

PROGRESS IN GARDENING.

A TENDENCY TO LEAVE WALL PAPER DESIGNS FOR THE ARTISTIC.

By Ernest Braunton.

THOUGH our present-day gardening is not all that could be wished, gardening in general, and landscape gardening in particular, has had a pleasing development along healthy lines during the past few years. At one time our parks were overfull of wall-paper designs in beds of hideous color; now such beds are comparatively few in number, less complex in plan, and more restful in color. At times the parks have also been much overplanted, but later long views, looking away to artistic effects, have been opened through the general mass of vile blue gums which have too long cumbered our park areas. Corresponding faults in our private gardens have also been remedied until sometimes we feel that, after all, our planning and planting will finally rest on a substantial and appropriate foundation.

In spite of many admonitions, and entirely contrary to all rational rules and laws on gardening, we are occasionally given some horrible examples of the gardener's "art." Of these the carpet beds in formal style are the most inexcusably ugly. In spite of the needs of the grounds, either from a topographical or an architectural standpoint, we have "pattern" plans which would scarcely be accepted by a carpet weaver or wall-paper factory. We see all too many small dabs of hideous beet-top colors a few inches or a foot across, and medleys of unsuitable plants that only confuse and bewilder the passer-by. In addition to undesirable plant life in scrolls and knots, we often find in pretentious gardens plastered cement walls, gigantic water squirts, petrified "gods," rude statues, and castiron railings of stereotyped design. Why should trees be planted and pruned like so many sentinels or lamp posts? Why should not they retain their natural form instead of being clipped into unnatural and often fantastic forms? Why may not a garden entrance be planted in a simple, rather than a formal manner? In this day and age we should be relieved of this ancient book-pattern gardening, and have gardens so rich in plants and flowers yet so simple in design that we could admire them. As it is, many of them seem made only for the purpose of surprising the visitor. We pause to stare and wonder, but not to admire. Plato said: "The greatest and fairest things are done by nature and the lesser by art." Let us return to first principles in gardening and copy nature more closely; we shall then make fewer mistakes.

Window Boxes.

Buildings whose lines of architecture are unusually stiff and conventional and whose colors are quiet, like the quaker drab of many of our plastered residences, need the vine and window garden more than all others. Delicate growth of vines take away the harsh effects of too many straight lines, softening them into harmony with the surroundings. They also relieve the glaring effect of plain walls of brick, cement, or stone. Window boxes are equally useful and not less ornamental. The plain neutral gray of many Florentine Mission houses need a touch of color to brighten their otherwise somber appearance. It is also true that window boxes do much to lighten the paint and stain effects on wooden buildings. For the purpose nothing seems more suitable than ivy geraniums, and these may be had in a great variety of colors or shades. For dark buildings any shade from pure white to pink will prove harmonious, but those having a touch of magenta or purple should be avoided either in window box or garden. For the "quaker gray" above noted, the pinks only should be used and the deeper the gray or cream of plastered houses, the deeper should be the shade of the flowers used. This class of geraniums has been much improved of late, and you may easily obtain any shade of pink desired.

All shades of pink—Archduke Charles

Box of ivy geraniums

Watch Your Roses.

If your rose bushes began their annual period of rest at the proper time it will be necessary to watch them closely from now on. If they have not a deep and extensive root system they may begin to suffer for want of water. Do not be alarmed, however, if all the leaves should fall—the bushes are in no danger—better watch the wood. If the bark on canes smaller than a lead pencil begins to wither it is time to prune and afterward water. If no such conditions exist, they may be left longer. In case of roses well established or rested late in summer you need not trouble about them for a month or more. Unless roses are needed for some specific date there is no reason why large bushes need more than the winter's rains to get the best results.

Cut away all weak or superfluous wood and cut back the large canes to make a shapely plant; don't be afraid of pruning too heavily. Leave no canes or twigs smaller than a lead pencil on any part of the bush. At the same time experiment a little; take two plants of the kind—cut one back heavily—the other less so, and the result. Perhaps with your treatment and a soil, your roses demand a pruning somewhat from those of other sections; nevertheless, the mon mistake comes from too little pruning. The left should make a framework as near possible, having an open center to allow light and air. After the waterings have brought new growth a little you may fertilize heavily growth is made. Experiment with disbudding. It pay.

Feeding Roses.

After growth starts, not a day should be lost in ing on the plants by liberal applications of commercial fertilizer. When a rose bush form its buds a great demand is made upon the for nourishment. With us generally the weather dry so that watering becomes necessary; if, heavy rains have fallen, an application of fertilizer will most quickly help the plant, taking work it well into the soil, and should rain not quickly, give some more water. Every rose should possess, in a convenient spot, a barrel or liquid manure; this will be found one of the best zers the rose can receive, and also one of the most nomical.

In applying, either hoe a furrow about one from the stems of the plants or pour it on the work over the soil surface after a few hours have These applications may be repeated twice a the color in the bud is visible, then it should be tinued; but keep up watering and cultivation. ter is regarded by all practical growers as their to healthy plants, and if there are healthy means immunity to a great extent from the aphis and the unsightly mildew. Disbudding, showy blooms are required, must not be delayed. Tea roses of the very double section not only the superfluous flower buds removed, the growths that break out over the entire bush. on any account disbud the decorative roses in positions, for in their freedom and delightful and panicles of blossom lies their chief

Violet Culture.

The best variety of violets to grow in fornia undoubtedly is the Princess. A few was nearly all the California with a few and other sorts, but the Princess has adapted to the southern part of the State, and have been discarded by the trade, whose amateur might watch with profit. The best sandy loam; it must be friable and easily tilizers should seldom be used except stable the shape of a mulch. Our soils are usually rich in food for these plants. Violets may easily fed by two much nitrogenous food, in which bear mostly leaves and very few flowers. The not stand quick-acting fertilizers, and the only can be recommended is finely-ground, and this must be pure and used sparingly. waterings and cultivation are the keynotes to is the case with nearly all garden plants in our

The True Poppies.

The true poppies belong to the genus Papaver, have but one native to Southern California (P. nica). This is a rare plant with a very ordinary and of no garden value. Owing to the great brilliancy of their colors, the true popies are nearly every garden. Added to this the ease with they grow has made a place for them with flower lovers. Of garden poppies, there are tivated but four species: The opium poppy, poppy, the Iceland poppy, and the Oriental these, the opium poppy is by far the greatest has the largest flowers of any annual species. useless for cut flowers, the plants are tall and bear an abundance of blossoms in brilliant that people are content to leave the flowers

The corn poppy is more dwarf than the with finer-cut leaves. The well-known Shirley the best and most popular strain of this Iceland poppy is a perennial species with yellow, and white, and is not much grown in California. With many garden owners the poppy is the favorite on account of its having flowers of all the family. In the East it is the all to grow either from seeds or by root our State the air seems too dry. Still, it well if never allowed to suffer for moisture. poppies are easy of cultivation; all like rich generous supply of water. They are best sown and should be weeded until the poppies get a and then, if sown thickly enough, they will care selves, except for watering.

SCHOOL GARDENS.

REMARKABLE SUCCESS ATTENDING THE WOMEN'S EFFORTS.

By a Special Contributor.

THE most healthful and profitable movement inaugurated in Los Angeles for many, many years, is the school-garden work so successfully launched by the women's clubs of the city. It is indeed pleasing to note the remarkable success attending their efforts, and how loyally they have been supported by press and people. The school-garden idea is growing and will continue to receive a constantly increasing share of public attention. From many parts of the country reports reach us bearing witness to this widespread interest. There can be no question but that the movement should be encouraged by all; it is not alone a work for the few. If the younger generation has implanted in it an intelligent interest in garden work in general together with an intelligent acquaintance with growing plants, there will not be the [illegible] much work in garden art in the future as there [illegible] in the past.

[illegible] far behind other countries in this great work, [illegible] Americans have a happy way of "catching up" [illegible] passing all the older countries in any move[illegible] especially meritorious. Let us hope it will be so [illegible] school-garden work. School gardens have been in [illegible], in some countries, for centuries. As early as [illegible] beginning of the fourteenth century, in some cities of [illegible], for instance, in Salerno and Venice, institutions [illegible] found in which plants from all parts of the world [illegible] every climate were cultivated for the purpose of in[illegible] and the promotion of science. In Germany also [illegible] zeal for botanical gardens has been noticeable [illegible] the close of the sixteenth century. No German seat [illegible] higher learning is without such a garden, which fur[illegible] material for instruction in botany and for exper[illegible] with agricultural plants.

[illegible] has made the widest extension in the develop[illegible] of the school gardens. Scarcely any public school [illegible] there is found without such a garden. There are [illegible] gardens in Belgium, where a large part of the pop[illegible] depends upon truck gardening, the result of which [illegible] to the school garden. France also is doing [illegible] work along this line, there being over 30,000 schools [illegible] garden attached. Many communities in Switzer[illegible] giving attention to school gardening, and they [illegible] increasing in number. The government en[illegible] them in this work. The law in Austria pre[illegible] instruction to be given in agriculture in all nor[illegible], and ordered the establishment of school gar[illegible] villages, for the purpose of aiding agriculture, [illegible] also that instruction in natural history be [illegible] with work in school gardens. The flourish[illegible] culture of Bohemia can chiefly be attributed to [illegible] which the inhabitants have received in [illegible] gardens attached to public schools.

[illegible] could be filled with the work of other countries [illegible] grand movement, but our interest should center at home. In this State little has been accomplished, and this little has resulted from the enthusiastic efforts of a few. In Los Angeles the school garden is here to stay, but the movement needs financial support for broadening the work and enlarging the field. Those deeply interested in horticulture or children (or both) owe to the coming generation a debt which can only be paid by a liberal support of this grand work which marks a milestone in the onward and upward march of our race.

Purposeless Pillars.

Among the most common blots that mar the city view in these latter days are the purposeless pillars that stand, sentinel-like, at the entrance to so-called "tracts." If these were surmounted with a lamp or electric light they might be overlooked on the score of usefulness, but as a rule no such excuse is offered. Pillars bear precisely the same relation to stone walls that do posts to wire or wooden fences, and standing alone are as useless in every way as a line of posts without the fence proper, or a lamp post minus the lamp. On the other hand we have many good examples of pillars with well-designed stone walls or iron fences abutting, or gates hanging thereto; pillars which are both useful and ornamental.

Coming Flower Shows.

We are to have three notable flower shows during the next thirty days—all worth attending, even if involving a considerable trip. The first one will be held this week, October 10, 11 and 12, at Santa Barbara. This show is always a big success. Valuable cups and cash premiums, amounting to several hundred dollars, are offered. During the latter part of this month the State Floral Society will hold its annual exhibition in the Ferry Building, San Francisco. Besides special cash premiums the society always award gold and silver medals. Our Southern Californian Flower Show occurs the first week in November, at Blanchard and Symphony Halls (connected). At this show several valuable cups and special awards will be presented the lucky winners. Two of these are already on hand; a cup from The Times for the best collection of economic tropical plants and another one from Arthur Letts for the best collection of novelties; both solid silver.

Restriction of Automobiles.

In parks like Griffith, where the roads are narrow and the topography broken with steep declivities and precipices, it may be necessary to restrict the automobilist somewhat. Quite a number of persons may be found who would keep out the "chug wagons" from such roads, but we might as well protest against the tides coming in, so universal has the use of these machines become. It may, nevertheless, become necessary to curb the reckless driver. The following rules for the regulation of automobiles are enforced at Springfield, Mass.:

"Conductors of automobiles must be skilled in the management of such vehicles, and must present a permit for inspection whenever requested by a park officer or any other employé of the park.

"No automobile shall be run at a rate of speed faster than six miles per hour

"When horses become frightened or restive at the approach of an automobile, the conductor shall immediately bring it to a full stop.

"Conductors of automobiles must not sound the bell or gong except at the intersection of drives.

"In case of an accident caused by a horse becoming frightened at the approach of an automobile, the conductor shall immediately report the same to the Superintendent of Parks."

A Fine Begonia.

Begonia manicata aurea has large beautifully mottled leaves of yellow and green and fine pink flowers. It will endure the dry heat of the ordinary living-room as well as any plant we have and will stand an unusual amount of neglect and ill-usage. Those who have grown it as a house plant prefer it to all other begonias.

GERMAIN'S BULBS

FOR FALL AND WINTER PLANTING

ADAPTED TO OPEN GROUND CULTURE, CONSERVATORY, GREENHOUSE, WINDOW AND POT CULTURE

Our descriptive catalogue of Dutch and other bulbs is now ready for mailing—a copy is yours for the asking. In it we give cultural directions and a complete description, with illustrations, of all the standard and newest varieties of Hyacinths, Tulips, Crocus, Anemones, Ranunculus, Iris, Lillies, Freesias, Tuberoses, Gladiolus, etc.

Correspondence invited, a personal call at our retail stores a pleasure. At any rate let us send you the catalogue. We are the oldest and largest importers of bulbs south of San Francisco and west of Denver.

Farming in California—The Land and Its Products.

CONDUCTED BY J. W. JEFFREY, AGRICULTURAL EDITOR.

FIELD NOTES.

Walnut Prices Advanced.

THE Walnut Growers' Association has fixed the price of nuts one cent per pound higher than the schedule of last year. This will draw attention to the walnut industry with renewed force. Soft shells will sell at 13 cents per pound; standards at 12½ cents. Second grades of each, four cents lower. The paper making this announcement says the crop will be 75 carloads short of that of last season. This association represents 25,000 acres of walnut groves, 6000 of which are at Whittier and Rivera. The output from the association last year was 506 cars of 20,000 pounds each. Since the general use of walnut kernels in confections began the demand for walnuts has run far beyond the supply, and now perhaps double the tonnage of nuts at present grown could be sold at the prices lately fixed by the growers.

Cold Water Pourers.

SOME doubts as to the value of the new nitrogen-fixing bacteria have been cast in the minds of the farmers by certain members of the agricultural press in the East. The so-called scandal in which Dr. Moore's name was used gave occasion for the weaker journals to reflect upon the utility of the discovery. But the University of Illinois has removed all doubts in this matter from the minds of those who know the conservatism and thoroughness of that institution's experiments. The name of Cyril G. Hopkins is attached to Bulletin No. 94, published at Urbana, Illinois, and this finally settles the question in favor of using the bacteria with tens of thousands of farmers of the Middle West. The most serious consequences following the charges against Dr. Moore is the element of uncertainty induced by these agricultural writers. Happily it is disappearing, and only needed the name of Hopkins to wipe it out for all time.

Banana Growing.

W. L. MOORE, of Los Angeles writes: "I can give the gentleman on Main street a little information on banana culture which I hope will be of value to him and others experimenting with this fruit. Plant the trees about six feet apart each way, and when they have grown good and strong, dig a trench between each row about 18 inches wide and one foot deep and fill these trenches with sea weed (kelp) which washes up on the beaches near Los Angeles, and can be had for the hauling. It makes a fine fertilizer, besides furnishing the trees with the salt contained in the weed which the banana plant needs. I am a native of the Bermuda Islands, where they grow a very choice banana, much better in flavor than those coming from Jamaica and the other West India Islands. This is the system of cultivation used there."

Inexcusable Mistakes.

IT is astonishing what an amount of misinformation may be written into an item by a journal published within a stone's throw of the source of the news. A Santa Barbara paper in referring to the introduction of the scutellista into the orchards of the county says the fly will destroy all the scale in less than one year. "It is a sure exterminator for the black scale, and in some instances has proven equally so for what is known as the purple and red scales. Scutellista was first brought into the valley on orange and lemon branches. On examining the branches can be found the black scale; by taking the blade of a pocket knife and raising the edge of the scale will be found the egg of the scutellista. When the egg hatches it comes in the form of a tiny grub worm and feeds exclusively on the scale, each usually consuming the whole amount where the egg was deposited."

With a few exceptions the above item is correct. The scutellista was not introduced first into Santa Barbara county on branches, but was sent in two years ago in boxes. It will not destroy all the scale in years, and is not a sure exterminator of this pest. The purple and red scale are under no circumstances attacked by the scutellista. The egg of the scutellista is exceedingly difficult to find, none of our closest observers ever having published the fact of seeing one so far as I have read. The "worm" of this fly is not a grub, having no legs such as adorn almost all the grub worms. It does not feed upon the scale as far as has been determined, but lives upon the juices of the eggs of the scale. I believe the other statements above quoted by the Santa Barbara paper are substantially correct.

Treatment of Run-down Grove.

A CORRESPONDENT who has a ten-acre Valencia orange grove which produced a lucrative crop two years ago, a lesser crop last year, and no fruit this season asks for a restorative process. The soil is a light loam, rather easy of cultivation, in a warm locality and with trees perfectly healthy but with no prospects of setting more fruit till something is done to bring back the former activities. With Valencias at the present price, heroic measures would be in order. From one-half to a whole load of stable manure to the acre would be the first application. Then water heavily if the means is at hand, and sow to peas. Twelve pounds of bat guano and nearly as much bone meal to the tree should follow. About the first of February plow as deeply as the trees will allow and harrow thoroughly. One pound of nitrate of soda to the tree applied the latter part of March or the first of April followed one month later with another pound would put the trees in shape to produce a fine crop of fruit in the summer of 1907. While the amount of stable manure seems rather heavy if one carload to the acre is applied, it must be remembered that the soil is badly run down, that it is light and that the Valencia orange cannot be easily damaged by very heavy applications of nitrogenous fertilizers. Of course nothing can be done to bring this orchard into shape the coming season, for it has made little wood growth and little or no provision for bearing next spring.

Variegated Climate.

I HAVE apples from the Mojave River and bananas from Hollywood—the antithesis of conditions that have made Southern California famous. The apples would grow equally well in Siberia and the bananas better in Honduras. But it is a distinction to raise bananas of such good quality as these, for it means that less tropical fruits may be grown to perfection, or that we may use this splendid plant for decorative purposes and occasionally get a good lot of fruit. The apples of the Mojave show what a good locality the high desert soil may occupy for the production of this crop. The orchard is an abandoned place, the trees loaded with apples with no cultivation and yet of a superior quality. There is no reason apparent as to why Southern California should import 700 or 800 carloads of apples while there is land idle which would produce at least sufficiently for the home market, and of apples as good as any country could show. It is true we have the codling moth with us always. But there are remedies for this pest. The new parasite sent over by Compere has not made any showing as yet. It may do better later. Every apple country on the continent has this moth to contend against, and, inasmuch as it has not made its presence felt in the mountainous localities, yet it is worth while for those seeking investments to explore the offerings of cheap land that are being made, possibly to the financial benefit of the investors and certainly to the trying out of another resource that would if successful keep thousands of dollars at home.

Application of Sprays.

I HAVE never knowingly dissuaded anyone from the use of cyanide as an insecticide. Other remedies are said to be cheap, efficient and easy of application, but all will agree that they do not reach the spot with the scientific precision of the fumigating processes. It is also agreed that more care must be used in spraying, especially in regions near the coast, to prevent immediate or remote injury to the trees and fruit. In answer to a correspondent as to the use of liquid insecticides, I will say that there is less merit in some of the contract spraying now being done than is justified by the merits of the spray. Most of the scales are pretty thoroughly protected themselves, and no one can hope to reduce them by the application of coarse spray. The application should be driven with all the force possible, both to reduce its coarseness and to give it penetrative power. The use of distillate in proper proportions is not immediately harmful to foliage or fruit. An overdose is sure to injure the devitalized foliage that is not felt upon the healthy leaves. Extremes of heat, and possibly of cold will increase the injury. It is a mistake to hold that distillate emulsified by mechanical means can be applied as effectively and as safely as the same substance applied as a properly-prepared emulsion. The force used in churning together the oil and water in the tank will not prevail after the drops reach the tree, but repulsion will set in and separate the ingredients, either producing harm from non-evaporation or failing to penetrate the scale and do the work which is intended. Another question is raised by the correspondent. Can a permanent emulsion be produced? Yes, with the oils, but not with the sulphur or vitriol remedies. In the experiments made on a large scale in this country this spring with sulphur sprays the efficacy was in proportion to the thoroughness of the cooking process and the immediate application thereof. The Bordeaux mixture should never be prepared far in advance of the use. A stock solution of the lime, and another of the copper sulphate may be made for convenience, but the amalgamation should occur but a short time before the application.

Of Interest to Orange Growers.

HAVE you seen the new orange and lemon clipper? If you have not, one of the novelties of the season has been overlooked, and I think one of the best additions to the economics of handling the citrus fruit crops that has ever been devised. The clipper is the invention of Emil P. Steffa of Pomona. It has been tried in actual work, and seems to be just the thing the growers have been waiting for since Mr. Powell showed them the results of using the clipper. One arm of the device is the shape of the ordinary clipper when opened for work. This arm is a rigid fork the prongs of which are considerably longer than the cutting blade on the other arm. The blade is a part of the other arm, and it works above the rigid jaws of the lower arm somewhat on the principle of a horse clipper. When the rigid fork is slipped over the stem of the fruit, the cutting blade is operated just as the jaws of an ordinary clipper are brought together. This device gives the cutting knife a traveling surface over the two arms of the solid fork, insuring the protection of the fruit from the cutting and gouging so prevalent in the work of the old implement. Mr. Steffa's attention was called to this need by the work of Mr. Powell, cutter will make it almost impossible for the damage the fruit in the way so prominently notice by the investigations of Mr. Powell. In amination of twenty-two representative groves sult of careless cutting was from 8 to 35 per fruit injured and made subject to the ills ported across the continent. While a large this damage may be traced to flagrant careless

Gardening in California—Flower and Vegetable.

The New Onion Culture.

A GENTLEMAN just arrived from the East with some intention of growing onions called upon the editor of this department about a week ago to get information as to the character of the soils of the localities near Los Angeles. I gave him a copy of the pamphlet upon the soil areas of the western portion of Los Angeles county containing a fine map of the different soils constituting the arable region of this portion of the county. Another map in the same bulletin marks the alkali spots in the district. He will find very little in the cultivation of onions here that is different from that of the East, except as the climate may have modified the time of planting. The new onion culture so much written about in the east really originated in California and among the Portuguese growers. It consists simply of a transplanting process, instead of sowing the seed in the row where the bulbs are to grow. At the same time there is nothing that has made such a deep impression upon the market garden as this process of growing the onion plants in a bed and removing them to the field after they have become strong and of size to make field culture feasible. By this plan the American onion grower is now able to put upon the market bulbs one year from the seed equal to the best imported onions, and it has in a degree revolutionized this industry since its introduction fifteen years ago. The seed is sown in beds an inch and a half or two inches apart, using an ounce of seed to ten square feet of ground. The soils should be of a sandy loam and very rich. As soon as the plants have become strong they are planted in rows far enough apart for irrigation with the seedlings three to four inches apart in the rows. In the Gulf region the seed beds are put out in the fall, allowing transplanting as soon as the soil has become warm, and giving the advantage of vigorous plants ready to produce very early crops. In the more northern districts of the South the onion beds are planted in February, and plants set from them by the first of April.

Yard Gardens.

The revelations in the daily press of the city showing that some of the market gardeners have returned to the use of sewage water for irrigating their crops has induced several of our citizens to attempt their own gardening who would not do so were it not for the fear of eating contaminated vegetables. I suggested to one of the coming planters that he would have to reckon with the linnets, slugs and worms. One man will circumvent the birds by screening off a portion of his yard with close-woven wire. This is rather expensive unless it is for a patch of lettuce, in which case a very small area will raise enough for a large family, from which a fresh supply of this succulent may be cut every day, and far superior to the wilted stuff sold by the Celestial peddlers. Lettuce will grow pretty well here in the winter in less sheltered places. The ground should be well dressed with stable manure, putting on about a bushel of this fertilizer to the square yard, and working the manure and soil well together. In order to get a good stand and economize space, the seed should be sown thickly, about 50 to the foot, thinning out to about ten to the foot when the plants get well established. The rows should be a foot apart. By careful thinning for the table and a series of new plantings, a constant supply can be had from a very little ground. One grower says two feet of good rich soil will supply each member of the family for the season. It is useless in some portions of the city to grow garden vegetables without protection from the birds, as most of our people have learned who have made the attempt. Of a very dry winter when green food is scarce, the linnets will ruin a large plot in a few hours, and some of the sparrows are equally destructive. Last spring some of the gardens escaped on account of the abundance of wild green things growing about the grounds. No better lettuce can be grown than that produced upon the back lot, as there is usually some shade from the April sun and many conditions favorable not found in the field.

School Gardens.

It has been held by many of the best friends of the common schools of this country that the intellectual ability of the youth has been cultivated at the expense of the aesthetic and the practical. We may be swinging to the other extreme in the prominence that athletics and manual training are having in the common schools and colleges. But it will be an error that will give a moral tone if the improvements in physique and health do that. At any rate economists are in fear that the country is tending toward the conditions that alarmed the English people so materially within the last few years as to the future stability of their nation. Getting the youth back to the soil is recognized as the only remedy for this evil tendency toward the cities. This is the most valuable feature of the school garden work. In the city schools the main idea is moral and ethical training and the establishment of good and clean surroundings. In the country schools the idea is practical work, that the development of agricultural life may be more attractive and substantial. All have a tendency to bring the children back to nature and to give their minds discipline and employment in what was thought to be the field of purely intellectual

The application of this great idea of school gardening and nature study seems to be having an immediate effect upon the adults of the country, judging from the number of publications one now sees at the news stalls relating to rural life. I have a magazine now before me containing 146 pages 10x14 inches in size, and there are at least a dozen of these big, beautiful publications now offered to the public where there were none within the memory of the High School students now in school. It is not boasting to say that The Times is keeping up with the procession by the introduction of new features relating to outdoor life. I have a photograph showing 288 school children working in one plot of ground in Hartford. Each child has a space of 3x5 feet, in which is planted two kinds of vegetables, one maturing above ground and the other a root crop; also two varieties of flowers. The teachers have already developed school gardens with their own hands and know definitely in advance just what the children need. The good of all this will come later. At least it is an experiment worth trying to the end.

Nature and Patriotism.

KEEPING one's own vine and fig tree, and a garden where it is possible, endears one to locality—a characteristic all too little prevalent with the globe-trotting American. The closer the environment of nature in some attractive form the more patriotic its associates. The "Ould Sod," the Scottish hills, the Rhine, the Danube, the mountains and vales of Switzerland have given remarkable individuality to the people who have grown up under these influences, and only the stress of circumstances has driven them to new locations. Homesickness is an actual disease with the mountaineers of Tennessee and Kentucky when they are taken away from the touch of their native surroundings. Gladstone was only exceeded in greatness by the trees he loved so well. Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, all retired to their country homes when the work of life was practically over, and Burr found his only friend the wilds of the West when he had forfeited his position among men. One of the "nature magazines" has a series of pictures of the greatest man now living, taken in the woods of Long Island, and this famous man would rather be in the forests of Colorado than riding before the plaudits of the people in the streets of Washington City. But when the average citizen can no longer find a retreat with primitive nature he will have to bring the retreat to him artificially. That is occurring even now. Some of our best magazines are devoting whole editions to exploiting suburban improvements, the same consisting largely in the building up of artificial haunts in imitation of traditional or fast disappearing conditions. We have perpetuated nature in the "nicknames" of thirty-two States. The country is reforesting, protecting the fauna and the flora, setting aside huge areas of national reservations. The people are reading themselves back to nature in a revival of books and magazines devoted to rural life. Agricultural education is restoring the dignity of the once noblest of callings in popular estimation. Suburban homes have become so numerous that entire editions of the most attractive publications are devoted to them. All this means that we are on the road to a more patriotic and generally healthy national condition.

Three Importations.

CARISSA GRANDIFLORA.—From South Africa; known as the "Natal Plum," a spiny shrub, with fleshy, dark green leaves, large white flowers looking and smelling like jassamines, and oval, red colored berries of very pleasant taste. The plant is not at all particular about soil, it will stand slight frosts, and is sure to do well as a pot plant.

Cocos Griospatha.—This is a diminutive cocoa palm, and one of the hardiest among palms, coming from the basin of the River Platte, in South America, and being capable of standing several degrees of frost. It is rather a low growing kind, but will build a stout trunk with age. The fronds are of glaucous color, and generally arch down gracefully to the ground. Grown in the open, and in good condition, plants have begun to bear when only five or six years from seed, the liliput cocoanuts being produced in very large bunches, each of them the size of a large cherry, orange-red at maturity, the pulp surrounding the nuts having the smell and the taste of apricots. For indoor growing it will make a capital decorative plant, although fruits are likely to be produced at an older age.

Cyphomandra Betacea.—Known also as "Solanum betaceum," and popularly as the "tomato tree," is a small soft-wooded tree or large shrub from South America, now grown all over the temperate countries. It is a very quick grower, with remarkably rich foliage, particularly on the young plants; the flowers, which are profusely produced, are not unattractive, being of a rose color and fragrant. The fruits hang down from the branches and are oval -shaped, rather pointed at the extremities, of beautiful orange color when ripe, and of very pleasant taste, that can be defined something between the muskmelon and a delicate fleshed tomato. They can be prepared in different ways, and made also into a very fine jelly. Being such a vigorous grower, the tree tomato will need plenty of fertilizers if grown in the limited space of a pot or a box, but is easily brought to bear fruit even under glass.

Hunting Wild Ginseng.

NOW is the time to look for ginseng. It is in the thrifty hardwood forests of the East and Central States that we find the plant growing most abundantly. The root which is found in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Northern New York, Canada, etc., is of far superior quality to any found elsewhere in the United States, and brings by far the highest prices per pound. This makes it doubly profitable to the hunter of this section. There is also another paying feature at present connected with getting the root for market, owing to the great rush of those who contemplate starting into the cultivating of ginseng. A brisk demand has sprung up for stock to start cultivated gardens with, such as young plants, wild seed, etc.

Sometimes the hunter will find a large bed of very old roots and get from $1 to $2 worth of seed from them, and in good localities he will oftentimes find several dollars' worth of young plants that have started up from seeds that have fallen off in previous years and become buried in the leaves and dirt and grown. All of this is a clean extra which sells very readily at high prices. Ginseng is most plentifully found in the little valleys or runs which make down through the groves from the hilltops to the valley or swamp below. It is also often and plentifully found on the shores of small rills, where there is quite a brook in early spring, but soon dies out, leaving the land ever moist and rich, a typical place for ginseng.

Theatrical Agriculture.

FARMERS' institutes, seed-corn gospel trains, itinerant dairy schools on wagons, good-roads trains and similar agencies have developed a form of highly useful theatrical agriculture. Gifted teachers have thus been able not only to teach but to arouse the farmers. They have given some facts and they have added greatly to the desire of the farmer to seek facts for himself. They make a market for the wares of the experiment station and the Department of Agriculture, as the tree agent sells fruit trees where no orchards would be planted, or as the book agent forces books into homes which otherwise would have none. These advance agents of the literature which follows, free of even postage to the farmer and the farmer's wife, are doing much to popularize the institutions of research and education devoted to country life. Free rural delivery of mails, rural telephones, the activities of national and State governments, and of private publishers in putting facts up to the farmers, are shaking him out of his conservatism. Never were so many things doing in and for country life.—[Country Calendar.

Boston's Horticultural Show.

THE autumn exhibition of the Horticultural Society was of unusual scope and completeness, containing selections of all the more attractive horticultural products. The flower show was the most prominent feature, occupying the greater part of the main hall and including large exhibits from the Harvard botanic gardens and large florists near Boston.

The collection of ornamental, wild and cultivated berries was a prominent feature, also the show of water plants and colored lilies. The fruit show was quite complete, including specimens of many varieties of apples, pears, plums and peaches not commonly seen in exhibition.

The vegetable exhibitions were mostly by Boston and Worcester market gardeners, and as might be expected, included very choice specimens of fall products in this line. J. J. H. Gregory exhibited specimens of the Eldorado potato, a variety which has made a great sensation in England. Celery and squashes were among the most numerous of the vegetable exhibits. A few remarkably fine specimens of hothouse grapes were shown from various under-glass graperies, while the outdoor varieties were well represented. A unique feature was a collection of pears and apples from all parts of the world, showing the development of these fruits from the wild varieties. The specimens were from trees in the Arnold Arboretum at Jamaica Plain. The novelty list included Chinese vegetables, peanuts, fall-bearing strawberries, native wild potatoes, specimens of coffee, tea and pineapples.—[American Cultivator.

Planting Bulbs.

OCTOBER is the best time to plant bulbs for winter and spring flowering, though September is not too early, if it is possible to get them then. All spring blossoming bulbs make their root growth in the fall, and, as the beauty of the flowers depends upon a vigorous root development before the tops start to grow, six weeks or more should be allowed before they are brought into light and warmth or before the ground freezes to a depth of three inches. Good results can often be had from November planting or before heavy frost, but after November 1 bulbs as a class are weaker each day they remain out of the ground, and on December 1 it is too risky to buy them.

A sandy loam is the ideal soil. If the soil is heavy, add a liberal portion of sand and mix it well with the earth. If possible, put some well decomposed (not fresh) manure six inches or more below the bulbs. Never allow bulbs to come into direct contact with any kind of fertilizer, because the fermentation of manure makes the roots decay. Put a small handful of coarse sand under each bulb for drainage.

Plant the large bulbs, like hyacinths, from five to seven inches apart; small ones, like crocuses, three inches apart. A good rule is to cover the bulbs four times their own depth.—[Country Life.

In Nature's Wonderland

MARVELS OF THE NEW ZEALAND HOT LAKES REGION.

By a Special Contributor.

THE tourist in New Zealand cannot find a more interesting journey to place upon his itinerary than a visit to the famous thermal zone of the North Island. Six hours' run from Auckland our train topped a steep, ferny range, slipped through a cool and beautiful belt of forest, and then, at a rattling rate, descended nearly a thousand feet to the shores of a round lake of magical blue, with a dark purple islet resting pyramidal in its center. On the water side and at various points in the manuka shrubbery, that nearly everywhere clothed the lake flats, there rose countless smoke-like wreaths of steam—the sign and token of an eerie land. As the evening closed in, electric lights flashed out along the wide streets of the lakeside town, and soon we were enjoying the comforts of a large and luxurious hotel and wondering at the strange juxtaposition of man's handiwork and Nature's untamable marvels.

The whole place savors of the uncanny and sulphurous, in spite of the smart and modern air of the little town, with its churches and stores and electricity and railway; and our wonder was in no way diminished, next morning, when we threaded the narrow, devious paths of a Maori village built literally in the midst of boiling springs and steaming cauldrons by the lakeside, and engaged in a game of tennis on a grassy lawn alongside a brace of energetic but well-behaved geysers, bubbling and spouting and sending their curling steam clouds soaring through the pine groves like smoke wreaths from the great Manitou's peace pipe.

This is the town of Rotorua, the residential though not the geographical center of the famous Hot Lakes region of New Zealand, a thermal zone exceeding in dimensions, activity and variety of phenomena the Yellowstone Park and the geyser district of Iceland. The Rotorua thermal region is a great strip of hill and lake and land extending from near the eastern coast southwestward into the heart of the North Island, and terminating in the remarkable volcanic mountains of Tongariroo, Ngauruhoe and Ruapehu, whose enormous lava beds attest the appalling nature of the eruptive outbreaks in past ages. The volcanoes are now harmless and quiescent, and it is the opinion of geologists that the ejection of molten rock will never occur again in New Zealand. The varied forms of thermal action which make New Zealand the wonderland of the southern hemisphere culminate in grand geysers whose periodic outbursts are caused by the immense power of confined steam generated in the caverns of the underworld. The most astonishing example of the bursting power of steam is the giant geyser of Waimangu, seventeen miles from Rotorua—a veritable lake with an area of over two acres, which for several years at frequent intervals has been hurling its waters heavenward, with incredible force and velocity, to a height sometimes of 1500 feet.

Waimangu, however, is by no means the only great sight of the Rotorua district. There is probably no more thrilling and unforgetable water excursion in the world than that which we made one day across the wonderful Lake Roto-mahana. This weird sheet of water, filling the deep cavity of an enormous volcanic rift, is on the round trip route from Rotorua to Waimangu, and it is quite as imperishable a memory as the sight of the grandest of the globe's geysers. Our driving route from Rotorua took us first along the pumice plain, with the steaming geyser valley of Wharewarewa on our right, and the blue lake, sail-flecked and backed in the distance by a range of violet hills, lying calm and reposeful on our left. Then our road wound into the fern-clad hills, passing here and there a ruined fort, crumbling memorial of the ancient fighting days. A craggy mountain shoulder rose on our right; then we drove through a green and bird-haunted woodland on to the shores of a beautiful little lake, Tikotapu the enchanted, lone and mysterious in the heart of the bosoming hills.

Another lake soon came into view—Rotohkakahi, "The Lake of Shellfish," with a solitary green islet set on its motionless surface—and our drive terminated in the midst of the buried village of Te Wairoa, the tomb of half of the Tuhourangi tribe, who perished here in the Tarawera eruption of 1886. The ruins of the old European hotel, the native school, the little church, are to be seen; but time is quickly repairing the traces of destruction and death, and the whole site of the former town is now clothed in a perfect forest of English trees run wild. Below us, as we emerge from the acacia thickets, is Tarawera Lake, with a procession of bold promontories jutting out into the glimmering water on either side; and a grim, blackened mountain—the shattered peak of Tarawera, frowning in the distance. We cross Tarawera by the government launch, walk over a short portage, and spread out before us is the wonderful Rotomahana, its milky-opaque waters fenced by gray, gouged hills, the picture of weird desolation. Another launch conveys us across Roto-mahana, skirting the steam-rent cliffs on the northern and western sides. Soon we steer into a region of perpetual boil and bubble. For about two miles the steep lakeside is seamed with runnels of hot water, and alive with boiling springs, fumaroles and geysers. Clouds of vapor rise from the cliffy shores and from the surface of the water, for we are now boating on a hot lake. Here, before the eruption of 1886, stood the famous Pink Terraces. These marvels of Nature's handiwork were destroyed when old Roto-mahana was emptied of its waters in the twinkling of an eye, but the boiling springs which fed the elysian baths in the terrace cups are still at work, and are now covering some of the barer portions of the vaporous hillside in a beautiful garment of color. It is remarkable how vegetation flourishes even in this hot and riven land. Fresh green tutu shrubbery, fragile, damp-loving ferns, and mosses of vivid emerald, crimson and gold, fringe the precipice in luxuriant profusion, and grow even on the very edge of the mad turmoil of lashing geysers and shrieking steam vents. The algae-carpeted ledges here and there are a vision of delicate color toned to softest hues by the intervening ethereal veil of warm, swirling vapor. We steer along the winding shore line, as close as we dare, for the fierce little geysers, foaming unceasingly on the water's edge, send boiling wavelets surging outward, and a higher spout than usual sprinkles the launch's bow as she is headed into the bays that indent the coast. Geysers and hot springs are all around, ahead of us and even underneath us, a steady thump, thump against the boat's keel warns us that there are sub-aqueous geysers rising from the shallow bottom which would spout many feet into the air were it not for the superincumbent mass of water which neutralizes their furious energy. Steam-sodden cliff and sulphurous bay we skirt, then land on a gleaming white pumice beach and walk up a water-worn gulch, past a series of ancient crater mouths to the amphitheater of hills encircling the world-famed Waimangu geyser. Here, whether the great steam vent "plays" or not, there are abundant thermal wonders to engage the attention of the traveler; but Waimangu usually plays to a height of many hundreds of feet once a day or oftener.

The Roto-mahana boiling water zone is probably at present the best known section of the New Zealand thermal region outside Rotorua itself. But there are a multitude of fascinating geyser districts southward from the Waimangu belt; some close to the tourists' highway, others hidden in deep ravines or in the green hollows of the manuka-clad hills and seldom visited by the Maori. One of these weird but beautiful spots is the geyser valley of Orakei-Korako, where the deep, dark blue Waikato River sweeps impetuously through a bold defile bordered by countless boiling springs and some very active geysers, and by remarkable terrace formations of white and vivid yellow which descend even to the eddying surface of the great river. Another marvelous spot is Wairakei—between Orakei-Korako and the wide lake of Taupo—with its boiling streams, its wild cauldrons and feathery geysers. On the southern shores of Lake Taupo there is yet another series of pulas, walarikis (geysers, boiling wells, and bathing pitting the waterside flats and the ferny hill here, as in most walariki districts, a Maori taken up its quarters in the midst of a maze eral springs.

But even without straying far from the torua town and the pretty gardens that famous baths, there is enough to interest and traveler for many a day. One of the charms is the soft beauty of the lake scenery as sometimes repellant marvels of the adjacent You may sail or fish to your heart's placid waters that lie spread out for miles door; or you may run down the winding, creek at its far end and wander along the wooded shores of another even more beautiful toiti of the many bays; and extend, if you travels to the nearby lakes of Rotoshu and fringed by dark green woods and all silent leap of the trout and the song of the wild bush. The picturesque Maori life is another teresting features of this region. About a tives of the Arawa tribe inhabit the shores lakes and the geyser village of Whakere merry, courteous people, and as smart as are in the Antipodes. The gentle, smiling Arawa easily worsted in the matter of bargaining. easy-going life here among his sulphurous walarikis, veritable waters of Lethe, the baths forgetfulness. Although the fire white man navigates the lakes, the Maori old dugout canoe.

The martial fervor of the haka dance and the mic lilt of the poetic poi (a pretty action song combined) are the favorite amusements at native villages, and few scenes impress pleasantly upon the traveler's memory than of dark eyes, tossing tresses and deftly-juggled as the dancing girls sway from side to side air with a high and liquid chant of olden

WHO SOWED THE SEED?

Last night I looked at all the sky,
Where suns and stars go shinin' by,
An' wondered if 'twas really true
That all these worlds jist sort o' grew?

Some men they say as how they know
That things aren't made; they only grow.
An' so I wondered, sittin' there,
Jist why they growed so wondrous fair;

Jist why the sky, so big an' wide,
Growed such a purty blue inside;
An' where these orbs that shine all night
Got all the stuff to make the light;

Why Mercury, Jupiter, Venus, Mars
Got planted 'way this side the stars—
'N' why they all go round an' round
Instead of stickin' in the ground?

Another thing that puzzled me—
A thing I some way cannot see,
Is, how these worlds could jist hev growed
Onless the seed had first been sowed;

An' if the seed was really sowed—
Afore a single world had growed,
Who sowed the seed? What mighty
Er was it jist a magic wand.

That flashed from out the void of air,
An' all these worlds that look so fair
Begin to sprout? I cannot say.
But seems to me the ration'l way

Would be to sow the seed. An' then,
If this is true, it's true that when,
Six thousan' years ago, er more,
'Twas sowed—there must hev been a

Climbing Cole's Peak.

A UNIQUE MOONLIT TRIP THAT IS WORTH THE TROUBLE.

By a Special Contributor.

HAVE you never climbed Cole's Peak? It is an experience no able-bodied Angeleño ought [illegible] deny himself, particularly if he is one who delights to mix his soul with the sunset and moonrise and those "unimaginable realms of faerie" which they reveal; for the Peak resembles fair Melrose in that, to view it aright, one should visit it by the pale moonlight.

For the sake of those who do not know but wish to learn, Cole's Peak is the highest point of the spur of the Santa Monica Mountains, which terminates at Hollywood. It is, moreover, the site of the projected trolley line talked of nowadays, which is probably an assured fact, as mundane things go. So, if you yearn toward the uninhabited peaks of Griffith Park and promise yourself the joy of traversing them sometime, you must act upon the motto of the hour and "Do it now."

The pleasantest time of year to go is the season of green and rising sap, but this, of course, is not imperative, particularly to the proven Californian, who loves brown slopes and native dust. The pleasantest time of month is during the nights of the full moon—the ideal time of day is afternoon, allowing two or three hours to reach the Peak before sunset. Then you can watch the setting sun drown itself in the sea to the west of you, while the resurrection of the pale dead moon takes place in the east, and the soul of the exacting critic cannot but say: "It is enough!"

A small party of friends who had long planned this excursion, started at last one evening in September—an evening beautifully clear and not too cool for comfort in light clothing. They boarded a Hollywood car leaving Fourth and Hill streets at 5:20 o'clock in the afternoon, hoping to reach the Peak at least in time for the moonrise. It was a losing race against time, however. The car idled along with painful deliberation, and when the party left it at Vermont avenue, the departing day was fading into the clearest and briefest of twilights. The excursionists followed the broad oiled avenue a mile or so to its northern limit, branching off to the right from there across lots to the mouth of the cañon. The sun was quite gone by this time, and the shadows began to close around them, as they followed the wagon road up the cañon until it widened into a [illegible]. They made their way, then, along the bed of the [illegible] now deep and narrow, now wide and shallow, [illegible] the mountain torrent of last winter tore its ravenous way through rocks and gravel down to the valley [illegible]. All this had been a gradual rise, traversed [illegible] because the hard part requiring both time and effort was yet to come. Night hawks flew about in the gathering dusk, and a distant owl added a persistent, [illegible] note to the swelling chorus of crickets which peopled the weird mountain night with chirping voices.

A halt was made when the foot of the climb itself was reached, and a part of the lunch eaten, to fortify the climbers. Ah, it was still and remote down there in the [illegible]-like cañon, sitting on the ground amid the dead [illegible] and shrubs of a departed spring, away from the [illegible] sounds of men and with the brown September evening drawing around them a mantle of silence. They hushed their voices to correspond with the night [illegible] of nature and were exceeding solemn—for a few minutes. They ate two bananas all around, and then [illegible] up in haste, to make up the lost time; for if the [illegible] according to schedule, they would have to [illegible] matters to view it first from the Peak.

[illegible] was that the real work began. Each man of [illegible] towed a weaker vessel in his wake, as he [illegible] the precipitous, winding trail, dodging bowlders and mesquite stumps, sliding back at times as far as [illegible] steps had carried him up, and pausing, every [illegible], to pump a fresh supply of air into his laboring [illegible]. Each man had, moreover, the arms of a feminine [illegible] tied around his neck, a masculine collar and tie [illegible] pocket, and the hand not engaged with his less [illegible] companion grasping a bag or a box of something [illegible].

It might be well at this juncture to note a few important points for the sake of those who wish to go and do likewise. Let the men of your party be both muscular and good-natured, also equal in number to the women. [illegible] one or two will do no harm. Let the women be [illegible] good climbers and unreasonably appreciative of assistance in climbing. Let them wear short [illegible] not calculated by the nature of their material to [illegible] burrs encountered en route or to tear on each [illegible] piece of mesquite which holds out jealous fingers [illegible] the path. Carry a canteen full of water. Let ev[illegible] wear high shoes with stout soles. One member [illegible] particular party under discussion was unwise [illegible] to wear half-shoes, with the result that she [illegible] dirt and pebbles, at every slide, at such a rate that [illegible] the greatest hindrances to progress was the way [illegible] had to suspend operations, at short intervals, [illegible] took them off and emptied them upon the [illegible]side. The half-worn shoes of two other mem[illegible] the party were completely demolished by that [illegible] work.

[illegible] halt, backward eyes would be cast at the lights [illegible] Angel City, which began to glimmer across an in[illegible] hill. First, only the south and west lights [illegible] seen. A little greater height attained, another [illegible] hill set at naught, and East Los Angeles [illegible] gaily in the distance. Soon Garvanza and [illegible] Park were discernible, to be followed by the [illegible] of Pasadena back against the Sierra Madres. [illegible] while the Peak still rose in majestic aloof[illegible] them, a shaft of warm light slanted across [illegible] ridge to the east.

"The moon! The moon!" rose the cry, and all faced, like good Mussulmans toward Mecac, toward the growing brightness, and waited for the revelation of beauty. Slowly, serenely, above the brush-grown ridge appeared the yellowest of autumn moons. It irradiated the face of the waiting beauty worshipers. It cast the traitorous western hill slopes into dungeons of deepest night. It dominated the heavenly spaces and "washed the dusk with silver."

Rapturous awe reigned upon the trail while all eyes drank in that loveliness which, like love itself, seems especially and newly created for each new partaker of it.

But time was flying, and the peak waited to be attained. Turning once more to the upward trail, now made a little confusing by the intense light and shade caused by the moon, they struggled on. They began to call more frequent halts, and the women folk had to sit down occasionally. A warm, dry wind blew over from the north into their faces, and parching lips begged for moisture, while quivering muscles demanded a relaxation of the strain put upon them. It isn't an easy trail up the Peak from the south side—one thousand feet or more straight up in the air. The Peak itself is perhaps 1600 feet high, with Hollywood at an elevation of about 400 feet.

But at last the heights were won. With characteristic chivalry the men who had done the work stood aside, within a step of the summit, and insisted that the foot of grace instead of strength tread the delectable region first. So several feet of grace staggered triumphantly to the goal won so largely by vicarious effort, and then curled up inconsequently on the ground in the utter relaxation of temporary exhaustion. But youth is quickly recuperative, and before long the whole party were ranged along the face of the rocky peak, with their feet hanging over toward the abyss of blackness straight below, contemplatively masticating chili-pepper sandwiches and drinking in the white radiance of the night. Everything visible seemed to be swimming in a sea of almost palpable luminance. The unnumbered lights indicating the haunts of men had grown still more innumerable. Hollywood had been added, almost under their right hands, with Venice twinkling mistily down by the sea. Diametrically opposite, far west of Pasadena, a brilliant electric constellation indicated picturesque Casa Verdugo, isolated in a sea of shadows. Yet with these lights so clearly discernible, the climbers were beyond the reach of the city's hum. No sound floated up to them in the stillness, save the occasional shrill whistle of the Hollywood car, on one side, or the rumble of a Glendale trolley over the long trestle, on the other.

Then a thin layer of palest gray-blue jeweler's cotton spread itself over some of those sparkling gems preparatory to shutting them away for the night. It was the fog drifting in from the sea more and more thickly, until at last it flowed, a great, white river, reaching broadly from mountain to mountain. It washed out light after light, until only a distant part of all the blazing wealth remained to mark the place of the Angel Town. All others were quite obliterated. The hills of Highland Park thrust out arms here and there into the silent gray flood, like wave-beaten promontories; the San Fernando Valley was converted into a ghostly stream, with the Sierra Madres rising on the far side like an impenetrable wall of purple blackness. No searchlight could pierce that fleecy grayness, and the rumbling car beneath it was like an uneasy little water bug skating swiftly over the bottom of a millpond. The wreathing whiteness made an island of the mountains about the Peak and intensified the feeling of remoteness and mystery and isolation already reveled in by the climbers.

But the moon! Paler and paler she grew as she advanced toward the zenith, and the billowy fleece below caught the whiteness of her radiance. Great slow stars peered, one after another, over the eastern mountains, and suddenly across the central heavens shot a meteor, leaving a long track of fire and concluding its swift flight by bursting into blue stars after the theatrical manner of a Fourth of July rocket. Fully a minute elapsed before its fiery trail was lost to the sight of the naked eye. It was a wonderful and beautiful sight, not soon to be forgotten by the breathless watchers on the mountain.

But the lady moon dominated everything, first and last, and under her soft influence the resting wanderers indulged in wild flights of fancy, with side trips into the realms of poesy. Longfellow's "Endymion" was perhaps the most fitting thing quoted, beginning as it does:

> "The rising moon has hid the stars;
> Her level rays like golden bars
> Lie on the landscape green,
> With shadows brown between,
> For surely it must have been
> On such a tranquil night as this
> She woke Endymion with a kiss."

Then one member of the party, worked up into a fine frenzy by the gentle lunar potency, burst forth with the following apostrophic rhapsody:

> "How beautiful is this 'ere night!
> How bright the stairs dew shine!
> All natur' sleeps in tranquilness
> Save this lone heart o' mine.
> The dorg has quit a-barkin', now,
> At fellers passin' by,
> And 's gazin' at the fare off mune
> With ca'm and placid eye.
> While viewin' thee, thou pale-faced thing,
> A-hangin' in the skies,
> Up'ard on an untrammeled wing
> My thoughts cuts dust an' flies!"

After this the spell was somewhat broken, and as it was nearing 9 o'clock (the Peak had been reached twenty minutes before 8), the party decided to start on the return. Much refreshed by the rest and lunch, they moved unanimously to take the longest way round, whether it proved to be the shortest way home or not; and, descending the mountain on the northern side, to walk to the Glendale car line. The trail leading off to the east and zigzagging to the northwest, then east again, was well-defined and much more picturesque than the ascending one, which had been robbed of growth by a devastating fire, not long since, and is now marked by charred stalks and naked branches. It led from spur to spur, along the ridges, with a moonlit cañon on one side and a well of darkness in the hollow of the hills, on the other. In spite of their earlier experience, the travelers could not resist the desire to start upon a few more peaks of lesser height as their trail led near them, and one of these was the great bald-faced rock which overhangs the picnic cañon of Griffith Park, the site of the old, old ostrich farm of a forgotten day. From this coign of vantage, whistles and Alpine calls were thrown back into the hills just descended, and echo answered elusively from unseen nooks and crannies. Then they followed the clearly-marked trail, sometimes arched over by the mountain growth on either side, which is always thicker on the northern slopes. The night wind from the desert swept an occasional breath from some belated mountain lilac across their faces like a warm caress. They turned back from time to time to look at the great rock as they left it behind.

At first it was like the face of a couchant lion, sphinx-like and lonely. Further down, the moon cast great shadows which gave it the ghastly, sightless look of a death's head, and this appearance it retained. At last, with slipping and sliding, running and crawling, the trail came to an end at the wagon road of the park, and with the last scramble down the bank, the chill night air of the lower region met them with the exhilaration of a shower bath.

After pausing beneath the live oaks for a drink of cold, pure water, they struck off, at a swinging stride, on the level road winding along the side of the mountain. The fog was no longer beneath them, but rose like a wall around the San Fernando Valley in front. The cool air soon called for jackets, and traveling was brisk thereafter. It was delicious, there in the night, "the world forgetting, by the world forgot," and the hill odors, elder, sage and other distinguishable sweetness, went straight to the heart.

Then they reached the valley, and the fog wrapped them as in the folds of a soft gray blanket. Their hair became beaded and their coats airily passementeried with a delicate tracery of moisture. It began to be frightfully dusty under foot—no moon, no firm road, and a long way to the car. Watch dogs bayed lustily from mist-concealed farmyards, and the travelers began to feel like the tramps they looked. On every side lay the gray curtain of fog, and once in a while when it lifted a little there became visible a luminous spot in the sky where the beautiful moon had hidden her face.

At last the throb of steam from the power-house ahead grew into a patch of rosy light, and the travelers knew they were at Ivanhoe, where they could take the car—if it came along. Inquiry showed twenty minutes to wait until the last car was due to leave Glendale at 11:30. It was considered desirable to sit down a while, but everything of a material nature in the neighborhood was chillingly wet. Finally a newspaper was found luckily stowed away in a dry pocket. It was spread out on an unemployed hand car, and rest for the weary provided. What mattered it that curls were straight and drippy, that clothes were damp and dirty around the hems, and shoes coated with sticky yellow dust? What matter that it was nearing midnight, with the morrow waiting with work, and tired limbs needing rest? Cole's Peak had been climbed on an ideal night, in an ideal way, and nothing was left to be desired.

Full of this consciousness, a feminine voice broke the watery stillness.

"Ain't jew glad jew came?"

Spoke a masculine voice in reply:

"Ain't jew glad jew're here?" And another took it up, as an answering cock crows in the distance:

"Ain't jew glad jew're goin' back?"

But the last two speakers had enjoyed the trip as much as the first, and out of the fullness of their experience pronounced it a well-accomplished task. Perhaps not more than five or six miles in actual distance had been covered, but a mountain range had been crossed and a long stretch of country traversed on the level.

The car came at last, as if shot out of a cannon, the fog concealing even the headlight until quite at hand, and it slid over the wet rails a distance before it could stop. Fifteen minutes' ride completed the townward journey, and a good night's work was done.

WHEN IS MUSE KINDEST?

Let me ask in my turn whether there be no excitement of the poetic faculty in the clouded night as well as in the bright one; in the wrack of clouds by which the stars are driven in, as well as in the purple islands and crimson archipelagoes of sunset, in the terror-stricken rain fleeing before the tempest as well as in the gentle and refreshing showers of April; in the craggy dangers as well as in the blue distances on mountains; in the rush of the tornado which opens a road through deep untraveled illimitable forests, as well as in the faint and fragrant sigh of the zephyr; in the lightning that shatters "some great admiral," doomed never again to be heard of; in the ear-splitting crash of the thunder, the stricken pine, the blasted heath; in the tiger-haunted jungles of the Orient; in the vast Sahara, over which the sirocco sweeps like the breath of hell; in the barren and lonely cape strewn with wrecks and the precipitous promontory which refuses to preserve even a single plank of the ships that have been crushed against it; in the fearful tale suggested by the discovery of a human skeleton upon a desert island; in the march of the pestilence; in the bloody battles of freedom, and in the strange noises and wild risks of an Arctic night, when the great pack is broken up and an Arctic storm is grinding and hurling the floes in thunder against each other.—[Atlantic.

Essex Eccentricities.

CURIOUS FINDINGS IN AN OLD ENGLISH COUNTY.

By a Special Contributor.

OF all the counties of England, none is stuffed fuller of antiquities, comicalities and eccentricities than Essex. Its geographical position at the mouth of the Thames brought it early into the firing line of whatever was doing in the way of invasion and skirmishing, whether Roman, Saxon or Danish, down to the time of the Norman conquest; and thereafter, its proximity to the capital kept it well to the fore, whenever history was making, or knocks were going—which was much the same thing. These historic advantages fully make up for the somewhat monotonous character of its natural scenery, which is comparatively tame and flat (though it has a beauty of its own,) and the writer has found the County of Estsex (as it was anciently written,) a fruitful field for interesting exploration.

There used to be a general belief that the county, especially the southern and eastern parts, which are low and marshy, was, for that reason, very unhealthful. The idea is amusingly but gravely set forth in an old work called "A Tour Through Great Britain." Speaking of Essex, the author says, "One thing deserves mention here; which is, that all along this county, it is very frequent to meet with men that have had from five or six to fourteen or fifteen wives; and I was informed that in the marshes, over against Candy Island, was a farmer who was then living with the five and twentieth; and that his son, who was but 35 years old, had already had about fourteen. Indeed, this part of the story I only had by report, though from good hands; but the other is well known, and will be attested about Fobbing, Curringham, Thundersley, Benfleet, Prittlewell, Wakering, Greaf Stambridge, Cricksea, Burnham, Dengy and other towns of the like situation. The reason, as a merry old fellow told me, who said he had had about a dozen, was this, that they, being bred in the marshes themselves, and seasoned to the place, did pretty well; but that they generally chose to leave their own lasses to their neighbors, out of the marshes, and went themselves into the uplands for a wife; that when they took the young women out of the wholesome fresh air, they were clear and healthy; but when they came into the marshes, among the fogs and damps, they presently changed complexion, got an ague or two, and seldom held it above half a year, or a year at most. And then, said he, we go to the uplands again, and fetch another. So that marrying of wives was reckoned a kind of good fun to them. Nor do the men, in these parts, hold it out, as in other countries; for we seldom meet with very ancient people among the poor; insomuch that hardly one-half of the inhabitants are natives of the place, but such as come from other parts for the advantage of good farms." Without doubt, he was "a merry old fellow"—the Truthful James who gave out this piece of "reliable information for travelers." One can see the twinkle of the old rascal's eyes, as he confessed to his outrageous "about a dozen."

I suppose it is one of the special enticements of the antiquary that almost every find he makes gives him a lead to another. So, when I turned to the pretty little village of Corringham (or Curringham, as spelled above) I found record of this curious matter. A certain Sir William de Band, Sheriff of the county in the year 1375, obtained leave to inclose within his park a certain portion of land, of the dean and canons of St. Paul's, in consideration of presenting them with a fat buck and doe yearly on the days of the conversion and commemoration of St. Paul. On these days, "the buck and doe were brought by one or more servants, at the hour of the procession, and through the midst thereof, and offered at the high altar of St. Paul's Cathedral, after which the persons that brought the buck received of the dean and chapter, by the hands of their chamberlain, twelve pence sterling for their entertainment; but nothing when they brought the doe. The buck being brought to the steps of the altar, the dean and chapter apparelled in copes and proper vestments, with garlands of roses on their heads, sent the body of the buck to be baked, and had the head and horns fixed on a pole before the cross, in their procession round about the church, till they issued at the west door, where the keeper that brought it blowed the death of the buck, and then the horns that were about the city answered him in like manner; for which they had each, of the dean and chapter, four pence in money, and their dinner; and the keeper during his stay, meat, drink and lodging, and five shillings in money at his going away; together with a loaf of bread having on it the picture of St. Paul."

Following up the trail of Benfleet (another of the places in the black list above), I had only taken two steps before I was on the track of another oddity. Benfleet, a little Sleepy Hollow of a place, with a very beautiful ancient church, almost adjoins the village of Rayleigh, where are the ruins of the castle of a celebrated Danish pirate, named Hastings, who, after a long and checkered career of marauding, was finally taken in hand and disposed of by good King Alfred, in the year 894. Here used to be held, every year, a court or meeting, at which the tenants of manors in the neighborhood were to appear, to "do service" for their holdings. Some of these tenants, having some grievance or other, had met secretly, one midnight, and conspired to raise a commotion. They had a knack, in those days, of "making the punishment fit the crime;" so thereafter, instead of the court being held, as usual, by day, we find that "the mannor of Raylie in Essex hath a Custome Court kept yearely the Weddens-day next after Michael's day. The Court is kept in the Night, and without Light, but as the Sky gives, att a little hill without the Towne called the King's Hill, where the Steward writes only with Coales, and not with Incke; And many Men and Mannors of great Worth hold of the same, and do suite unto this strange Court, where the Steward calls them with as low a Voice as possible he may; giving no notice when he goes to the Hill to keepe the same Court, and he that attends not is deeply amerced, if the Steward will.—'Tis commonly called the Lawless Court."

There is something of a cutting off of one's nose to spite one's face, about this, as regards the unfortunate steward, kept out of his snug bed to punish these malefactors; and we may suppose that he lost no opportunity of "deeply amercing" everybody whose "Adsum" was not promptly forthcoming.

Of this doing of service one finds so many and so quaint things recorded, that one would think that, if anybody not to the manner born should have chanced to be strolling about England in those days, he would have encountered such processions of unaccountable imbecilities coming along every road and lane as would, in a short time, have put him in trim for Bedlam. I find that at Chingford, in the same county, is an "estate holden of the Rector, called Scotts Mayhews, alias Brindwoods, the owner of which, on every alienation with his wife, man-servant, and maid-servant, each single on a horse, come to the Parsonage, where the owner does his homage, and pays his relief, in manner following: He blows three blasts with his horn; carries a hawk on his fist; his servant has a greyhound in slip; both for the use of the Rector. He receives a chicken for his hawk, a peck of oats for his horse, and a loaf of bread for his greyhound. They all dine; after which the master blows three blasts with his horn, and they all depart." And I have no doubt that all departed as grave as church wardens.

Now and then, however, we come upon traces of a funny man. Such must have been the parish clerk of Canewdon, a village near the old town of Rochford; who, no doubt at great expenditure of brain matter and good goose quills, left the following entry on the pages of the parish register:

"John Jonson, the Quaker, died on the 18th of October, 1667.
"James Innman, the Quaker, died the sixt of Nouember, 1667.

"Jonson th' Quaker on th' tenth of October
Spoiled for a Speaker Fain t' give over
Th' Spirit moved him with a new found greeting
To meete with Death at a Silent Meeting,
Where 'tis fear'd for Speaking too much before
He must Sit Silent there For ever more.
He liv'd without th' Church, without th' Church he died,
And of Church Reites is justly now deni'd;
And without Sighth or Teare, or Prayer said,
Beast like in Earth John Jonson now is lai'd.
Post after him goes Innman James, another
Of the Quaking crue; a Speaking Brother
Whose Wife went before; that Holy Syster
All in such hast; as if th' Deuil mist her.
Next with like speed (For there could be no less)
Post hast goes Thom Fritton to make up th' Messe.
If slie Death thus robes thee of thy Quakers,
Poor Deuil, what wilt doe, for Speakers?
Thy Chappel sure will downe, thy Trade decay;
Oh that Gods Church may liue to see that Day."

King James the First, from many things recorded of him, seems to have had a mild funny streak in his unromantic make-up. Unfortunately, many of his "good things" seem to come with a touch of ill-nature in them that must have made the dutiful smiles of his courtiers rather perfunctory. It is said that when the great mansion of Audley End, near Saffron Walden, in this county, was completed (at a cost of a hundred and ninety thousand pounds—a vast sum in those days), by the first Earl of Suffolk, who was also Lord High Treasurer, King James was invited to view it. He surveyed the magnificent building with astonishment, whereupon the Earl asked him how he liked it. "Very well," replied James, "but troth, man," he continued, sarcastically, "it is too fine for a King, though it may do for a Lord High Treasurer."

While we are dealing with royalty, Essex provides us with an anecdote of Charles the Second, which shows him in a better light than do most of his recorded words and actions. In St. Giles's Church, in the very ancient city of Colchester, is a tablet bearing this inscription:

Under this Marble ly the Bodies
Of the two most Valiant Captains
Sr. Charles Lucas and Sr. George Lisle, Knts.
Who for their eminent Loyalty
To their Soverain,
Were on the 28th. Day of Avgvst, 1648,
By the Command of Sr. Tho Fairfax,
Then General of the Parliament Army,
In cold bloud barbarously murdered.

The letters are cut unusually deep in the marble, and the reason therefor is said to be that George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, who had married the only daughter of General Fairfax, requested of Charles permission to have the inscription erased, as it reflected upon his father-in-law. Charles mentioned the matter to Lord Lucas, son of the Sir Charles Lucas commemorated in the tablet. Lord Lucas replied that he would consent, if the king would allow him to insert, instead, the following—"that Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Lisle were barbarously murdered for their loyalty to Charles the First, and that his son Charles the Second, ordered this memorial of their loyalty to be erased." The King, struck with the observation, is said to have immediately ordered the letters of the original inscription to be engraven as deep as possible. The incident, if true, is worth noting, as against the well-known epigrammatic characteristic of Charles as a king "who never said a foolish thing, and never did a wise one;" for in his case, certainly, the ungrateful request was foolish, and the eventual action wise.

County fairs, many of them dating from times of great antiquity, are still held in very many towns and villages of this county. One of them, but of comparatively modern establishment, is that held on the first Friday of July, at Fairlop Oak. Of its origin it is recorded that a certain "Mr. Day, who was a block and pumpmaker in the parish of St. John, Wapping, had a small estate near Fairlop Oak, whither he pair annually, on the first Friday in July;
his custom to invite a select party of his

The mention of bacon brings to mind the

we may say that the word "bower" signified,

At their return home, the two pilgrims waited upon the King, who was then at this bower; and delivered to him the message and the ring; from which circumstance this place is said to have received the name of Have-ring."

A legend of a different flavor concerns one Mrs. Mary Honywood, who died in 1620, leaving, at the time of her death, 367 direct descendants. This lady was the owner of the very ancient manor of Marks Hall, near Great Coggeshall, and was a woman of great piety, but oppressed by religious melancholy. On the authority of the then Bishop of Durham, to whom she herself related the occurrence, we learn "that, being much afflicted in mind, many ministers repaired to her, and, among the rest, Mr. John Fox, the Martyrologist; but that all his counsels proved ineffectual; insomuch, that, in the agony of her soul, having a Venice glass in her hand, she burst out into this expression: 'I am as surely damned as this glass is broken!' which she immediately threw with violence to the ground; but the glass rebounded again, and was taken up whole and entire, being still preserved in the family." Let us hope that the good old dame had more peace of mind after such a comforting miracle.

Such are some few, and those lying nearest the surfece, of the odd things that Essex can furnish for the curious. A diligent and persistent delver in such rich soil would no doubt unearth unexpected rarities.

STRENUOUS JOURNALISM.

A GLIMPSE AT THE DAILY LIFE OF A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

[Gilson Willets, in World's Work:] In the life of the special correspondent of the weekly or monthly come what may be called "emergency calls," comparable to the "hurry calls" of the physician. The evening President McKinley was shot an editor telephoned me to get the whole story in the office by seven the following morning. In that all-night of telephoning for facts and banging the typewriter I made $75. Again, President Schurman of Cornell University, could be interviewed only on the train from New York to Ithaca. On my arrival in Ithaca an editor telegraphed me to hasten to Kansas to "cover" the publication of the Rev. Charles Sheldon's "As Christ Would" edition of the Topeka Daily Capital. That assignment kept me in Kansas two weeks, although I had left New York to be gone only one night. On another occasion, as I stepped ashore after four days spent on a rocking pilot boat off Sandy Hook to write of "Pilots Courageous," a boy handed me a note from an editor asking me to hasten by the first train to the coal mining region of Pennsylvania where the great strike was agitating the country. On the train to Scranton I had to write the pilot story, in order to be free to gather the facts for the story of "The Coal Twins, Messrs. Striker and Scab."

An editor telephoned me on Thursday: "Can you sail with me Saturday for Europe?" "Yes!" "Then meet me on the ship, for I have no time to see you before sailing." As the ship steamed down New York Bay I asked: "Why are we going to Europe?" "I tell you," was the answer, "to get the facts in Berlin, Paris, London and St. Petersburg, and write a series of articles on 'The American Commercial Invasion of Europe.'"

That year I crossed the Atlantic six times, making six round trips; for besides the trip to get the material for the "Commercial Invasion" articles, I made trips through the poorest countries of Erin's mostly in carts, to write "The Depopulation of Ireland" and through the slumberland of Alfonso XIII to "Americans Now Welcome in Spain."

The Neale Family.

NAME WIDELY DISTRIBUTED AND KNOWN BEFORE CONQUEST.

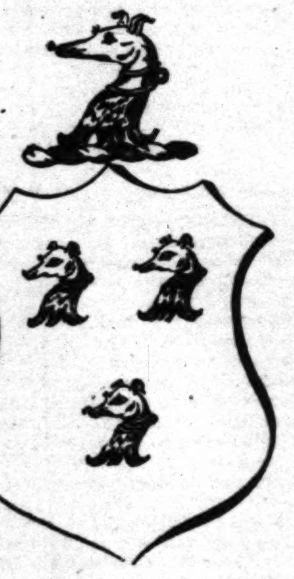
By a Special Contributor.

NEALE or Neill is a Celtic word meaning champion, or "victory of the people." The derivation is Neale, or Neill, or Niale, or Niul, from Niadh, meaning champion. The River Nile is claimed as a namesake by some ambitious ones.

In Scotland, where it ranks as a national name, its common form is Neil or Niels; in Holland, Nelle; in France, Nesle or Nele; in Norway, Nille; in Iceland, Njals. Other variations are Nealle, Neele, Nils, Neeley, Nealley, Neilson, Nelleson and Nelkins.

The Irish form of the name is Nial, also O'Neill, and the story is told that a certain Felim O'Neill, of Dublin, who anglicized his name, making it Felix Neele, drew down upon his devoted head a caustic Latin epigram, written by a friend.

Some contend that the name started out Nigell, or Nigellus. In Domesday Book are the names of twelve land-holders thus called, both before and after the Conquest, so that they may be supposed to be Danish Neels left undisturbed in their possessions. In a Herald's Visitation of the Neales of Leicestershire, the name is also put down Nigell. About the beginning of the fourteenth century we read of one Neale, the son of Nigell. The brother of Robert Bruce is called both Nigel and Neil, and the widow of Henry I married a Nigel, who may perhaps have been a Niel or Neale.



"Neill of the nine hostages" is one of the greatest of ancient heroes. The last but one of the pagan kings of Ireland, he was by chance the means of introducing Christianity, for he carried off by piratical descent upon a Roman colony a young boy who was afterward the apostle of Ireland—St. Patrick. Neill was of the family of Hy Neill, or the clan of Neill, one of the leading septs of the North of Ireland. Romantic and thrilling are the stories told of him. When going to settle on the Ulster coast he resolved to take possession of the new country by touching the shore first, and finding that he was to be outstripped by his companions, he tore out his dagger, cut off his right hand at the wrist, and threw it on the beach so that his fingers were first laid on the domain. Such is the tale that accounts for the O'Neill's war cry, "Lamhdearg Aboo," red hand set on, and for the red hand on the shield of the O'Neills of Ulster.

The eighth name on Battle Abbey Roll was Neel de Saveur le Viconte. Ramsay Abbey, England, was one seat of the family, and the estate of Allesley is mentioned as belonging to the Neales. One Richard Neale, in the time of Edward IV, was justice of common pleas, and later created Lord of Prestwould. Another Richard was Archbishop of York, and his grandfather had been a preacher with whom Queen Elizabeth was "much taken." He sat in the star chamber and was a prominent leader. His son, Paul Neile, of Yorkshire, was knighted in 1633, and was father of William, who belonged to the privy council of Charles II. He died at the age of 33 "of deep melancholy through love for a maid of honor," his father not consenting to his marriage.

The first of the name in this country was Capt. Walter Neale, who came over in 1630, having been granted a patent including Rye and Portsmouth, N. H. He was Governor of Southern New Hampshire, living at Portsmouth. In colonial records he is mentioned as Sir Walter, and it was probable that he was knighted after his return to England in 1633. His lineage, given in the Visitation of Bedfordshire, shows that he was the son of Henry and Elizabeth. His career in the New World was strenuous according to the records of the time, for "he drove away pirates, hung an Indian, and made a survey and map of the territory. He shares with Darby Field the honor of discovering the white nets." There was another Capt. Walter, of a later date, a resident of North Hampton, N. H. To him some historians accord the honor of the discovery. One of the founders of Dover, N. H., was James, brother of Capt. Walter the first. Another pilgrim father was John of the New England colony. He was a descendant of John Neal, of Bedford, who married Anne Cromwell, cousin to Oliver Cromwell.

The Neales of New Hampshire, Maine and Massachusetts intermarried with the Haleys, Pipers, Rickers and Herreys—the latter from Dorsetshire, England.

The founder of the Maryland branch was Capt. James, who had been a favorite at the court of Charles I and admiral of the Royal Navy. He purchased a vast tract with Spanish coins, called "cob dollars," and this gave the name of Cob Neck to his estate, in Charles county, Maryland. His wife Anne had been maid of honor to Queen Henrietta Maria, and when the King was executed, among the rings distributed to personal friends, one came to Anne Neale, and is still preserved by her descendants. Her daughter, named for the Queen, married Richard Bennett, and their son Richard is spoken of as the richest man in the colony. His tombstone at Bennett's Point, Md., is carved with his arms. The Bennetts were of the same lineage as the Lords of Arlington. After Richard's death, his widow, Henrietta Maria, married Governor Lloyd, of Wye House. Her descendants are among the most noted families in Maryland and Virginia. The Goodes, Fauntleroys and Jacksons—Stonewall Jackson's family—have Neale blood. There was also connection with the family of Roger Sherman, "signer," through the Christian family.

Revolutionary family records include the name and fame of Joshua Fifer, who served through the war. It was his grandson Joshua who was one of the argonauts of California. Capt. David commanded a privateer, and in the second war with Great Britain, his son David was an officer of the privateer, Diomede. Wounded, it was a story he had to tell later, that his wounds were dressed by Barry O'Mara, Napoleon's surgeon at St. Helena. Capt. Joseph was in the early Indian wars and married Polly, daughter of Maj. John Dearborn. Lieut. Jeremiah was in Philip's war. He was one of a family of twenty-one children, all rejoicing in scriptural names, Elijah, Ebenezer, Lazarus and the like. It was one of this family upon whose tombstone was recorded the fact that he was friend to twenty-one churches.

Joseph Neale was in the War of 1812, and also in the Mexican War, proving a hero at the storming of San Antonio. John, of Hingham, Mass., was also in this war. Early French and Indian conflicts had representatives from the Neale family, notably Samuel of Braintree, Conn. A brave man, stout of heart and ready of resource, was Col. James Neill, who commanded at Lucknow, India, where he was killed. When he received his appointment as colonel, he was also made aide-de-camp to Queen Victoria. A colossal statue of Col. Neill has been placed in his native town, Ayr, Scotland.

The literary lights of the family include John Neal, born in 1793, in Portland, Me., who wrote a history of the Revolution; John Mason Neale, historian and hymnologist and founder of the Sisterhood of St. Margaret, London; Joseph Neal, American humorist, whose "Charcoal Sketches" had great vogue, and were published in England by Dickens. Then there was David Neale of Massachusetts, poet and artist.

Earlier than this, Daniel Neal, born 1678, wrote a history of the Puritans. Of this history, it was said "He blanches the Puritans into a sweet and almond whiteness." Ninety years after the settlement of Boston, he visited New England, and also wrote its history. Of Boston, he said, "The conversation in this town is as polite as in most of the towns in England, many of their merchants having traveled into Europe, and those that stay at home having the advantage of a free conversation with travelers, so that a gentleman from London would almost think himself at home at Boston, when he observes the numbers of people, their houses, furniture, tables, dress and conversation, which perhaps is as splendid and showy as that of tradesmen in London."

The arms reproduced is gules, three grayhounds' heads erased, argent, collared sable, ringed or. Crest, a grayhound's head as in the arms. This dates back to the twentieth year of Henry VI, and was borne by the Neale or Neele family of Lynn, Magna county, Leicester. This also belonged to the Northamptonshire branch of the family, and to Capt Walter, the pilgrim ancestor. The meaning of the grayhound, in heraldry, is swiftness in the assault upon an enemy's forces. Queen Elizabeth's shield displayed a lion and a dragon; sometimes a grayhound argent was substituted for the dragon. The supporters of Henry VII's arms were a dragon gules and a grayhound argent, and sometimes two grayhounds argent. James I, upon his succession, adopted unicorns argent, supplanting the dragon and grayhound of the Tudors.

ELEANOR LEXINGTON.

KISSING IS HEALTHFUL.

With feelings of unmixed joy we chronicle the fact that a distinguished French physician has gone against his colleagues and actually stood up for kissing. Far from being harmful, it is wholesome. The mistletoe should be encouraged by enlightened practitioners all the year round. Kisses carry microbes, of course. So much the better, says this amiable authority. The interchange of certain bacilli is a laudable and healthful practice. In kissing it is not so much the bad microbes as the beneficent ones that are exchanged. These good bacteria, as is well known, are not only favorable, but essential to digestion. If we were to sterilize our inner man, completely killing the white with the black sheep among our colonies of bacilli, we should instantly die. Now, by exchanging our friendly microbes we stimulate them. Kissing, therefore, is a natural therapeutic custom, the jolly physician concludes, and who knows but what some day the kissing cure will be ordered for dyspepsia by up-to-date physicians?—[Leslie's Weekly.

THE GOSSIP.

Gossip is a humming bird with eagle wings and a voice like a foghorn. It can be heard from Dan to Beersheba, and has caused more trouble than all the bedbugs, ticks, fleas, mosquitos, coyotes, grasshoppers, cinch bugs, rattlesnakes, sharks, sore toes, cyclones, earthquakes, blizzards, smallpox, yellow fever, gout and indigestion that this great United States has known or will know when the universe shuts up and begins the final invoice. In other words, it has got war and hell both backed up in the corner yelling for ice water.—[Guernsey (Wyo.) Gazette.

Thought It Was a Cocktail.

DINNER was a little late.

A guest asked the hostess to play something.

Seating herself at the piano, the good woman executed a Chopin nocturne with precision.

She finished, and there was still an interval of waiting to be bridged.

In the grim silence, she turned to an old gentleman on her right and said:

"Would you like a sonata before dinner?"

He gave a start of surprise and pleasure.

"Why, yes, thanks," he said; "I had a couple on my way here, but I think I could stand another."

The Old Bride.

A WIDOWER with five children, he had no little difficulty in hooking up again.

His third proposal, however, was accepted. She was 47, and looked her age.

After the quiet wedding at the manse, he took her home and introduced her to the children.

"Little ones," he said, "this is your new mamma."

"New?" cried the youngest boy, in accents of disgust. "Father, you've been cheated. She ain't new."

"Pay, Pay, Pay!"

SHE regarded him fondly.

"Maybe I'll lunch downtown with you today," she said. "Tomorrow is your birthday, and I am going downtown to buy you a present."

A troubled, wistful look came into the poor fellow's eyes, as he said gently:

"Let it be something inexpensive, won't you, dear? I haven't paid for my Christmas present yet."

The Harsh Father.

SHE wept.

"Father, of course you had a right," she said, "to reject Clarence's proposal, but why did you kick him downstairs?"

The old man laughed harshly.

"Would you have had me kick him upstairs and into the library again?" he asked. "Don't be unreasonable, girl."

"Oh, he's only trying to throw the bluff that he paid his fare. I'll nab him, though."

An Effect Ruined.

SIR JOHN LONG, the proprietor of the Dundee Advertiser and numerous other papers, was talking in New York about the English stage—a subject on which he is an authority.

Apropos of Charles Fechter, Sir John told this story:

"An interminably long performance of 'Monte Cristo' was once being given at the Lyceum, with Fechter in the hero's role.

"When, at a quarter to 1 in the morning, the curtain rose for the last act, Fechter was discovered sitting in a contemplative attitude on a rock. He neither moved nor spoke. The silence was deep and impressive.

"Suddenly, though, this fine effect was spoiled. A voice from the gallery called:

" 'I hope we are not keeping you up, sir.' "

Green Room Gossip.

CHARLES BLOOMINGDALE, the novelist, was relating some of the pleasant green room gossip for which he is renowned.

"There is one actor," he said, "whose wife has a mania for making waste baskets out of silk hats. It is impossible for this man ever to have a second-best tile—a tile for stormy days and traveling—for no sooner does he bring a new one home than his wife turns the old one into a dainty waste-basket confection with a pale blue lining and baby-blue ribbon rosettes.

"The lady came downstairs one morning rather early. Her husband still slept. As she passed through the hall, she perceived on the table a very shabby hat, while on the rack a hat brilliant and handsome hung.

" 'Aha,' she said, 'James has bought a new tile. Well, it was time. I'll confiscate this shabby old thing.'

"And with it she retired to her sewing-room. It was the work of a moment, there, to snip off the brim, tear out the shabby white lining and insert a new lavender one, tack on two lavender loops for handles, and——"

"But loud, hurried, scuffling noises were now to be heard downstairs, and a maid hastened in, breathless, vexed.

" 'Oh, madam,' she said, 'the piano tuner is in a dreadful temper. He says he can't find his silk hat nowhere. And he left it in the hall, he says.' "

The One Safe Place.

DE HAVEN YOCUM, the champion bowler of the University of Pennsylvania, was at the Stockton alleys, in Cape May, watching the bowling, more strenuous than skillful, of a quartette of brown young men.

Mr. Yocum, smiling a little, smoked and regarded the wild balls. Now one shot into an adjoining alley. Now another bounced up and hit the attendant. Now a big one, escaping from a too-weak hand, crashed to the floor with the noise of a thirteen-inch gun.

Twice in five minutes an erratic ball struck the young attendant. Finally, when the lad narrowly escaped a blow on the head from a third ball, Mr. Yocum took his pipe from his mouth and called down the alley:

" 'Stand in among the pins, boy, if you don't want to get hurt.' "

Miss May Sutton's Hard Hit.

"MISS MAY SUTTON," said a tennis player, "never gets actually excited in a game; but bad playing in a partner will often arouse a sarcastic humor in her.

"I don't pretend to play well, and when I found myself, one day in Cincinnati, paired with the young champion in mixed doubles, I expected to do little, and didn't disappoint myself.

"To tell the truth, I played pretty badly. But Miss Sutton did unusually well, and politeness obliged me to shower a continuous stream of compliments on her. At a critical point she saved a game with a remarkable back-hand stroke, and I shouted:

" 'Bravo! Beautiful! Well-played, indeed!'

"Miss Sutton smiled grimly.

" 'That's right,' she said, 'you applaud, and let me attend to the ball, and we'll win yet.' "

The Disappointed Suitor.

ADMIRAL EVANS, at a dinner at Narragansett, said, apropos of disappointment:

"The poor fellow's feelings, in this misfortune, must have resembled those of a young planter whom I knew in my youth in Virginia.

"The young man was in love with a girl of great beauty. She had many suitors, and to all of them she was more partial than to my friend. But he, though snubbed continually, remained very faithful.

"One Sunday evening when he called, the girl's little brother admitted him. The youngster led him into the parlor, went upstairs to announce his name, and then, returning, said:

" 'Sit down, Mr. Sparker. She will see you in a few minutes.'

"Sparker said in a relieved and cheery voice:

" 'I am glad of that. I was afraid she might ask to be excused, as she has done so often before.'

" 'No fear of that this time. I played a trick on her,' said the little brother.

" 'How was that?' Sparker asked.

" 'Why,' said the lad, 'I pretended you were someone else.' "

The Cause of Poverty.

A PHILADELPHIAN was praising the late Mary Mapes Dodge.

"Wise woman as she was," he said, "Mrs. Dodge could never bring herself to see that organized charity was the only sort that did good. She considered organized charity rather cold. She believed in the charity spirit, which, she said, was best fostered by the direct, personal contact of recipient and giver.

"Hence she never refused a beggar. And, defending herself from my attacks one day, she narrated a conversation that she once overheard between two Maryland tramps, or 'peach plucks.'

"These peach plucks, as they lay under a tree on a superb afternoon, philosophized.

" 'Bill,' said the first, 'why is it that poor people is always willin' to help us, while rich folks always turns us down?'

"The other, with a mirthless laugh, replied:

" 'Them that don't mind givin' things away is the ones that stays poor.' "

The Answerer.

AT the recent convention of beekeepers in Jenkintown, Pa., Archibald H. Mayhew, of Sunbury, held hundreds of bees in his hands, and permitted the little insects to wander at will through his hair and beard. Some even got up his sleeves and down his shirt without causing him any inconvenience.

"But," said Mr. Mayhew, bee-covered and smiling, "I could not conduct this startling exhibition with any but Caucasian bees. A novice at beekeeping, if he should attempt to imitate me with an ordinary species, would take his life in his hands. Beekeeping, as a matter of fact, is a pretty dangerous matter for uninformed persons to take up. An ignorant, reckless beekeeper, at large among a lot of valuable hives, is apt to do himself and them as much harm as an ignorant,

THE POULTRY BUSINESS.

A PRACTICAL LETTER FROM A PRACTICAL POULTRYMAN.

THE following letter from Charles H. Stearns of the Stearns Poultry ranch, Pasadena, is graphic and is recommended to the novice. When such poultrymen as Mr. Stearns take enough interest in the feathered page to write a letter like this, one may be certain that the department of The Times is gaining. It is worth while for strangers to the business to read and digest what he says about failures and retirements:

[My Dear Mrs. Grinnell:] Some days ago, a well-to-do, popular [illegible] rolled luxuriously into my yard in his auto, and asked [illegible] the old, old question. It is the old question to me, though I [illegible] but new to the business. "Why is it, that so many people [illegible] the chicken business?" Upon this question, in one form or another, I have expended much time, and no inconsiderable amount [illegible] matter. Can you answer it any better than I did? What [illegible] the greatest obstacles to success, and are they insuperable? [illegible] prices of feed, keen competition of the East? Well, no, I [illegible] not; though these conditions do combine to produce a situation [illegible] is naturally more to the liking of the consumer than to the [illegible] of poultry products. But the discriminating consumers of [illegible] and poultry want, will demand, and are willing to pay a fair [illegible] for first-class goods.

[illegible] after studying my own experience, and the facts as far as I [illegible] them of those of my acquaintances who have made [illegible] or less of a success or failure of poultry raising, I [illegible] I see three main causes of failure or retirement. [illegible] ignorance; second, lack of bulldog tenacity of [illegible] the ability of everlastingly sticking to a thing. [illegible] is so closely tied up to the first, that I would [illegible] it separately were it not for the fact that I wish to call [illegible] attention to it; and I do it calmly, fully realizing the con[illegible]. This is a country of paradoxes, but it does seem para[illegible] does it not, to make the assertion, that climate, the main [illegible] of Southern California, is at war with the poultry man? And [illegible] true, if he is wise. "Ay, there's the rub." If he is wise, [illegible] he would have retained his comfortbale position and [illegible] in the East, and have been content with California as an [illegible] in which to spend a winter vacation, or he would have [illegible] his money in the right sort of real estate, or—if, he must [illegible] chickens, he would have studied the conditions, and made [illegible] his ally, rather than his foe.

[illegible] Billings once said he would "rather kno less, than kno so [illegible] that ain't so." Now, the average, would-be "chicken-raiser," [illegible] who ultimately fails, while he knows much that is fact, [illegible] a whole lot of things that are not so; and is ignorant con[illegible] many other things that are so. Among the facts, he knows [illegible] paid for poultry products, the splendid market, the hun[illegible] of carloads imported from the East, and more or less about [illegible] themselves, and much more. These things are among his as[illegible] and do not concern us. The things he knows [illegible] not so, and the things that are so of which he [illegible], are legion. If I call your attention to the [illegible] and nature of a few of the former, possibly you will be [illegible] through you columns, to incidentally put some of this class [illegible]." He comes bye this kind of knowledge, from literature, [illegible] because of his lack of experience, he has not learned to [illegible], from people ill-informed, overenthusiastic, or with an [illegible] grind. And it includes such delectable facts as "that Mrs. [illegible] cleared $4 apiece from each bird of her flock, at market [illegible] eggs and poultry," or "Mr. Talk cleared $500 in one year [illegible] ducks," or "Mr. Accurate kept his flock for one year for [illegible] 1-3 cents per head, and Mrs. Smith cleared $2000 from 350 [illegible] one year," etc., etc., that in this ideal climate it is little [illegible] care for hens, etc. He does not know that Mrs. Brown [illegible] Talk each failed to put into the balance the number of [illegible], labor and a whole lot of other things, that would [illegible] make their performance less remarkable; that Mr. Ac[illegible] flock of nine birds received all the table scraps from a fam[illegible], that did not figure in the final result; or, that Mrs. [illegible] her whole outfit for $1900, $100 less than one year's [illegible]. The profits per hen, a known quantity, all he has to do is [illegible] by the proper factor, and he has his desired income. [illegible] from the East where the disease germs and hen para[illegible] frozen stiff as a board, and rendered unfit for active cam[illegible] during several months of the year, and he fails to rea[illegible] they, too, find this climate ideal and thrive accordingly. [illegible] a hen house on the farm back East, where he boarded [illegible]; he remembers the one on the farm where he lived as [illegible] where he lately kept a couple of dozen fowls. The re[illegible] the whole combination of circumstances is, that he gets [illegible] of birds crowded into inadequate, impossible quarters, [illegible] inevitable results, sick chickens. He looks up his books [illegible] consults his friends, and learns that "Jones's Spe[illegible] cure all his hens in two days; and he goes to his dealer [illegible] him $2 for 1 cent's worth of bran, a lot of dirt, and 6 [illegible] of drugs, which he hopefully administers according to [illegible]. The sickness increases, and he buys a pailful of [illegible] Poultry Tonic and Egg Producer." He pays 25 cents [illegible] for stuff, the ingredients of which he might have bought [illegible] per pound, and the proportions and mixing is no trick [illegible] the hens begin to rattle in the throat, run at the nose, [illegible], and heads swell up; and he hurries off and buys [illegible] cents, $1, $2 per box or bottle. Away goes his money [illegible] "Oh, yes, I suppose we could do something, if it [illegible] the terrible sickness." A quick sale, a sigh of relief, [illegible] patient cured temporarily, at least, of the "chicken [illegible] he have known that a chick, well hatched, reared [illegible] quarters, upon a good, well-balanced, wholesome diet [illegible] grains, green vegetables and fresh water, housed [illegible] sanitary quarters, does not get sick; that a sick hen [illegible] quarters may get well; that any drug intended [illegible] disease must be so applied as to reach the germ; [illegible] of 25 cents' worth of medicine and 75 cents' [illegible] on a chicken that is worth, cured, 50 cents, is not [illegible]; that $1 for 5 cents' worth of permanganate of pot[illegible] worth of bluestone is a higher price than even [illegible] profits of the poultry business will warrant. If he [illegible] things, and that he could not expect to learn the busi[illegible] a paying basis short of two or three years, and [illegible] amount of energy and patience, his natural com[illegible] native intelligence would, in nine cases out of ten, [illegible] through.

[illegible] as Inspector of Chicken Roosts.

[illegible] hardly a politician in Los Angeles county who [illegible] personally know the Rev. Dr. Crawford of Pas[illegible] presence in the grand jury of this county [illegible], and whose standard-bred political man[illegible] as colossal figure have graced many a Re[illegible] convention. I was chatting with him the other [illegible] Pasadena municipal affairs, and he told [illegible] felt the time had come when the office of City [illegible] of Chicken Roosts should be created. I asked [illegible] was in the hands of his friends should there [illegible] him to so serve his country, and he re[illegible] that he "would consider it." I assured [illegible] would do "what I could for him in the inter[illegible] weal." Los Angeles needs an officer of the [illegible]. Read the following letter received by [illegible] concerning the deplorable conditions [illegible] said city, and think of the magnitude and [illegible] the proposition!

[illegible] Leters.

[illegible], Sept. 11.—[Editor Poultry Page:] I write to [illegible] that I am living in a location where back of my [illegible] of the character signified by your page head[illegible], the family I am living with has 'em. And [illegible] birds is a chick, such as I never—ah, what with [illegible] wonder shall I compare? About 3:30 o'clock in [illegible] awakens me, me who am a stranger in these [illegible] so queer, so strange, that I wonder if all [illegible] poultry are like him. Are such indescribable chick[illegible] product of your wonderful clime? Then let [illegible] whence I came. Briefly, the bird noise is a sound [illegible] I say? You take a mischievous boy with an [illegible] though the bottom of which he has run a beres[illegible] quality, and let him with this nervous hor[illegible] the neurotic auntie and twang it. Let him [illegible] with such sounds as were given forth by the old Roman ghosts, who, as Shakespeare says, did "squeak and gibber" a little before the mighty Julius fell, and there you have an approximation of the torturing squeak which is every morning gasped out of the throat of this queer thing in feathers. Why, 'tis such a specimen of bird trumpeting as if sounded in a cemetery might cause the buried bones to break the sod above them, coming forth as if to judgment. But no more of these, my indited emotions. Come and see for yourself at 3:30 a.m., and you will say with me: "It is enough; new let me die unhappy." H. P. W., South Maple avenue.

Unhappy mortal—why doesn't he investigate that bird? It may be a new strain of fowl. Take an interest in him; what does he eat, what does he do during the day, of what value is he to ornithology or domestic economy? There may be a bright future before you in the road to glory! Nowadays would a person become famous let him discover a new species in any line of zoölogy from ant to elephant. If you cannot become interested in the personal affairs of this strange fowl, why don't you move? It is allowable, nay popular, for any person to "move" in this climate. Indeed moving is our legitimate business, would we progress. Out in the arroyo near Mr. Lummis's home there is plenty of room where they don't keep roosters. I am told that Mr. Lummis himself, City Librarian, does not keep fowls, but books. Go out there and sleep o' mornings!

Keep the Sprinkler Going.

MONROVIA, Sept. 6.—[Dear Mrs. G.:] What do you think of a neghbor of mine who keeps the sprinkler at work all day long in one or other of her hen yards, and she has half a dozen? Wouldn't you think there is danger of rheumatism? The hens go and stand right under it.

W. M.

Your neighbor certainly has a level head, and probably a good bank account in case she is under the water-meter system. Don't worry about rheumatism. The hens will look after their own health. If there is room for them to get around the water zone that is their lookout. I wish more people would keep the sprinkler going both in the hen yards and in the song-bird aviaries. While it is true that domestic fowls do not go into water to bathe, they are fond of water. If the ground could be stirred beneath yesterday's sprinkler, as one would stir it for a pansy bed, one would get good results. If a stable joins the poultry pens and the manure can be thrown into the yards before the sprinkler is turned on and allowed to soak a day or two, enough eggs and larvae of insects will develop to prove quite an item in the menu, besides giving encouragement to the fowls to exercise. More moisture, and more manure in the poultry yards! And let me suggest to Mrs. M. W., who asked about her poultry yards, that she scatter all the droppings from the roosts on top of her alfalfa stands or among the cabbages. The end will justify, etc.

A WELL-KEPT POULTRY YARD.

Selecting Poultry in the Markets.

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 2.—[Editor of Feather Kingdom:] Will you kindly tell how to select poultry in the market? I am a young housekeeper and know nothing upon the subject. W. JONES.

I can do no better perhaps than to quote from the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Harriet Beecher Stowe, an authority alluded to already in this page. She says: "In selecting poultry choose those that are full-grown, but not old. When young and fresh-killed, the skin is thin and tender, the joints not very stiff, and the eyes are full and bright. The breast bone shows the age, as it easily yields to pressure when young, and is tough when old. If young you can with a pin easily tear the skin. A goose when old has red and hairy legs. But when young they are yellow and have few hairs. The pin feathers are the roots of feathers which break off and remain in the skin, and always indicate a young bird (or one in moult.) And Harriet Beecher Stowe adds, (take notice, I. B. W.:) "Poultry and birds ought to be killed by having the head cut off, and then hung up by the legs to bleed freely."

Eggs Poached in Milk.

Room will be given in this department for especially nice ways of cooking eggs or fowls, and if any contributor has something of the sort to offer in human interest, let him send it along. Eggs are always eggs, eaten from the shell, but one tires of monotony and welcomes a new dish. Here is one new to most people I have met:

Nothing can compare with eggs poached in milk. They are far more delicate than when water is used, and nobody can tell where the milk leaves off and the egg begins. Use sweet rich milk, half a cupful to each egg. Salt and butter the same. When warm break in the eggs carefully and cover tightly. At the boiling point turn off the gas and leave until the yolks are just blushing through the milk. Then dip carefully into a saucer, pour the milk over, and pepper slightly. Served thus in individual saucers the dish is fit for a king. Drop little oyster crackers, or yellow cubes of toast, around the margain of the saucer in the edge of the milk.

Remedy for Coyotes.

GLENDORA, Sept. 23.—[My Dear Editor:] I am an interested reader of your page who would like a little advice in regard to keeping chickens on a foothill ranch. I have been very successful in the matter of raising fowls, but "keep" them I cannot. Having lost seventy in two weeks I have decided to appeal to you. The ailment I have discovered; it is the remedy which I wish for. To be brief, the trouble is not roup or cholera, but coyotes. It seems wicked to keep the fowls shut in a small corral when there are acres of sunshiny orchard for them to wander in, so I turn them loose, and the coyotes catch them. They come by moonlight, they follow the drifting fog of each morning, and the sun of noon sees them slipping stealthily from one protecting, low-grown orange tree to another. At one time only do them stay away, that is when someone is watching for them with a loaded gun.

One morning not lot ago a neighbor saw a coyote trying to climb the fence surrounding a chicken yard. At another time, hearing a commotion among the chickens at night, the same neighbor hurried out in time to see one of these animals trying to pry the laths off from the roost house. He avers that the coyote was using a chisel, but I really cannot help questioning that.

Hoping for a few helping words from you, I am sincerely yours,

MELISSA N. JACOBS.

This interesting letter from Glendora speaks for itself. I am sorry for Miss Jacobs. She will have to resort to the novelty and luxury of occupying a sleeping bag at night in sight of the hen yards with a good shotgun at hand. Sleeping in a canvas bag can never be appreciated save by those who try it, and very nice persons have so slept all this summer, to my positive knowledge, Miss Jacobs. At the paling of the stars the coyotes will appear. Take good aim, not into the henhouse, mark you, but along side of the paling or fence and note the last struggle of the marauder. Good aim makes good quick work, and there is no suffering on the part of the coyote. He simply tumbles over and thinks it is bed time. One could rig a ladder or low seat in a tree close by, of a foggy morning, and shoot from there; though it must be conceded that coyotes have sharp scenting noses. The best thing would be for the State or county to offer bounties for coyotes. As to the "chisel" said to be used by the Glendora beastie, I cannot doubt it; he carries his tools with him. I have known dogs to bite off the paling from the fence of a city chicken yard and call it fun, doing it for nothing but fun.

The Crown Sparrows Are Back.

[My Dear Mrs. Grinnell:] Kindly inform me through The Times the names of several birds, if you can do so from the hazy description given. One was about the size of a linnet, but a bright light yellow, with a single black feather at the outer edge of the wing. Another was short and broad, no longer than a humming bird, but twice the breadth. It was gray with many and conspicuous markings of black and white on wings and tail in a sort of checkered pattern. Still another was the size and shape of a meadow lark. It was a very light brown and had white stripes running down the head and neck. A couple came together and sat side by side on a shrub. Then they came in a small flock and uttered short calls to one another continually as they ate the seeds from one of the shrubs. They were the shape of a mocking bird, but less than twice the size of a humming bird and of a light gray color with no markings, being lighter under the body.

The first mentioned bird may have been a willow goldfinch or a yellow warbler. The second might be one of the creepers so common with us or a titmouse or almost anything from the meager description.

The third, perhaps, was a spurred towhee or black-headed grosbeak or something. The "small flock" referred to along with the third description were no doubt our little bushtits. If one wishes identification of any bird one must notice what food is eaten, the shape of the beak, whether the feet cling or perch, and whether it seems to be resident or migratory.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 14.—[Editor Feather Kindom:] I am greatly interested in your page of the Weekly Magazine of the Times, and especially so I want to praise you for your answer in last Sunday's issue to the woman who wanted to employ the neighbor boys to shoot the linnets (little bunches of sunshine with feathers) that came to eat the figs. If mothers would only think long and well of your words, "Better let the birds have a whole crop of fruit than spoil the natural kindness of one boy's heart." Oh, I like that for both boys and birds. I have some very nice Plymouth Rock chickens, but my old hens are dying off very fast, just seem to stop eating and in a day or two die. They have their house free from drafts, cleaned out once a week, plenty of air-slacked lime. They are where they can have the run of the Highland Park hills. The first one showed a large swollen head and sore eye. The rest look all right except very thin, even the combs being some red. I had 12 hens but now only nine or ten. I use fresh earth and air-slacked lime in the pens. Can you help me in any way to save the rest of my chickens. Yours truly,

C. I. C.

From the fact that the first one had a swollen head and sore eye I think it must be roup that ails your flock of hens. Follow the directions given above. The treatment cannot harm them though the disease be something else. You give them fairly good times, I am sure, but in their wanderings they probably made the acquaintance of an infected flock of other folks' fowls and brought home the disease. Shut them up so you can easily treat the remainder.

SACRED MANUSCRIPTS.

Sacred manuscripts, written on kid leather, and which had been used to repair old shoes in the time shortly after Christ came on earth, have been unearthed in Asia.

Publicity was given to the discovery here today, when the announcement was made by Prof. Maurice Bloomfield, of the Johns Hopkins University, who has just returned from the Oriental Congress, which met at Algiers.

German scientists, while delving in the ruins of a city in Turkestan, came across the old shoes. Upon opening up the footwear, which were twenty centuries old, layers of the sacred manuscripts fell out.

They were written in Syrian characters and were of the mixed religion of Christianity and Persian found in the East.

Prof. Bloomfield states that the find throws the first light on how Christianity spread through Persia and Turkey, and how the legends and facts of the Bible became part of the religions of the Far East.—[Philadelphia North American.

The Sacrifice.

A STORY OF THE SIMPLE LIFE. LOVE AND RELIGION.

By a Special Contributor.

AUNT REENA was in her pantry rolling out pastry and meditating a question of grave import: must her most cherished treasure be offered as tribute to the great event now casting its prophetic shadow in the form of culinary mysteries growing under her deft fingers? She faced her matter from all sides, and had found no conclusion when a great squawking came from the barnyard.

"Sugar 'n molasses! It's that pesky hawk agin!" she screamed as she dropped the "top crust" back on the floured board, and ran out of the house.

Uncle Danny mending harness in the shed, caught sight of her face as she flashed by, and smiled. "Them words an' her feelin's is a misfit this time, shore. Lord! What a gift fur swearin' she'd have if she was a man without no scruples." He went to the door in time to see Aunt Reena's rolling pin hurtling through the air. "By thunder, she's hit him!"

The hawk had risen just above the low shed barn, and not far behind the rolling pin a little white Leghorn hen was making the effort of her life to rescue her downy chick. The missile had struck only the tip of the dark wing, but it was enough to release the chicken, and to send the hawk swinging off in labored circles to the willow trees on the canal.

Aunt Reena had run under him and held her apron outstretched to catch the chick as it fell. But Uncle Danny, though full of admiration for her quick skill, thought it wise to retire before she discovered, as he already had, that two more of the yellow brood were missing. And being a sympathetic man, he chuckled delightedly as he heard her in the kitchen alternately coddling the frightened nestling, and scolding "all creation that's agin chickens."

Still Aunt Reena could not long afford the luxury of even just anger. She flew at her delayed baking with vigor, and before Uncle Danny had put away his tools savory odors testified that the oven was successfully supplementing her art.

"Danny Dobbs," Uncle Danny understood the ring in her voice, "be ye goin' to set there mendin' harness all day? I bet you won't git that front yard raked up afore they come."

"Well, it don't look so bad. Them white almond blossoms is prettier 'n—but—oh, yes, I'll do it," he added, rising hastily as he saw a small unaccustomed frown born in her forehead.

"All right. But first come an' help catch General Grant, won't you?"

Danny turned swiftly, stood erect, and opened his mouth twice before he spoke. "General Grant?" he gasped, half in question, half in expostulation.

"Yes, General Grant. There won't be no time in his life when I'll want him so much." She hurried through the door, and Danny knew by the tremble in her voice that the decision was hurting.

"Won't Sherman or some o' them other generals do as well?" he asked, hesitatingly, as he followed her quick steps.

"What? With three ministers, one of 'em persidin' elder, an' another the 'vangelist, comin' to dinner, is the best we got too good?"

She was a mite of a woman, round and plump as a girl, and usually placid, though quick at repartee. But this was to be her day of destiny. She knew it. For days she had planned for it. It concerned Danny, yet she could not tell him, and the vigils spent in scheming, and the weight of the secret responsibility, tipped her tongue with a tartness, and dropped a cryptic light in her eye, that sorely puzzled Uncle Danny.

"Women is queer things," he whispered to himself. "in forty year ye can't learn 'em." But aloud he said, "All right, Reeny, we'll git him, then." And the two little old people, Uncle Danny himself hardly outtopping the kitchen broom, quickly beguiled the confiding General Grant to his destruction.

"He won't take no more medals at the county fair," said Danny, sadly, as with lagging steps he carried the beautiful fowl to the chopping block.

But Reena did not reply. She had thrown her apron over her head, and was running blindly toward the house.

Mr. and Mrs. Dobbs, childless, though themselves children still, were known and loved, and called "Uncle Danny" and "Aunt Reena" far and wide. No kitchen was tidier, no hand readier, no heart kinder, than Aunt Reena's, and in church and sewing society Uncle Danny said she "wa'n't no piller, she was a hull bolster."

Uncle Danny himself was the character of the town—alert, jolly, overflowing with kindly wit and stingless jokes, yet frank and upright, and ludicrously proud of his little farm, whose six acres did outproduce any other six acres in the country around. People called him lucky; but it was not luck. He was an artist at farming, and loved his art.

Still these two, so united in all else, differed on one vital point, religion. Election, foreordination, eternal punishment—Aunt Reena believed them all as implicitly as she failed to understand them. Yet to her the one saving ordinance was joining the church. It did not so much matter which one of the "orthodox" creeds one indorsed so long as one "joined," nor did it very much matter what one did afterward, "excepting," of course, murder, an' stealin', an' plowin' on Sunday." But no heights of living, or depths of love and sympathy could save anyone who had not publicly "experienced."

Uncle Danny, however, had "no use for churches," and he joked irreverently though winningly with the ministers, and "stumped" the deacons with questions about their own beliefs.

An extended and exciting revival was drawing to a close. Several long-standing "hard cases" had "felt the power" and "testified." Aunt Reena had gone to each meeting with a high hope that "this time Danny's call had come." Yet Uncle Danny had remained away, or attended only to sit quietly in the rear, with a twinkle in his eye and a restless quid under his lip. Still, from him the contribution box received its largest coin. The deacon who made the collection was sure "Danny's heart was teched, only he was too proud too show it."

But the coin was for Reena's sake. "It costs a power o' money for revivals, an' the women has ter have 'em," he explained, when approachd upon the matter.

Reena had more than once taken her trouble to the resident minister of her church, and received comfort, for he was a large-hearted, liberal man, whom semi-invalidism had chastened to a near realization of the insight and terderness of the Master. But when the fiery evangelist came, with his tremendous statistics concerning the number of souls wearing Satan's brand, especially in Aruna, and his lurid picture of the destiny of the unredeemed, Reena's anxieties returned redoubled. She felt sure the "Lord wouldn't be so easy on Danny as Brother Parks was," and the evangelist concurred in her opinion.

"More pressure must be brought to bear. We must take him at his own home and on his own ground," he declared.

Reena quickly thought out her part, and then and there invited her guests and planned the dinner now savorily coming into being. And as an important factor in the great work to be wrought, Gen. Grant was being offered up, a most acceptable sacrifice in the nostrils of the arriving guests.

"Walk right in! Come right in!" cried Uncle Danny with fine hospitality. And in answer to their inquiries for his health, "All right! All right! As happy as a deacon, an' twict as honest."

"Danny!" called Aunt Reena, horrified. "Don't mind him, Elder, will ye? Where's Brother Parks?"

"His wife's sick, and he thought he couldn't come."

"That's too bad!" said Uncle Danny. "He's the sensiblest minister in our conference—b'longs to my lodge, an' we're chums." Danny rattled on, serenely unconscious of the flag of distress in Reena's face—unconscious of the fact that the presiding elder of the conference outranked all the other ministers.

"It is too bad," said the evangelist solemnly. "In my opinion Brother Parks is given to letting the Lord's work wait while he waits on Sister Parks."

"Oh, well, eatin' this here chicken ain't very heavy work for the Lord, I reckon, an' we can repeat the occasion fur him sometime, an' have Sister Parks, too."

"But, my brother, you may die before you can repeat this occasion," the elder said gravely.

"That's right!" returned Danny cheerfully. "I expect ter die 'fore I can offer ary visitor a chicken like Gen. Grant here." And all being seated, he proceeded to carve that estimable fowl; and Reena saw that her skill had been a fit and brown finish to his eminent feathered career.

"Elder Sawyer, is it true, as Danny says, that some folks don't believe in killin' nothin'?" Reena asked, after that Tantalus moment had passed, that moment that comes to every housewife between the first incision of the carving knife and the final dip of the gravy ladle.

"I'm told there are some who profess to so believe."

"An' some believes that we can come back here to this earth, an' try an' try ag'in, till we git redeemed at last?"

"That also is a tenet with some poor, deluded souls."

The word "tenet" had always troubled Aunt Reena. It had an ominous, foreign sound, and so far she had not found courage to confess her ignorance to anyone that could enlighten her.

"Such pernicious doctrines are the devil's wiles, and their followers are his imps," asserted the fiery evangelist.

"That's a leetle mite severe," instantly commented Danny. "The Squire yonder," pointing to a dignified mansion across the road from his own band-box cottage, "the Squire yonder believes both them things, an' I'd ruther resk my chance with the Lord a-doin' the deeds that man does, than by talkin' agin his beliefs. He don't take no middle men in His religion, an' I don't nuther. But that ain't sayin' there hain't work fur middle men." His eyes twinkled. "Ye always has ter have herders fur the sheep; goats takes care o' theirselves."

Danny was so hospitable and entertaining, and Aunt Reena's dinner so beguiling, that in spite of themselves the solemn gentlemen of "the cloth" were complacently happy. And Aunt Reena was afraid that they were "fergittin' ter bring pressure." But when the dessert had gone the way of all good desserts, they began their crusade.

Uncle Danny parried exhortation, explanation, and theological thrust with wit and unflagging good humor, until the ministers were obliged to leave for the afternoon meeting. Reena, despairing, yet controlled, stood by Uncle Danny's side at the gate while the guests prepared to drive away. She was desperate. Her sleepless nights, her prayers, her dinner, and—Gen. Grant, all this and no result. In a tumult of trepidation she herself made a last appeal.

"'Tain't no use, Reeny; I can't! You won't never live to see me jine any church."

Heedless of the four watching eyes, forgetful of all else save this one great desire of her heart, she flung herself upon Danny before his words were finished, and put up a passionate, retarding hand. "Don't! Danny, don't pass your word, fur ye'll never, never break it!"

He, too, forgot the ministers, forgot everything but Reena's distress. All the smile went out of his eyes, and he looked dejectedly away from her. "It's done passed," he said sorrowfully.

She drew back a little, and husband and wife gazed at each other sadly, hopelessly, while the silence drove away.

The next Monday night Uncle Danny The session was long, and he returned late. into the kitchen, hoping not to wake his wife. been very tender and considerate since the heart ached for the little woman who had lived "forty year an' never sarved one mean trick."

But as soon as he entered he heard her voice pleading, broken by sobs. "Oh, dear Lord, I can't change Danny, now 't he's done passed An' oh, Lord, I don't ask ye to. He's kep' his since I knowed him, an' ye won't want him 'heaven by breakin' it. But, oh, my dear Lord, better'n I be, if he hain't experienced. Save let me—me—be the one fur the devil to take."

Uncle Danny crept softly through the door into the open. There under the midnight fought his battle and prayed his poor, dumb prayer.

An hour later he rattled up the kitchen called cheerily as he crossed the sitting-room: be, Reeny, late, but happy as a deacon, an' twict est!"

. . . .

The white almond blooms had gone, and green, velvety nuts were to be seen if wise for them, when one morning the train stopped water tank before "pulling into" the Aruna Aunt Reena was a passenger, returning from her sister in a neighboring State. It had been long journey of her life; and even now she her joy of retrospect with repeated flashes of to Danny for the trip.

When the train halted, she climbed up and less parcel from the rack, and, unpinning a and a handkerchief within, she brought forth net. Donning it was ever a rite with Aunt Reena perched it gingerly on the extended fingers of hand, lifted a feather, or a ribbon loop reverently her right forefinger and thumb, and, with prim lips, puffed little streams of air respectfully upon face. This was not very effective, and two vice found the bonnet no fit adjunct to the Reena's immaculately clean wardrobe. But of this troubled her, and she had just given a proving pat to the ribbon loops under her chin, came Uncle Danny, breezy, gay, even boyish in to seem only ordinarily pleased to see her again.

She was oblivious to everything but Danny, gardless of other passengers, flew out of her him in the aisle with both arms outspread, him audibly. "How've ye ben, Danny, all long time?"

"Oh, happy as a deacon, an' twict——" snapped together, and Aunt Reena had to do while the train drew slowly into the station.

Brother Parks was the first person they met stepped from the car. "Good morning, Deacon Oh, here's Sister Dobbs! Glad to see you again, sister."

He held out his hand, but she did not see it. motionless on the platform in front of the while the descending and ascending travelers deringly around her. Her lips apart, and glanced questioningly from minister to husband had taken her two bulging straw telescopes; in one hand a newspaper-covered parcel wear, and in the other a fat, grandmotherly These she held with arms rigidly extended out.

"Deacon!" she gasped at last.

"Why, yes! Hasn't he written you that the church? We've made him a deacon."

"Why, how in—the world—did he ever it?"

The minister smiled. "Oh, we 'planted,' 'watered,' and the Lord—— you know the rest

She made no reply, and the three gazed another for an awkward second.

Reena spoke first. "Danny," she said sadly, you've broke your word."

"No, I hain't. What was my word?"

"Didn't ye say I'd never live ter church?"

"Well, did ye see me jine?"

She opened her mouth wider, and her quick, short puffs as the full import of Danny's filtered slowly into her consciousness. With she flung herself into Danny's arms, Danny baskets to catch her. "Oh, Danny," she glad we took Gen. Grant!"

Floating Schoolrooms.

SOME PHASES OF LIFE ON THE FRENCH CANALS.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

THE long spell of dry weather which France has enjoyed undoubtedly had disastrous effects in some parts of the country. The water-level on some of the canals reached so low a mark that the locks could only be opened at long intervals, and all but the lightest traffic was stopped. This meant the throwing out of employment of some thousands of persons, and, at the same time, heavy losses for the merchants who were compelled to send their goods by railway.

The district that has suffered most from the long drought is the center, traversed by the Canal de Bourgogne, the oldest canal, it may be mentioned, in the country. Connecting as it does the Seine, by its tributary, the Yonne, with the Saone, the great tributary of the Loire, it may be said to be the commercial link between the English Channel and the Mediterranean, and the 242 kilometers of its course are covered throughout the year by a large fleet of barges. It is engineered by 189 locks, each of which in normal times is opened, on an average, fifty times per day. Another week without heavy rains would have meant the closing of the canals of Berri and of the Nivernais, and thus a very large section of the community was in a critical situation. The anxiety of the barge owners was shared, moreover, by the wine growers, for some of the most famous "Clos," those of Beaune, are in close proximity to the Canal de Bourgogne, and have been suffering from want of rain.

It has been computed that the canals of France support a floating population of over 32,000 persons, living, all the year round, in upwards of 13,000 boats. Staying only long enough in one place to take up or set down a cargo, these families are entirely cut off from all the advantages and privileges enjoyed by the towns and villages. Since Sunday is not, here, an obligatory day of rest, church and school are equally out of reach for the children, who, until quite recently, were condemned to grow up under conditions that savored more of the Middle Ages than of the twentieth century. Such accomplishments as reading and writing are very rare on the canals, for the profession is, in most families, hereditary, and the barge is handed down from father to son as long as it will bear patching and repatching.

Very smart and "coquets" are some of these barges, the more modern ones. Painted in gay colors, and scrupulously clean, they are picturesque objects, gliding down the straight watercourses between the long lines of dark poplar trees. A good many are drawn by a donkey, the most prosperous by two, who pick their way along the banks, shaking their little tinkling bells, and tossing their heads, which are gaudily adorned with parti-colored pompoms of wool. Some of the barges, whose owners are doing less brilliant business, are drawn by the master himself, or by his apprentice, if he has one, assisted by a dog, who pulls at the rope in the zealous, conscientious way peculiar to these animals when trained to draught. The front end of the barge acts as the little family salon, and always has a pot of flowers for ornament, a bright geranium, or cactus, or some sweet-smelling mignonette. Here the children who are too young to be of use in sailing the vessel play, under the eye of their mother, who, with her head hidden in a straw hat of huge dimensions, seems to spend the livelong day in scrubbing and scouring. The monotony of the proceedings is from time to time broken by the excitement of going through a lock, and it is only at the locks that the barge dwellers are brought into contact with the stationary population of the shore.

Since the end of the last century, however, the little salon of the barges has been put to a new use. For the last few years a system has been planned for giving primary instruction to these children, whose parents are not in a position to allow them to attend a school. A body of 200 teachers has been enrolled who travel up and down the canals, joining one barge after another, and remaining two weeks on board of each in turn. For those two weeks, lessons are the order of the day, and the class often includes the whole establishment—barge owner, assistant boatman, mother and children. I once procured the privilege of assisting, a silent spectator, at one of these classes. I happened to be at a lock, some miles above St. Jean de Losnes, one morning in the early summer, as a good-humored boatload went through, and, with a little pressure, obtained the permission of the master to go with them as far as the next village. The schoolmaster was of the party, a pleasant, fluent speaker, who made his presence highly acceptable to his hosts. He shared the scanty cabin accommodation with the family, and partook of their meals, in the same way as the teachers do on the Swedish canals, the system adopted here being in fact partly borrowed from Sweden. And, indeed, he was not to be pitied, for I can testify that the fare on the canal boats is much better than some I have had in English watering places. I remember, on this particular occasion, I was invited to share the pot-au-feu which was served up at 11:30 in the morning, consisting of a young rabbit, stewed with a cabbage, a few beans, a sausage, some potatoes, and a piece of bacon, the whole served out of the earthenware crock in which it was cooked. But we begin with hors d'oeuvre of tender little pink radishes, and we drank a light "petit gris" wine of the country, followed by a cup of coffee, and a very merry meal it was.

From the teacher's point of view the day's work is thus done more pleasantly than it could be in a close hot schoolroom, in summer, at least; in winter they are sometimes compelled to carry the books and slates down to the cabin, and that is less agreeable. But of course the broken nature of the teaching prevents the teacher from getting the same hold of his scholars and from seeing the same degree of improvement as is possible for his fellows in the permanent schoolhouses, with their long unbroken terms. Still, it is a great improvement on the old days, when the children got no instruction whatever.

These traveling teachers have a double mission to the canal boatmen. Besides giving their lessons they are the agents of a branch of the Mutual Aid Society, which is expressly organized for these boatmen. Payments are made to the teachers for this insurance company, whose delegates they are, and the system embraces money advances in emergencies, such as lack of employment, sickness, etc., and old-age pensions.

It is in this way that the French republic has endeavored to extend to her floating population the advantages of citizenship. The experiment, as far as it has gone, has succeeded. Much more might be done if more of the teachers who are unable to obtain good posts in town and villages (between 1892 and 1902 only 30,000 out of the total of 102,527 certificated teachers were employed) would volunteer for the work, so that the intervals between lessons might be shortened. With a good constitution and a certain adaptability to changed conditions of life as necessary part of his equipment, the work offers a fine opportunity to young teachers for studying their pupils in their natural environment. And life on board resembles a prolonged picnic.

FALL TIME BACK EAST.

The harvest is past, the summer is ended. As a result of all the good feeding and the outdoor air we have had for three or four months past, the strawberry shortcake, and cherry pies, and green peas, and new potatoes, and string beans, and roasting ears, and all such garden stuff, and the fresh eggs, broken into the skillet before Speckle gets done cackling, and the cockerels we pick off the roost Saturday evening (you see, we're thinning 'em out; no sense in keeping all of 'em over winter)—as a result, I say, of all this good eating, and the outdoor life, and the necessity of stirring around a little lively these days we feel pretty good. And yet we get kind of low in our minds, too. The harvest is past, the summer is ended. It's gone, the good playtime when we didn't have to go to school, when the only foot covering we wore was a rag around one big toe or the other; the days when we could stay in swimming all day long except meal times; the days of Sabbath-school picnics and excursions to the Soldiers' Home—it's gone. The harvest is past, the summer is ended. The green and leafy things have heard the word, and most of them are taking it pretty seriously, judging by their looks. But the maples and some more of them, particularly the maples, with dare-devil recklessness have resolved, as it were to die with their boots on, and flame out in such violent and unbelievable colors that we feel obliged to take testimony in certain outrageous cases and file away the exhibits in the Family Bible, where nobody will bother them. The harvest is past, the summer is ended. Rainy days, you can see how played-out and forlorn the whole world looks. But at fair time, when the sun shines bright, it looks right cheerful.—[Eugene Wood, in McClure's Magazine.

A LONG NOSE.

It was the elder's day at the plate, and he was shaving himself prior to church time, when he made a slight cut with the razor on the extreme end of his nose. Quickly calling to his wife, he asked her if she had any court plaster in the house. "You will find some in my sewing basket," she said. The elder soon had the cut covered. At church, in assisting with the collection, he noticed everyone smiled as he passed the plate, and some of the younger people laughed outright. Very much annoyed, he asked one of his assistants if there was anything wrong with his appearance.

"Well, I should say there was," answered the assistant. "What is that upon your nose?"

"Court plaster."

"No," said the friend, "it is the label from a spool of cotton; it says, 'Warranted 200 yards.' "—[Birmingham (England) Post.

AN APPEAL TO THE IMAGINATION.

The doughty Peary has bidden farewell to the world and has entered the ice and loneliness of the Arctic regions. His last message is that all is well. It will be a long time before he is heard from again. Indeed, he may never be heard from. An Arctic expedition is a dangerous enterprise. Many there are who believe the goal sought not worth the terrible danger involved. Be that as it may, an Arctic expedition has about it something of the heroic that appeals to the imagination, and some urge that there cannot be too much of that sort of thing in these too practical times, when everything is measured by the standard of dollars and cents. Many there are who will live in their minds with Peary in the Arctic wilds, speculating as to his progress, his fate, and will be better for their dreams. Whether the explorer finds the pole or not his intrepidity and persistency will arouse admiration and quicken dormant qualities.—[Utica Press.

Medical Legislation—XXXIV—Epidemics, Concluded.

FOLLOWING is the conclusion of views regarding epidemics as set forth by Prof. O. Rosenbach of Berlin, in his book, "Physician vs. Bacteriologist:"

Referring to the probable effect of atmospheric and solar changes, of which we know little or nothing, in producing epidemics, Dr. Rosenbach says:

"And although we have as yet not even found for these laws such a formulation as for certain atmospheric changes, we indulge in the delusion that we already possess sure means of relief, whereas in the realm of meteorology we have not yet progressed beyond storm warnings and beyond the determination of the atmospheric changes that are likely to be expected during the next few hours."

On the subject of sterilized drinking water and milk, Dr. Rosenbach declares that, in his opinion, the so-called specific bacilli play no part, or only a very secondary part. He denies, upon the basis of his experience, that the drinking water is the real cause of typhoid fever and of cholera, of their endemics and epidemics, in the overwhelming majority of cases. He says:

"Finally, with reference to the prevailing tendency to render everything free from germs, I wish to give expression to the medical doubts whether the production of germ-free foodstuffs might not be accompanied with some disadvantages, since it requires a complete renunciation of the useful activity of the microbes. . . .For this reason, I must not fail to emphasize here that a series of observations of myself and of others appear to point to the fact that, for instance, sterilized milk, the utility of which I do not misjudge, causes digestive disturbance in many children, which are either due to a special change of the albuminous bodies during sterilization, or, what is more probable, to the destruction of all the micro-organisms of the milk, even of the most useful.

A chapter is devoted to the important question of fear of infection, which, as the editor has said, has slain hundreds, of itself Dr. Rosenbach thinks "it is unquestionably surprising that just at present, in this era of greatest daring and personal courage, which often is ready to stake life for mere trifles, the fear of infection is so exceedingly pronounced."

He declares positively that "there exists not often the shadow of a justification of fear of direct infection." Regarding the tyrannical procedure of the medical profession, backed by the executive authorities, Dr. Rosenbach says: "Medical police and public hygiene are the symbols under and by which endeavors are now made to forge the old chains around the body of man."

He pertinently remarks: "If the opportunity for infection were even approximately as great as the adherents of modern bacteriology depict it, no nurse and no physician could or would expose themselves to the danger. But, as a matter of fact, we observe that infection of those that are engaged in nursing the sick, and of those connected with them—although they usually do not and cannot act with great precaution in their intercourse with the patients—is rare, a fact which certainly furnishes proof that there is a wide gulf between the possibility and the probability of infection."

The best protection, the author declares, will always be "bravely to fight the battle of life, and so to strengthen and harden the body that it becomes and remains capable of resistance."

As showing the absurdity of the ordinary idea in regard to infection, during an epidemic, the author advances this pertinent simile:

"If a shower of rain pours down, and many persons are drenched at various places, may it then be said that one has been infected by the other with moisture? If, of a great number of windmills, one after the other moves more slowly, and finally stands still, no infection will be held responsible, but we assume rather that the cause of the motion has now diminished its power, or acts under unfavorable conditions."

The micro-organisms, declares Dr. Rosenbach, cannot harm us so long as our organism functionates normally —they are harmless so long as the defensive measures of our body are in good condition. He shows that what has been believed could be considered the cause of an epidemic disease is in many cases merely an unessential accompanying symptom similarly as the advent of spring coincides with the coming of the birds of passage. Again he asks:

"Are we entirely unwilling to note the fact that physicians and the members of their families are not by any means more frequently affected by infectious diseases than other individuals, who have nothing whatever to do with infectious maladies?"

From those who do not agree with him—if they approve of the present overcapacity, which, he says, results from nothing but fear—he asks that they should furnish him positive proof of infections decreased in consequence of medical measures. Such proof should be drawn from an entire period, not from a narrow horizon. He says:

"There can be no doubt that disinfectants in strongest concentration kill living organisms. But it is doubtful whether the causative factor is always a living organism, and whether the mere exhalation of patients can be destroyed with such remedies, and whether the remedies actually reach the seat of the danger, since we are not able actually to disinfect internally, albeit this pious wish is cherished."

The hygiene of the future, declares Dr. Rosenbach, will not so much endeavor to destroy bacteria, as to improve the vital necessities of man. He says:

"Modern hygiene offers a stone in the place of bread, presents unproved dogmas and facts of the laboratory as substitutes for active aid and practical accomplishments. . . . If, in times of an epidemic, instead of giving directions what to eat and whatnot to eat, care would be had, instead, that those who have nothing to eat are supplied with sufficient food; if, instead of poisoning the air with carbolic acid and other disinfectants, the money were applied to other purposes, and pains taken to see that dwellings have an opportunity of getting plenty of fresh air and as often as possible; if finally, by instruction, not by authoritative compulsion, endeavors were made to disseminate the knowledge of the true relation of events, and to explain the deception of many views which infuse fear or lead to wrong actions, then true hygiene would be promoted in the same manner as the health and the well-being of man is furthered, not by promising to furnish medicine when he falls sick, but in that he is prevailed upon to live so that he does not become subject to disease."

Following up the subject of the non-infectiousness of epidemic diseases, Dr. Rosenbach points to the significance of seasickness, with reference to the theory of infection and immunity. He says:

"Seasickness is the typical picture of an epidemic (mass) disease; for many individuals under the same conditions of life are affected in a connection that, without knowledge of the real etiological factor and only on the basis of the superficial—but very common in the explanation of mass diseases—method of inference 'post hoc,' we are absolutely forced to assume an intoxication from the gastro-intestinal tract or an infectious element —i. e., we are bound to determine an auto-intoxication, a poisoning by food; in short, an endemic or epidemic. If we consider the succession of the cases of disease; those affected first are the weak persons that stay below deck, especially women, then men, whereas nurslings who take different food, as is well known, are usually exempt. If we consider further that close contact with a patient favors the outbreak of the disease—perceptions made by eyes, ears, and nose, hence the proximity of the patient, unquestionably increase the predisposition—then it would by no means be difficult to construe here a disease by infection, and to regard as the center of the infection, perhaps, the lady who was the first to be affected in the presence of the public, in the salon or on deck—of course, always assuming that we do not know or that we wish to misjudge the true cause of the affection. . . . Therefore, seasickness demonstrates to us that a simultaneous occurrence of homogeneous and severe cases of disease does not constitute a dependence of the different cases upon one another—i. e., a transmission—any more than the conclusion is permissible, from the fact that persons surprised by a heavy rain are drenched, that these persons had transmitted the moisture from one to the other, or, in case they acquire a cold, that they have infected each other."

Dr. Rosenbach concludes that the theory of infection is almost as difficult as the explanation of the fact that relatively only few of the combatants are struck down in the hail of bullets.

Here is an extract, showing the folly of diagnosing a disease by the presence of bacilli:

"We have never encountered this confusion of conception more strikingly than in the following sentence, taken from the cholera report of a prominent political paper: 'Six inmates of the hospital had, or still have, Asiatic cholera, while none of them was or is sick.' The explanation of this paradoxical statement is found only in the following concluding sentence, which we also render in its original style. Namely, the physicians demonstrated in these persons the presence of the comma bacillus, which they are still possessed of, without, however, their suffering even from diarrhea; and for this reason they are as yet not discharged from the hospital, although they urgently request that this be done, because they insist that they are not sick at all.'"

The folly of endeavoring to check the march of cholera by quarantine is thus commented upon:

"Neither did cholera ever travel in the train of caravans, nor does it today speed with the rapidity of railroad trains, quite as little as it heeds the actual toll gates and defensive measures which are erected to oppose its entrance over the high roads and through the ports of entry of traffic—not unlike the person who would bolt doors and windows to protect his barometer from the fluctuations of air pressure. . . . Such a proceeding resembles too much that of the gnat, which, when it appeared that the efforts of the horses were unavailing to drag the heavily laden hay wagon, flew to ease the load, and triumphed over its influence when the wagon was at last set in motion."

Let it be remembered that the above are the views, not of a despised "layman," or the visions of a young and inexperienced or erratic member of the regular school of medicine, but the settled opinions of one of the most profound students and thinkers and writers—one of the most experienced practitioners—of the medical profession, today, with an international reputation, a man whose opinions are eagerly sought by the medical fraternity—or at least were sought, until he had the courage to come out against the latter-day medical superstition of serums, toxins and bacteriology run crazy.

Let it, further, be remembered that these men who Breakfast.

A FRIEND of the editor, who was too fleshy, adopted the no-breakfast plan, with the result that he put on pounds weight in a couple of months. On inquiry, it was found, however, that he had formerly been in the habit of eating a very light lunch, whereas, after omitting breakfast, he ate a hearty meal at noon, and another in the evening. That explains it. You won't reduce your weight by omitting breakfast if you add to the food you eat at the other two meals. Nor will the omission of breakfast do you much good, if you are not careful about your diet during the rest of the day. The same is true of fasting, in general.

Air.

A BUNCH of printed matter has been received descriptive of the "American Health Association" of New York, with capital stock of $100,000. The objects of the association appear to cover about everything on earth, and some things in heaven, from labor and capital to the vervil. It bears all the earmarks of a "hot air" enterprise.

The absurd claims put forward by manufacturers of foods and medicines are calculated to make the judicious grieve and the scoffers sneer. For instance the makers of a brand of soda crackers gravely assert that "Uncle Sam has given out figures showing that soda crackers are richer in nutriment and body-building elements properly proportioned than any food made from flour." Now, will the numerous manufacturers of the multifarious hygienic foods before the public please take notice of this bold

Nature Cure?

NATUROPATHY has made considerable strides in the United States during the past year or two. There is an American School of Naturopathy in New York, the head of which is Benedict Lust, publisher of the Naturopath, a monthly journal. It is stated that the course extends over a period of two years, divided into terms of five months each. That makes twenty months to learn the art of aiding nature to heal—rather a short period. However, it depends considerably on the student. An intelligent, earnest man can learn much in a year and a half.

While recognizing the good in naturopathy, the editor has called attention to the fact that unfortunately nearly all the practitioners in America seem to be Germans with a deficient knowledge of the English language, and lacking the judgment that should lead them to employ good English scholars to do their writing. Thus one often sees misspelled words on cards and signs, which gives Americans an unfavorable impression of the standing of the healers.

A circular of the American School of Naturopathy, says:

"The United States, Canada, Mexico and Cuba need, at a conservative estimate, 50,000 practicing naturopaths. There are only about 2000 in the field. And of these are ill-balanced and ill-equipped—either all metaphysical at that, some are making $10,000 yearly."

In reply to a request, the following brief statement in regard to naturopathy has been furnished by Dr. Ludmann, of Los Angeles, a graduate of the Nature Cure School of Germany who has a hygienic institute in this city:

"In the eighties, nihilism in medicine reached its height. The leading physicians more and more lost their faith in the efficaciousness of medicine, and contented themselves with a diagnosis as exact as possible. The of 'internal' medicine enviously regarded their colleagues in surgical matters, for they had learned to the value of antiseptics; and so the most unresults were obtained. Upon this well prepared dissatisfaction were the seeds of chemical industry under the form of an endless number of so-

The masses found that they were mistaken in the until now, had had their entire confidence, and found a new form of cure in 1830, at first very little noticed, and welcomed with in spite of which gained ground rapidly under of 'Nature Cure.' The standpoint taken is, there is an inward power in man which can heal of his being dependent upon the more or drugs that daily fill the market.

"What use is it for a stout person to become a few, when it is done by the aid of thyreoidin, and wretchedness being the results of this? What gain is it to the malaria-struck individual are destroyed through quinine? Of what acetin, antifebrin or salophen to the influ- if the heart has to injuriously suffer through? Still greater danger occurs through sleep- ranging from bromide to sulfonal and chloral; nervous diseases and madhouses are too often the result of such. And in the same way, the so-called 'harmless medicines, such as aloes, rhubarb and pills for constipation, or again opium for cases of an opposite nature, are never cures, but they serve to render maladies chronic. The 'nature cure' has absolutely nothing to do with drugs, and only wishes to cure the organism by the laws of nature, and by quite natural means—light, air, water, diet, exercise and rest, according to individual needs. The founder of this powerful movement in Germany was a peasant (Vincenz Priessnitz) and so, spreading from the lower classes, it reached by degrees the upper. Today none of the educated classes are against it, but on the contrary more adherents are daily being added to the number of enthusiastic followers.

"'Nature Cure' must not be confounded with 'water cure.' The practices in the first case are much milder, more individual and treatment by diet is made of the utmost importance, instead of being served with a spicy hotel's cuisine as happens at water-cure establishments. The principal factors of nature cure are light, air and sun baths."

Morbid and Erratic Appetites.

THE following communication has been received, from Isabelle Livingston, of Rialto:

"I have read your interesting talks on dietetics and matters hygienic with a great deal of pleasure and profit. May I propound a few questions regarding certain effects of certain foods on different persons? The why and the wherefore?

"First, are not honey, syrups, candy and cake considered fattening foods; and pickles, cucumbers, vinegar and things of that sort flesh-reducing? Why is it some persons can eat the sweets in large quantities and feel no bad results, while others cannot eat sweets in very small quantities without suffering therefrom? I will cite some instances: My cousin used to consume several spoonfuls of sugar after every meal. She ate a great deal of cake and cream candy. She was very fleshy, and her flesh was firm and solid. I, on the other hand, could not have indulged in such a diet for three days without becoming ill. My sister, just as fond of sweets, ate lots of candy, cake and sugar. I have known her to eat frequently nearly half a pound of comb honey, and feel no ill results, while I could not take a few drops without becoming ill. But I could eat half a jar of pickles and enjoy them just as much as she enjoyed the honey. My sister was always fleshy, while I was always very thin. What I'd like to know is why cannot I eat flesh-producing food without getting sick? And why do foods that I know keep me thin, keep me well? I believe others will be interested in these questions.

"I would like to ask your opinion of a case that has been a great puzzle to me. A girl of 16 boarded with me for four months while attending school. She had been in the care of a physician. Had had severe stomach trouble. Her physician had managed to patch up her stomach until she was reasonably well. She brought her medicine with her, but would not take it. I soon found out that the cause of her trouble was her mode of eating. She would not eat vegetables at all, but lived on cake, pie, puddings and candy. She consumed great quantities of cake, and candy. It became a great burden to me to keep a supply of cake on hand. As I had to make it all, there being no bakery in the town at the time, I got so tired trying to keep the cake supply going, the rest of the family would waive their rights in order to keep her supplied. Finally I thought I had a solution. I would only put cake or sweets on the table at rare intervals. I expostulated with her, that she would ruin her health. I would hide the cake, she would find it and steal it. It might be a rich jelly or chocolate, or fruit cake. Or perhaps a big batch of doughnuts; all would disappear like magic. This girl would actually steal the cake off the table, while set and waiting for the family and guests to assemble. Now here's the point. During the three months she got very fleshy, gaining twenty or twenty-five pounds, on this diet. (I may say that she ate plenty of fruit both fresh and canned.) Suddenly she had an acute attack of stomach trouble. It lasted three days, and she suffered considerably, while I stood over her with her stomach medicine, coaxing her to take it, in order to give her relief and incidentally to get rest to my tired-out nerves. After the attack she lost flesh very rapidly, and in a month's time was very thin. I concluded I would rather run an orphan's home than board the girl any longer. I acted accordingly. Was it not a strange case? What do you think of it? Was it a disease, something like kleptomania, or was it purely unbridled self-indulgence in the matter of appetite. Is it not proof that such foods are very fattening. I do not want you to take up valuable space with this recital, but perhaps you would kindly answer the questions and oblige."

The eating of so much sweets must inevitably have an injurious effect upon a person, sooner or later, however well they may dispose of them for the time being.

The fact is too often lost sight of that every person has certain idiosyncrasies in the matter of diet, so that no general rule can be made to suit everybody. For instance, some people cannot eat strawberries without breaking out in eruption. Some people get nose bleeding, when they smell apples—and so forth. After obtaining a good general idea in regard to foods and their values, each person must judge by experience what sort of food best suits them.

In the case of the girl, it was undoubtedly a morbid and unnatural craving. Such cravings are common, being particularly marked in young girls about the age of puberty and pregnant women. To a reasonable extent, such cravings should be indulged, but for instance, instead of vinegar one might substitute lemon juice. Children sometimes have a mania for eating earth. This is usually a sign that the child needs more lime in its food. It should be fed plenty of whole meal. One great cause for a craving is the fact that most people starve their nerves, by removing the natural salts in food, by

Sunbrights' California Food Co.,

Gentlemen: I write this to thank you for what good Sunbright's has done for our girl, who is now fifteen months old. When she was three months old I lost my nurse for her, and took her to two different doctors, twice a day, morning and night, and I gave her all the foods put up in boxes, besides barley, rice, oatmeal, water, crackers, and cooked everything anyone told me to, as she was getting thin and cried all the time. Many the nights I have walked up and down the street with her, as the fresh air was all that kept her up. So one Sunday morn, after all my night up and down with her, I thought, what will I do? My mother suggested taking her to another doctor, which I did, thank goodness. Dr. Hubert. And he handed me with my bottle of medicine a sample box of Sunbright's Baby Food, and I was to give her the medicine after the food, as she vomited something dreadful. I brought her home and stopped and got her some cow's milk and fixed it. If you would have seen her go for it. It was a sight. Well, from that on till she was just one year old that was all she had, and she picked up fine; so any time I will praise up your food and send you her picture if you wish it. I would have written sometime before but kept putting it off until today I made up my mind to write to you, as that is the only way you will know of its good for infants. Again thanking you for the good Sunbright''s has done for our litle one, I remain,

The bunion proper is a purplish-red swollen bruise over a joint containing fluid, very tender to the touch and filled with a bloody secretion: its surface is invariably studded with hard corns. It can be cured in a few treatments, at the same time having a FLEXIBLE RUBBER SHIELD fitted to the part, which will keep all irritation from it; for, should the joint be subjected to any friction by the shoe or stocking in a very short time a bony deposit forms there and then you have the enlargement for the rest of your life unless you submit to an operation for its removal. cooking. Food should be cooked in a steamer, and so retain the salts, which are highly essential parts of all food.

One thing more should be remembered in regard to digestion. There are two classes of people to be dealt with. One class, with strong digestive powers, turns everything that is eaten into flesh and blood. It is this class of people that is most likely to be effected by rheumatism, apoplexy and so-called heart failure. The other class are dyspeptics, who can scarcely digest anything. They avoid the dangers of those who have good digestion. They seldom have rheumatism, because the poisons do not get far enough, but they are constantly ailing and miserable, making those around them miserable also. Yet, they are much more likely to reach old age than the man with a fine digestion, unless he is temperate in eating.

Consolation.

ANDREW CARNEGIE was illustrating the value of fame.

"There was a man sick unto death with a malady that puzzled the distinguisher specialist called to attend him. One morning the great doctor appeared with eyes aglow.

"'I congratulate you,' he said.

"The patient looked up hopefully. 'Will I recover?' he asked.

"'Oh, no, there is no hope of that, but if the autopsy proves, as I believe it will, that you are suffering from an entirely new disease, we will name the malady after you.'"

No Need for Anxiety.

RECENTLY a well-known medical authority said in his closing remarks to the graduating class: "Gentlement, you are now going to practice what you have been taught. . . . In opening up practice we are at first a little timid and anxious to avoid mistakes. I wish to impress it strongly upon your mind that there is no need for anxiety. . . . Whether the diagnosis be wrong and the prescription ill-advised, rest assured, gentlemen, in nine cases out of ten nature will help itself, while the tenth case will succumb in spite of medical aid."

Suggestion as a Means of Cure.

CECIL W. WATSON, of Covina, writes a letter, in the course of which he says:

"I think from experiments which I have made, the large majority of osteopathic cures are due to the magnetism which passes from the manipulator to the patient, charged with the 'intention' of the former. I have for many years, with many others, contended that the involuntary organs could be controlled by centering the consciousness in them, or, at all events, that their perfect action could be insured, all other things being equal, by this means. When first experimenting upon my own digestive organs, it was my habit to center the mind in the stomach, my imagination traveling downward, over the chest. But I have superseded this method, remarkable as were the beneficial results, by concentrating all my nervous force, after meals, in the spine; first of all arousing myself into a pleasant frame of mind and then imagining the steady flow of magnetic streams from the spinal cord to all the visceral organs. The results were perfect action of all the organs of digestion and assimilation, and a condition of perfect harmony in the whole system.

"Whilst I do not consider it necessary to make a habitual practice of the above method, and agree that thorough mastication of suitable food alone and the withdrawal of the mind from any other idea but that of assimilation of nourishment is sufficient in most cases, the process is undoubtedly a helpful one for those who are trying to recover from years of careless or ignorant dieting. It of course needs some practice to be able to center the mind in any given place or to force it to entertain only one idea for any length of time.

"Exactly the same method could be applied with surprising success in the rejuvination of weakened sexual organs. It is important that the mind should be aroused into a joyful or at least pleasant condition, which can be effected by effort of the will, and that it should be pure.

"One person may treat another with equal, if not greater success. And I also think that, on the same lines as wireless telegraphy, benefit can be given at a distance if the 'receiver' is en rapport with the 'transmitter.' Now that it is pretty generally conceded that the world has a magnetic body (called 'odic' or 'odyllic' by Baron Von Reichenbach), even as we ourselves have, it seems to me reasonable that a current generated in the magnetic ether in any given direction, under the impulsion of the will, would effect its purpose if the patient is 'in tune' with the operator. I am aware that you refer all cures of this class to suggestion, and those clever people who claim to send out 'vibrations' to thousands of clients at so much per, are probably of the same opinion. But I think if one case is treated at a time and that party is unaware of the fact (we will suppose it to be a child) should the specific results desired or willed be accomplished, it would conclusively prove the genuineness of this class of 'absent treatment.'"

There are undoubtedly, as the editor has frequently said, more features of suggestion, or the power of the mind over the body, than we have yet learned. Such ideas should, however, be very thoroughly investigated before they are adopted.

A recent work on the subject of suggestion is "Auto-Suggestion," by Dr. Herbert A. Parkyn, editor of Suggestion, a Chicago monthly, to which reference has frequently been made in this department. Dr. Parkyn is one of the sanest of the members of the so-called "new thought" school. Anyone who has met him will realize at once that he is no believer in the foolish theory that "all is mind." He is a fine specimen of physical humanity, and a good advertisement for the theories he teaches.

In his preface to this book—which is mainly a reprint of articles published in Suggestion—Dr. Parkyn says:

"It is now a demonstrable fact that Magnetic Healing, Divine Science, all the phenomena of Christian Science, Mental Science, Sacred Shrines, Absent Treatment, Success Circles, etc., are due to auto-suggestion. In fact, the majority of cures made under the direction of the practitioners of the various schools of medicine can be traced directly to the same cause, and progressive physicians everywhere are now studying the phenomena of auto-suggestion, and the leading monthly medical magazines are teeming with valuable contributions on psycho-therapeutics."

Dr. Parkyn lays full stress on the importance of what he calls the "life essentials"—air, water and food. He says:

"In treating one's self by auto-suggestion the life essentials must be given careful consideration and be properly partaken of, for all the auto-suggestions of health, strength, etc., will prove unavailing unless the life essentials are supplied in proper proportions."

The author is a great advocate of water drinking, claiming that everybody should drink two quarts of soft water daily. The editor cannot quite follow Dr. Parkyn in this. It depends largely on circumstances. For instance, if a person lives mainly on fresh fruit, he may need no water at all, for such fruit is from eight to nine-tenths water, of the purest kind. Again, in some phases of gastric disturbances water is not tolerated. Also, remarkable cures have been made by what is known as the "dry diet" system, in which liquids are almost entirely withheld. Dr. Haig says you cannot eliminate uric acid by drinking water.

Regarding the use of invalid foods, the author makes the following sensible remarks:

"The average patient lives on foods prepared for dyspeptics, shuns the hearty diet of the healthy man, and is always looking for the time to come when he can eat the hearty diet; but he fails to realize that he is prolonging his misery by avoiding the food which contains the very constituents that would bring him health."

The author notes that many people overlook the fact that mind and body are inter-dependent. He draws attention to the importance of getting the right kind of nurses for children, so that their infant minds may receive proper suggestions. He makes the sensible suggestion that there should be regular training schools for children's nurses, as there are for hospital nurses.

The author's theory in regard to personal magnetism is that it is not, as usually supposed, a force, like electricity or magnetism, but that it is merely the art of pleasing—the impression, favorable or otherwise, that one person makes upon another.

Here is another sensible observation: "The new thought becomes a positive failure in the majority of cases where there is poor health, unless the physical body and its requirements are given proper attention."

That is in line with the following observation, from the latest number of Thought:

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh and has its own conditions of existence, serious infractions of which mean disintegration, no matter what the attitude of the higher power within us."

If more of our "New Thought" friends would realize and recognize the importance of the physical side of man, they would not so frequently lay themselves open to the contempt and ridicule of logical people.

On the subject of absent treatment, Dr. Parkyn is also eminently sound. He truthfully says that "the success of absent treatment depends entirely on the auto-suggestion of the person requiring treatment, not on the thoughts or vibrations of the so-called absent healer."

There is a chapter on auto-suggestion and breathing exercises, more extended reference to which will be made elsewhere in this department.

"Auto-Suggestion" is published by the Suggestion Publishing Company, 4020 Drexel Boulevard, Chicago. Price, 75 cents.

Syphilis.

AN Arizona correspondent asks for advice in regard to syphilis. He writes:

"My body is all broken out with red spots. My doctor is treating me with mercury pills and says he can cure me in three years' time, and charges me $15 per month for the first year, $10 per month for the second year, and $5 per month for the third year. The first indications were chancrous sore throat, headache and breaking out all over my body. You are opposed to drugs in any form. Please let me know through your magazine if I can be cured without drugs, and if I cannot be cured in less than three years. The above will be very hard for you to answer, but as I am engaged to be married in less than eight months' time I am very anxious to know if there is any other remedy."

In reply to the above, the editor would say, first, as plainly stated in the standing notice at the head of this department, personal inquiries are not answered here. Second, a case of syphilis is far too serious a matter to be treated briefly in a printed article. Not only can the correspondent be cured without drugs, but he may rest assured that he will never be cured under the drug treatment. The symptoms of the disease may be driven back into the blood, only to appear again later in some aggravated form. A thorough course of hydropathic treatment, with careful attention to diet, is the only effective means of assisting nature to throw this poison out of the system. The correspondent should, if possible, go to some institution where good treatments are given, in connection with diet, such as the Battle Creek sanatoria, that are scattered over the country. If he is unable to do this, he should seek the services of some experienced and conscientious physician who does not depend upon drugs. Under such proper treatment, he may count upon a cure in considerably less than three years, but not perhaps in eight months. It serious crime for him to marry before the been eliminated from his system.

Bugs Do Great Damage.

WHEAT, COTTON AND FRUIT CROPS ALL SUFFER FROM THE PEST.

From the Boston Transcript.

THERE need be no fear that when The Hague tribunal takes the place of war the human race will be without its enemies or its opportunities to fight.
vance sheets of the forthcoming year book of the Dertment of Agriculture reveal something of the loss to hich our farmers are subject by the fourteen most imrtant insect pests. The war against them is incessant.

In fact, these natural enemies do not permit of statisti-

The chinch bug occasions a greater loss than any of other insects which prey upon the better known ag-ltural products. The minimum damage done by it, rding to the department, may be safely placed at
,000. Most of this falls on the wheat raisers, as chinch bug, while it also attacks other plants, is parrly fond of wheat, and is usually to be found in the year the insect known as the Rocky swept over practically the whole of the middle West and, especially in Kansas, causing an almost total loss of growing crops.

Cost of Fighting Pests.

To these direct losses by reason of diminution in the volume of crops must be added the amounts expended by the farmers themselves in fighting the various pests and that expended by the government for the same purpose. When everything is taken into consideration, it is clear that the damage done by all kinds of injurious insects in the course of a year is at least $750,000,000. In most cases, of course, interests other than these of the growers are affected. Millers of wheat lose, of course, if the crop is short and they cannot run on full time, and the closing of cotton mills on more than one occasion in the past has been due to high prices resulting in part from the operations of the boll weevil and other pests.

The public, as a whole, is also affected, as in such cases it is compelled to pay more for the manufactured product, such as flour and cotton goods. The government spends thousands of dollars each year in conducting campaigns against various pests, and in some cases, notably that of the boll weevil, special appropriations of large sums have been made by Congress.

Summing up the Losses.

The experts of the Department of Agriculture make the following recapitulation of the minimum annual damage caused by the fourteen most dangerous pests:

Chinch bug	$ 60,000,000
Hessian fly	40,000,000
Grasshopper	50,000,000
Corn root worm	20,000,000
Corn ear worm	20,000,000
Boll weevil	20,000,000
Boll worm	12,000,000
Cotton leaf worm	8,000,000
Codling moth	20,000,000
Potato bug	8,000,000
Grain weevil	10,000,000
Army worm	15,000,000
Cabbage worm	5,000,000
San José scale	10,000,000
Total	$298,000,000

The loss is distributed among various products as follows:

Cereals	$200,000,000
Cotton	50,000,000
Truck crops	53,000,000
Fruits	27,000,000
Miscellaneous crops	5,800,000
Products in storage	100,000,000
Hay and forage	53,000,000
Tobacco	5,300,000
Sugars	3,000,000
Forest and products	111,000,000
Animal products	175,000,000
Total	$783,100,000

Cab Centenary.

ANCESTRY OF LONDON VEHICLES, FROM WHICH COME OURS.

Henry C. Moore in London Leader.

THREE hundred and fifty years ago the Londoner who could not afford to keep or hire a horse was compelled to make his journeyings on foot. Private coaches existed, but they were used only by ladies of high rank, and any man who had the misfortune to be discovered riding in one was regarded with contempt as an effeminate creature.

But towards the end of the sixteenth century several men of wealth began to ride openly and unashamed in their coaches, thereby arousing the indignation of the people and causing an attempt to be made to suppress by act of Parliament the degenerate practice.

A few years later the practice was no longer considered disgraceful, and nearly everyone who could afford to do so took advantage of the change in public opinion. Then, in the course of a few years, hackney coaches were established for the benefit of the middle classes, and, in spite of aristocratic displeasure and heavy taxes, increased in number and remained the popular public vehicle until the beginning of the nineteenth century, when Londoners began to complain that they were antiquated vehicles.

The Coffin Cabs.

Some suggested that the Parisian cabriolet de place, similar in appearance to the modern gig, should be introduced, and in 1805 Mr. Rotch, M.P., and his partner, Mr. Bradshaw, obtained licenses for nine of these cabriolets, on condition that they never enter the populous area known as "within the bills of mortality."

It is not surprising that these cabriolets, being debarred from entering the districts where they were most needed, were not very remunerative. But they were sufficiently popular to make it clear that it was not to the public interest that they should be excluded from "within the bills of mortality," and on April 23, 1823, twelve fully-licensed cabriolets were placed on the streets.

The new vehicles carried two passengers, the room for the extra person being obtained by relegating the driver to a queer-looking seat on the off side, between the body and the wheel.

These cabriolets, which were soon named "cabs," were exceedingly well patronized, and in a popular topical song it was recorded:

> In days of old, when folks got tired,
> A hackney coach or a chariot was hired;
> But now along the streets they roll ye
> In a shay with a cover called a cabrioly.

The cover referred to was the hood, which, when the forepart was not lowered, somewhat resembled a coffin standing on end, and thereby earned for the vehicle the name of "the coffin cab." The fare was eight pence a mile, and four pence for every additional half-mile or part of half a mile.

The First Hansom.

In 1832 Mr. William Boulnois invented and placed upon the streets a new type of cab which, in consequence of its resemblance to the forepart of an omnibus, was soon nicknamed "the omnibus slice." Unfortunately, it proved to be more popular than remunerative owing to so many of the riders availing themselves of the opportunity, which the back door presented, to alight, unseen by the driver, without paying.

The proprietors of "coffin cabs" were well pleased at the failure of the "back-door cabs," but they were not long free from opposition. As early as 1835 Mr. Joseph Aloysius Hansom, architect and journalist, placed upon the streets a new cab of his own invention.

"A hansom cab—'tis the gondola of London," wrote Lord Beaconsfield, but there was nothing of gondola grace or motion about Hansom's first cab, which was a big, heavy, almost square box, with wheels seven feet six inches in height. The two doors were at the front, the the driver's seat being just above them on the roof.

The unsuitability of this lumbering vehicle for the London streets having been quickly recognized, Hansom reduced the size of the wheels, made the body less cumbersome, and produced a cab which so pleased several business men that they formed a company to purchase his rights. The price agreed was £10,000, but as the cab proved when put to work to be far from perfect the company refused to pay the purchase money.

Hansom was certainly unfortunate in not receiving a penny for his invention. But posterity has been kind in giving him credit for inventing a cab which was far superior to his vehicle.

The honor belongs to Mr. John Chapman, the proprietor of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, who in December, 1836, patented a cab which was a great improvement on Hansom's. The driver's seat was at the back, the sliding window was introduced, and a cranked axle passing under the body of the cab was adopted in place of the pair of short axles used by Hansom.

A Humble Servant.

This cab was practically the hansom of today, the only important alteration since made being the introduction of the straight axle, which necessitated the cutting away of the body of the cab beneath the passenger's seat.

So far all the London cabs were two-wheelers, but long before Chapman's had ceased to be a novelty the General Cabriolet Conveyance Company placed on the streets the first four-wheeled cab. It was licensed to carry three passengers, two inside and one on the box seat. This vehicle, known as "the covered cab," was, in the course of a few months, superseded by the "Clarence," which, as most people know, is our much-used and much-abused "growler."

During the sixty-nine years that have elapsed since the introduction of hansoms and clarences many other types of cab have been tried, but, with the exception of the "Court," a four-wheeled hansom, all have been failures. In 1897 electric cabs were plying for hire, but just as Londoners were beginning to think that they were firmly established they were withdrawn. A fresh batch, of an improved type, was tried in 1899, but withdrawn after being at work for a few weeks. There are a few motor cabs plying for hire at the present day, and in all probability the number will be increased before the end of the year. Whether a reliable motor cab has been produced remains to be proved. It will be somewhat remarkable if the centenary of the English horse-drawn cab sees the arrival of the horseless cab, which is eventually to supersede it.

Even if you are satisfied with the milk you are now using, isn't it a bother to keep it sweet and to always have just the right quantity.

With Lily Cream it's different. You can put a dozen cans of Lily Cream in your pantry at once—and they'll keep until you open them—and you always have as much or as little as you want—no waste. And Lily Cream is a rich, heavy, full-flavored cream.

Some Matters of Especial Interest to the Women.

Girls Should Have Immaculate Hands.

HOUSEWORK WILL NOT HARM THE HANDS IN THE LEAST—THE VALUE OF SOAP OF GOOD QUALITY.

By Margaret E. Sangster.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

A PRETTY hand is desired by every girl.

What is a pretty hand? I suppose we shall agree that it is one which is white and dimpled, with rosy finger tips, nice nails and small joints. Large, obtrusive knuckles, hands that are too thick and pudgy, or too thin and scrawny to be symmetrical, are not precisely beautiful. But so far as the size and shape of our hands are concerned, we have to take them as they come. We are born with the hands of our ancestry, but the care of the hands is our own, and has far more to do with keeping them beautiful than some people think. I am disposed to the opinion that our hands show character almost as unerringly as our faces do, and I think the manner of using them and the general neatness or slovenliness which their owners impose upon them, are apt to be revelations of the inward life.

For instance, there is Amy, a restless, nervous and excitable girl, whose hands are never still a minute when she is awake. She is always clasping and unclasping them, taking up books and laying them down, fussing with her hair, or her dress, and showing in unmistakable ways that she has no basis of quietude in her own nature. There is Lucy, who cannot sit beside a friend without possessing herself of the friend's hand, squeezing it and fondling it as one strokes a kitten, and near Lucy sits Fannie, with a yet more objectionable habit of handling everything she sees; objects of art, curios, fans, or other delicate things in other people's houses, or in the shops, articles meant to be looked at, but not intended to be touched. Fannie's way is sure to render her persona non grata wherever she goes.

George Eliot, describing Dorothea in Middlemarch, says: "Her hand and wrist were so finely formed that she could wear sleeves not less bare of style than those in which the blessed Virgin appeared to Italian painters."

If you look at some favorite picture of the Madonna, by Raphael, you will see the sort of hand that Dorothea had. Such hands can lie peacefully crossed in one's lap, or, if busy with the pen or the needle, they still retain their feeling of calmness.

"It was all very well for Dorothea to have had those statuesque hands," exclaims Marjorie, "but just fancy that she had been in my case, and had dishes to wash, beds to make, and sometimes pieces to iron. Although I am a school-girl I have to help my mother with the housework, and kitchen work spoils a pretty hand." I am aware that many girls think just as Marjorie does about this. I have even known girls who shirked household tasks and allowed tired mothers to grow more tired instead of trying to ease their burdens, simply because they feared to ruin hands of which they were vain. You would never do this, I am sure, you girls who are reading this talk.

It is possible that hard daily labor without intervals of rest may coarsen and enlarge a girl's hands, but few of us are exposed to this danger. With a little care, a girl may work in the garden, may sweep, dust, or, if need be, scrub, and may wash dishes three times a day, and not injure her hands in the least. Gloves may be worn in the garden. India rubber gloves, fitting tightly to the skin, are a good protection against hot suds, and dainty dish washing, which is preëminently a lady's work is greatly helped by the use of a mop. For pots and pans there is an iron dish washer which is more radical and thorough than a cloth in one's hand. If you are troubled with rough, red or callous hands, if they crack in frosty weather, or the skin peels off, be extremely fastidious about your toilet soap. Wash the hands very thoroughly with soap of good quality, rinse them in tepid water, and be sure to wipe them dry. If hands are always wiped until all the moisture is gone and absorbed by the towel, they will seldom crack. The use of cold cream, well rubbed into the skin at night, especially around the finger nails, softens and whitens the hands, and a good plan for a girl is to slip such hands into a loose pair of gloves. An old pair of her father's or brother's gloves answers admirably.

While I am about it, let me caution you not to wear dress gloves too small for you, or that fit too tightly. Instead of making your hand look smaller, tight gloves exaggerate its size. Gloves should be long enough to fit the fingers comportably and should come up well over the wrist. I am rather old-fashioned, and do not like to see young girls putting on their gloves in public. One's outdoor toilet should be fully completed before one leaves the house. I know a school where girls receive demerits if they go out to walk or make calls without putting on their gloves first.

Every young girl should have on her dressing table a manicure set. This consists of a small pair of curved scissors, a nail file, an orange stick, a chamois polisher, and a little box of nail powder. When about to trim the nails soften them by dipping the ends of the fingers into warm soapy water. File the nails first, gently press back the cuticle with an orange stick, rub them with a little vaseline and polish the nails with the chamois. A girl who neglects cleanliness in the daily toilet of the hands and nails is either indifferent to bathing and to the proper care of the body, or else her early surroundings have been unfortunate. Observe girls, that a lady's hands may be rough or red, but they are invariably immaculate. Clean hands are the hall-mark of a gentlewoman.

Ink stains may be removed by the use of pumice stone, by lemon juice and salt, or by dipping a sulphur match into rain water and rubbing it on the stain. Fruit stains may be removed by holding the fingers in the fumes of a sulphur match.

Now that I have said all this about beautiful hands, I want to add something else, which is just as important as any of the rest. No hand that is not womanly will ever have a claim to be regarded as charming or exquisite. Womanly hands are those which are engaged in kind offices for those one loves. The girl who is helpful, unselfish, generous and kind, is the one whose hands will deserve most praise.

I must add a word, too, about the cordial hand-clasp. Some girls have a limp, flabby way of shaking hands. They really have no grip. Others go to the opposite extreme, and almost crush a friend's hand when they grasp it. There is a happy medium in this, as in most things. When you meet a friend in the street or at your home, it is very seldom necessary to greet her with a kiss. Almost never should one girl kiss another in a public place. The only exception is when friends are separating for a long time or for a journey, such as crossing the Atlantic or the continent. Then kisses are in order. Usually, it is enough to shake hands when one encounters friends or acquaintances, and the hand-clasp should be warm and sincere.

Do not rush to fads in hand-shaking. Several years ago there was a fashion of elevating a friend's hand in a rather abrupt perpendicular way, which had an extremely awkward effect. That style is now obsolete. In your own home do not greet visitors with a mere stiff bow. Offer your hand. You have, of course, the privilege of refusing to shake hands with a person you dislike, or with one of whom you do not approve.

"The hand of Douglass is his own," but one can hardly offer a greater slight than to refuse or overlook a proffered hand.

Talk for Meal Times.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

I am afraid there are thousands of homes in which good table talk is unknown. People are preoccupied or hurried, worried or cross, and they eat in silence. The presence at the table of a single disagreeable or uncongenial person may impose silence on the rest, and conversation is limited to requests for the bread or the water, and to brief monosyllables, from the head of the house, while the children sit by like mutes at a funeral.

As the family table is the place where three times a day the whole household is gathered, it ought to be the opportunity for mirth, laughter, refined enjoyment and pleasant intercourse. Animals may be fed; human beings in taking food have something beyond the body in view, and should renew brain tissues and spiritual necessities when they replenish life's waste and satisfy physical hunger.

The morning train is a natural foe to breakfast talk. Few of us have the good sense and courage to rise a half hour earlier, and set forward the first meal of the day in order that it may be taken without haste, and without that air of bustle which is fatal to repose. At noon the children hurry in from school and eat their luncheon with an eye upon the clock.

As most of our homes are constituted, the convenient time for leisurely lingering at the table and for agreeable talk is found at the evening meal, dinner or supper, as the case may be. Here is the time of times for exchanging confidences about what has happened during the day. The mother has had her engagements at home, the father and brothers have been away at work, and on each side there is sure to be something to relate which shall be a suitable peg on which to hang discussion.

Of course, the family table is not a lecture platform nor a pedagogue's desk, nor an arena for heated argument. There are homes in which the law of self preservation has induced the reigning sovereign, who is the lady of the house, to lay down as an inflexible rule, never bring politics to the table. They provoke anger and bitterness. Where any subject excites strongly contrasting opinions that may be intemperately maintained, it is wise to prohibit it, at an hour sacred to domestic peace.

Whatever we do, we should not quarrel at the table. Dyspepsia is one of the enemies that we as a people need to fight, and its presence is invoked by disputes over food. Table talk should be light, cheery, bright and entertaining. If anybody hears a good story during the day, he should save it to tell at dinner. If there is in the newspaper a report of some great discovery, some new invention, some heroic deed, that is a fit topic for talk when the family are assembled around the board.

In some houses the old motto: Children should be seen, and not heard, still holds sway, and combined with it is another equally harmful to the effect that little pitchers have big ears. The plain truth of the matter is that nothing should ever be said in the family circle which the "little pitchers" ought not to hear, that every sort of gossip censure criticism and bit of doubtful information not intended for them should be reserved for places and times when and from which they are absent, and that well-bred children should be allowed their proper share in family talk.

This does not mean that a forward child should monopolize the attention of everybody; a precocious one make speeches at which the family smile approvingly, nor an obstinate one pound on the table till he gets an answer to his question. Well-bred children are taught not to interrupt, and to wait until there is an interval in the conversation of older people before they press their claims. A family is not a penitentiary nor a reformatory. It is a republic, in which the rights of every member are, or ought to be guaranteed. One right of childhood is to learn, and much of the practical knowledge which children may learn is acquired outside of the schoolroom and in the home.

If there is one person more than another to be regarded with dismay, it is, however, the one who may be defined as the educational parent. He is so imbued with a sense of his responsibility to the rising generation that he side-tracks everything that does not have a direct bearing on the instruction of his children. With a pedantry that would be amusing if it were not so great a bore, he takes time at the table, as well as on the ferryboat, or in the street car, or on the walk home from church, to explain to his boys and girls the exact meaning of every word they do not understand, to tell them where Manchuria is, and all about the island of Sakhalin, to give them an insight into political economy, and to convince them of the ethical distinctions that obtain in the civilized world. All this and much more our children are to be taught, but while the educational parent is doing his duty to them, table-talk languishes, grown people suffer from tedium, and his home becomes a wearisome place, from which the children themselves are glad to fly.

Very much of home culture for old and young must be indirect, incidental, atmospheric, suggested, rather than inculcated by method. The difference between real culture and the straining after facts and theories which may be called cramming, is exceedingly marked. It is really the difference between the forcing process of the hothouse and the warmth and radiance of the summer sun.

Perhaps nothing advances the culture of a family to high-water mark more rapidly and effectually than the frequent coming to a house of interesting guests. A family should not live in isolation. Exclusiveness, if carried too far, becomes a bane and a blight. Our homes should be receptive to the best influences obtainable from the outside world. Ministers frequently are obliged almost to keep open house, particularly in towns and villages where hotels are few, and where it is not the custom to send visitors to hired quarters. The children of the ministers profit by their parents' hospitality, and are polite, affable, and keen-witted beyond others of their age. Every welcome guest brings to a household a pleasant air of novelty, so that his coming is like the touching at the coasts of home of a ship from another part of the globe. Homes which frequently receive people of distinction become themselves distinguished for all that is best and most elevating in social intercourse.

Should a theme be mentioned in common table talk which requires elucidation that cannot at the moment be given, it should not be dropped out of sight and forgotten. The encyclopedia, the atlas, or the volume of foreign travel may be consulted to good purpose in that expansive half hour which should always follow the pleasant function of the evening meal. One of the most versatile and original men of letters America ever produced encouraged what he called the encyclopedia habit in his children and his family almost always grouped itself around the evening lamp, in an earnest effort to finish some story or topic which was sure to have been broached at dinner. They grew up exceptionally thorough, as well as exceptionally clever.

MANZANITA JELLY.

A DELICIOUS CONFECTION INTRODUCED INTO LOS ANGELES HOMES.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

At a Los Angeles home where the dispensing of afternoon tea is a time honored custom, there has been served recently, with the inevitable "biscuit" or thin bread and butter, a delicious confection which always calls forth exclamations and questions, and which, though no novelty to the ranch women of our California mountains, is something quite out of the ordinary in a drawing-room where women of fashion congregate.

The tempting delicacy is nothing more than a jelly made from the fruit of the manzanita, that decorative shrub which so beautifully adorns the higher slopes of Southern California. It has been introduced here by a woman who discovered it this summer away up in the San Jacinto mountains, 5000 feet above sea level, at the ranch house of an old Spanish-Californian who had made the jelly herself from the wild mountain berry.

It appears that there are no less than four varieties of manzanita in the San Jacinto mountains, and of the two which are most common, only one bears berries which will make jelly. It is easier to describe the kind which is unfit for use than the proper kind, though there is not the slightest danger of making a mistake when a hint is once given. The useless berry is covered with a thick, gumy substance, woolly and unpleasant to the touch, and if the harvester once gets a mass of these gluey things in her hair (as she is quite likely to do, as the desired and undesired fruit grow in masses together) she will never forget the experience.

The jelly berry is what might be supposed from its name (though it closely resembles in shape and appearance its rejected sister) a "little apple." This is the meaning of the word manzanita in Spanish, and this fruit does in one way more resemble an apple than a berry, though it is smaller than most gooseberries.

The fruit grows in clusters, and when ripe, each "manzanita" is the color of a ripe pippin, shading into russet yellow.

The ranch women will tell you that it must be gathered late in June or early in July, or it cannot be made to "jell," but a party of Los Angeles housewives, nothing deterred by this cast iron rule, went out in August, when the fruit was dead ripe, and gathered, in less than half an hour, four paper sacks full of the over-ripe fruit, and against all established precedent proceeded to make some excellent jelly—that which has been creating enviable comment at the fashionable four o'clock teas, before mentioned.

The jelly is made in the good old-fashioned way. The fruit boiled with a little water, strained and squeezed and to three cups of juice, two cups of sugar is added, then the mixture is cooked until symptoms of jellying are noticed.

When done the jelly is of a rich, red plum color, crimson red like the heart of a Satsuma plum, and it has a suggestion of currant jelly with a faint hint of apple, a combinition which is new and delicious.

The manzanita grows only in the higher altitudes and consequently it is not easy to procure it for city folks, for jelly making, but the knowledge that our mountains contain so delectable a fruit may be of interest to the many who camp out among the San Jacinto mountains, or anywhere that the manzanita grows. Those who are provided with the most primitive of camping outfits, will still find it possible to make manzanita jelly, which wil add much as an appetizer to the mountain meal. At one of the camps which is kept open through the year for the accommodation more especially of those afflicted with tuberculosis, in Strawberry Valley, the woman proprietor has done a thriving business from the manufacture of manzanita jelly, which she has put up in glasses by the gross, and sells each summer to the campers and travelers who pass that way, and have heard of this delicate confection.

Berrying parties for manzanita are among the June picnic parties at Bear Valley, and the only disadvantage in such expeditions is that "bears" are as fond of the little apples, as human folk are of the jelly, and when Bruin and the housewife go berrying the same hour, no jelly is made at the ranch house that season.

When green, the manzanita is bitter and puckery and when ripe, it is pithy and tasteless, but for jelly it is unexcelled.

AUTHOR'S CABIN.

Holman F. Day in His Home Among the Pines—Go by Canoe.

From Bangor a railroad reaches northward toward the heart of the Maine woods.

A buckboard waits at a little station for a bone-racking ride of several miles over the rocks, and "corduroy," through mud holes, and a river, with a glimpse perhaps of a deer in the distance until finally among the pine trees the traveler sees some cabins and beyond the silver surface of Long Lake. A canoe takes the wayfarer across a little bay to a beautiful wooded point and he climbs a natural stairway to a newly built log cabin overlooking the lake where Holman F. Day, story writer, poet and now author of his first novel, "Squire Phin," has his summer home.

The virtue of the Maine climate speaks in his sturdy frame and the tonic of the woods in his strong, smoothly shaven, well tanned face and his clear eyes. Here is an author who has resisted the temptations and distractions of the city and has remained faithful to his own field, realizing the richness of the individual, piquant and varied human interests offered in such abundance "way down East." As the sun sinks toward the green mountain tops, perhaps the host sugests a trial for the trout and land-locked salmon in the lake beneath and the rods are taken from their rack, the canoe pushed off and with strong, easy strokes he paddles toward some favorite spot while the lake opens a longer vista of silver water framed in emerald green.

For Holman F. Day is a true son of "Down East." Born in Vassalboro, Maine, November 6, 1865, the son of Capt. John R. Day, Holman Day's education was obtained entirely in Maine, at Oak Grove Seminary, Vassalboro, Coburn Classical Institute, Waterville and at Colby College where he was graduated in 1887. It was one of his natural instincts to tell stories and to write them, and like so many authors he began by turning to newspaper work immediately after graduation, becoming a star writer on the Lewiston Journal.

Later he was appointed major and military secretary on the staff of Governor John F. Hill of Maine. Very naturally Major Day's wealth of humor soon found wider expression than could be afforded by the columns of daily newspapers. He wrote poems and fiction and his verse and his stories found prompt acceptance in the leading periodicals. His first book of verses entitled "Up in Maine," published in 1900, was followed by two others. His stories were sought for more and more eagerly by readers of such periodicals as The Saturday Evening Post, McClure's, The American Illustrated Magazine, Youth's Companion and many others. The constant popularity of his fresh, quaint stories alive with human interest and the great success of his verses at a time when verses are usually regarded simply with toleration made him one of the most popular magazine contributors in our country.

Major Day believes in his field and knows that all phases and all expressions of humanity are to be found "Down East" as well as in great cities. One of the charms of his work is that it does not depend simply upon local color, rich as this is, but he pitures the play of emotions which are universal. Cable's tales of New Orleans and Miss Wilkin's stories of Massachusetts and Westcott's "David Harum" were racy of the soil, true and fresh but they offered more than local color. Mr. Day has added to the piquant flavor of the native types whom he knows so well the ability to picture the full play of human motives.

In his new novel "Squire Phin," the central character is a shrewd and kindly big-hearted country lawyer, living in the quaint village of Palermo which becomes the scene of many extraordinary happenings.

Plowing Salt.

One of the sights of the Great Salt Lake of Utah, developed by the progress of scientific industry, is the system of immense salt-making ponds on the shore of the lake. At Saltair the lake water is pumped into a great settling basin, where the impurities fall to the bottom, and, containing much iron, form a reddish deposit. From this basin the water is drawn off into harvesting ponds," averaging 90,000 square yards in area, and six inches in depth. The ponds are kept supplied with water, as the evaporation goes on from May to September, when the salt harvest begins. The water having disappeared, a dazzling layer of salt, two or three inches thick, is found covering the bottom of the ponds, which is broken up with plows before being conveyed to the mills, where the final crushing and winnowing are done.—[Youth's Companion.

How Needles are Made.

PROCESS BY WHICH STEEL WIRE IS CUT AND TEMPERED.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

There is the story of a prince who was told by the king that he could wed the princess if he could find a needle in a haystack. The people of the kingdom who gathered to watch him and laugh at his failure, were amazed to see him walk once or twice around a haystack, and pushing his hand deep into the hay, triumphantly draw out the hidden needle. They did not know that the princess had managed to thread the needle first and leave an end of the thread sticking out to guide him in his search. So much for the familiar proverb, "As hard to find as a needle in a haystack." Let us hope he did not have occasion as time passed by to learn the other proverb, "Needles and pins, when a man's married his trouble begins."

The raw material for needles comes to the factories in coils of steel wire which must be fine an soft in quality, and of a certain weight and size. The first operation is to cut the coil of wire into lengths each sufficient for two needles, and the next is to straighten these lengths from the bend of the coil. This is done by inserting a thousand or more lengths between two strong iron rings, and putting them into a furnace where they are heated red hot, after which they are taken out and placed on an iron-topped table. While they are hot, an operative takes a long curved iron tool and rubs them backward and forward on the iron, and by the pressure and rolling they become perfectly straight. They are now straight but blunt pieces of wire, without points or eyes. There are various machines for pointing, but the general principle consists of a wheel upon the rim of which the wires are placed, and held in position by a strong rubber band. The wheel with its load of needles projecting slightly beyond the edge, revolves at right angles to a grindstone, and the wires, brought in rapid succession against the stone are soon pointed.

In the old days the point was made by grinding the wire on a dry stone turned by horse power. The fine dust of the steel and stone that filled the air and was breathed by the workmen was fatal. Even if a thick muffler was worn over the mouth, the dust still entered the throat and lungs, its sharp particles cutting the delicate membranes, and those who were forced to work at it seldom lived to be forty years old. Now a steam fan carries off all the little particles of dust through a pipe, and the expert workman can point about [illegible] in a day without danger to his health.

One of the most interesting parts of needle-making is forming the eye. It is said that workmen become so skillful at this that they can make an eye in a hair, and thread it with itself.

Each piece of wire after being pointed is stamped in the center with the impression of two needle heads set end to end, and a screw press working a pair of fine steel punches, perforates the holes through these stamped heads. We now have two needles fastened head to head by a thin section of steel. These double needles, about one hundred at a time, are threaded together with a fine wire passed through their eyes, and look like nothing so much as a fine tooth comb, all teeth.

Of course the stamping has weakened the wire between the double eyes, and they are easily separated, then, while they are still on the wire, the heads are rounded and smoothed by filing, the wire is slipped out, and the needles are set free.

They could not, however, be used yet in sewing, for the inside eye is so rough that it would fray and wear the thread. And how do you suppose they go to work to polish that tiny opening? Why, it is very simple when you know how. A large number of the needles are threaded on a rough, hard wire, which is fastened between two upright posts, and made to vibrate. This causes the needles to whirl rapidly, and the friction soon polishes and smoothes the inside of the eyes.

Still you could not sew with these needles, although they look complete and perfect. Points and eyes are finished, they are smooth and nice, and in appearance, all that could be desired. But, take one up; it is so soft that you could bend it double in your fingers. Evidently another process must be gone through to harden them, so they are placed in an iron pan and heated in a furnace; when sufficiently heated, they are plunged into a vat of oil, and the sudden chilling of the wire hardens it.

Such a confused, tangled mass as they are in now! To an ordinary person it would seem impossible even to separate them, and here again a queer thing is done, for the workman uses a wide short handled rake to straighten out the tangle. You could not do it, nor could I, for it is only after considerable practice that he learns the knack, and is able to fork the needles into shape. Now you would think they are surely finished and ready for use; but take one up in your fingers, it is so brittle that it breaks at the least attempt to take a stitch. They must be tempered, so they are again put into a furnace, this time at a low heat, and allowed to cool gradually.

So far as shape and temper are concerned the needles now seem finished, but they are black and dingy-looking, and one wonders how these tiny things can ever be polished. They are weighed out in lots of about 500,000 each, laid on a square piece of canvas, a quantity of sand and emery powder mixed with them and corded up in a roll. These rolls are placed in a machine between two heavy movable slabs and scoured until they are white, but not shining. Then they are put in other canvas squares with a paste of putty powder and oil, and the machine again scours them, after which they must be washed and dried in ash wood sawdust. Nothing remains now but to "stick" and label them. Seventy-five dollars worth of wire will make two and a quarter millions of ordinary sized needles, which are worth rather more than one thousand dollars.

Preparing Girls for the Duties to be Done at Home

THE MAKING OF GOOD HOUSEKEEPERS, GOOD WIVES AND GOOD MOTHERS

ONE of my girls wrote to me the other day and said she wished I would write something for the home girls; or, as she said, "for girls like myself who live at home and do not work."

Are there many of you like that, girls? I don't mean who live at home, for I know there are plenty of you, but who do not work.

Of course, we may not agree upon our definition of work. For instance, I do not know much harder work than is done by some of the members of the so-called "smart set," who, apparently, exist largely for the sake of supporting a corps of domestics and furnishing paragraphs for the society reporters of the Sunday papers. They must work pretty hard, I should think. No doubt, there is a great deal of pleasure in a certain proportion of such enjoyments; but when it is a ceaseless round of calls and card parties, luncheons and dinners, teas and receptions, balls and operas, it must become, after a little while, something like what a certain small girl called "a pleasure exertion."

I hope my girls have enough of this sort of thing in their lives, but I hope with all my heart that they have something besides that means work. For I don't believe they can be really happy without it, and I know positively that they will not develop into the sort of women they should be unless they have some regular duties for which they are responsible.

We have had letters from girls who said their lives were all work, and who were dull and forlorn on that account. Well, it is a very old saying that all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy—and the couplet applies to Jill as well as to Jack. But in the thought of that part of the rhyme I don't wish you to lose sight of the rest of it. All play and no work is about as poor a business as the other. I wonder if, perhaps, some of our blue and gloomy girls, who write morbid little letters telling that they are forlorn and feel that they are not loved, and that they do not appear well in society and wonder if they will ever find hearts to love and understand them, have any regular occupation. If you haven't, my dear children, your pessimistic views of life are easily explained. Go to work at something, no matter what, and see if you won't be more cheerful.

By this I don't mean that you are to leave your homes and go into an office or a shop or a hospital. There is a big need for girls in the home. I look with pity sometimes at the homes where there are no daughters left. The mother has reared two or three girls, perhaps, to womanhood, and now sits alone at home, doing for herself or leaving undone all the little daughterly things she had planned her girls were to do for her when they were grown. True, sometimes the daughters have married and gone to homes of their own. The girl who has gone out for a career uses this as an illustration, perhaps, and says: "If I had married, mother and father would have taken it as a matter of course that I should have left their home, and why shouldn't I do it now?"

Possibly, there is no reason why not. In many cases it seems necessary. Yet there are times when it is not obligatory upon the girl to go out into the world, and yet when she does so, leaving the old people very lonely. I don't want to interfere with any girl living her own life. But before she turns her back on her home to do this I hope she will be very sure that she is not going from a desire for novelty and a certain excitement, but because she thinks it her duty.

There are so many things you can do at home, girls. How many of you are good housekeepers? How many of you are able to do all your own sewing and to accomplish dainty wonders with your needle? How many of you have taken full advantage of every opportunity you have had for self-culture in the different branches of study that are at your hand in your own home? How many of you are doing your full duty in the philanthropy of your town, in your church or Sunday school or charity or social work or club work? There are so many things right about you, if you will look for them!

At the same time that I urge this, I do not mean to turn my back upon the position I have always held, that a girl should know how to do some one thing well enough to be able to support herself by it, should an emergency arise. To gain this, she should be prepared to sacrifice a good deal. I do not care what is the work she takes up. She should put herself into it and learn to do it so well that she is first in her own line.

Should Want to Work

Do I seem to contradict myself again? I don't mean it. Many of these things a girl can do at home. I know one girl who is a practiced bookbinder, and who studied her work while living at home. She went regularly to her classes and perfected herself in her chosen work without robbing her parents of the delight of her companionship. I know several girls who are expert stenographers and live at home; several women who practice dressmaking and millinery, library work and law, medicine and bookkeeping, and do it all without quitting the home roof tree.

The trouble with too many girls is that they long for the new life which would be theirs if they went away from home to study a trade, a profession or a business. I know that sometimes this is necessary, as I said before—but make sure it cannot be done in any other way before you make up your mind to go out alone into the world.

I may seem to be wandering from my text a little, but I still have very steadily in my mind the girls who live at home. The part I wish to impress upon you is that even if you don't have to work from absolute need, you ought to do it from choice.

I have spoken before of housekeeping, and, I dare say, some of you girls are weary of it. I know plenty of girls who aver that they detest cookery and housework. When I hear a girl say that I generally wonder how much she knows about the work she contemns. It is an old saying that we usually enjoy doing the things we can do well, and I believe it. I have never known a girl who was a first-class cook who did not enjoy it. I don't mean that she is to devote her energies to that exclusively, but that she should not determine that she detests cookery until she has given it a fair trial. There is much more to it than hanging over a stove or mixing food in a pantry.

More and more, scientific dietetics are compelling public attention. Not a week goes by that we do not see some experiment that is being tried in the effects of different kinds of food with workers in various lines. Yet, how many women have even a working knowledge of how this or that article of diet affects the human frame? This is part of the work of housekeeping and cookery. How many of you girls who call yourself housekeepers have gone into this at all?

Even without being scientific, there is much to be learned in domestic economy. Do you study it, you girls who live at home and do not work? How much attention are you giving to what you are making of yourself in your home? Do you belong to the Mother-Petting contingent? I don't mean to the sub-club connected with Each and All alone. But how much do you appreciate of what you may be to your mother and what your presence may mean in your home? How much are you fitting yourself for your own possible wifehood and motherhood?

Years ago I heard a young mother with her first baby say: "When I think of what a wonderful thing it is to have a child, I feel as if a girl's whole life should be a preparation for motherhood." I have never forgotten the remark. It impressed me deeply then, and it impresses me even more deeply as I go on and see the untrained mothers on every side.

Does some one say, "But, perhaps, the girls will never marry"? That makes no difference. The training in consideration, in patience, in tenderness, in unselfishness that will fit them to be wise mothers will help them in every other walk of life. We hear a great deal of talk now of race deterioration as well as of race suicide. I do not mean to discuss either here. But I do know that now, as always, the future of the race is in the hands of the mothers, and that "the girls who live at home and do not work" are likely to be those mothers. It is not a responsibility to make light of or to turn aside with a jest. Rather is it a gracious burden that may some day be granted you, and the very possibility of the gift should move you to an earnest making of the best of yourselves in every fibre of your being.

Christine Terhune Herrick

P. S.—Every mail brings a host of letters asking one or the other (or both) of these two questions: "How shall I address your letter?" or "How can I get a badge?"

Address all letters to me, in care of the paper in which you see our page, inclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope if you wish a personal answer.

For the badge—send 50 cents in stamps, registered letter or money order, made payable to me, and addressed to me in care of this paper.

WHAT "EACH AND ALL" MEANS TO GIRLS

PERHAPS some of you, seeing this page for the first time, wonder just what the Each and All Society really is; what there is about its aims and objects to create so widespread an interest among young girls of all ages."

The society was founded in February, 1905, and with an almost instant membership of girls in almost every State in the Union and in Canada.

Its object is to help girls help themselves by developing their talents into something the world wants; to solve difficult problems—the sort a girl wants a calm, unbiased, out-of-the-family opinion upon; and to promote the exchange of general help.

Any girl can belong. There is no red tape about it. The sending of your name for membership gives you the range of every opportunity the society boasts. And Mrs. Herrick stands ready to welcome, to advise and to help.

Send in your name for membership.

HOW THE BADGE FUND IS GROWING

OUR badge fund is growing, girls, with here a nickel and there a half dollar and somewhere else a dime. That is, it grows and shrinks, for it isn't allowed to lie idle! Every fifty cents of it sends another badge along to some girl who cannot afford to buy one herself.

And such enthusiastic letters come back! For the badge is as pretty a little pin as any girl could want, and besides its beauty it carries the emblem of our society—a bee—in gold on a field of rich blue enamel.

Each pin is fifty cents, which may be sent to me in stamps, money order or registered letter, in care of the paper in which our page appears.

CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK,
President.

CORRESPONDENTS' AND POST CARD EXCHANGE

If you have any addresses of girls wishing to correspond or exchange post cards, give them my name and address.
GERTIE (Philadelphia).

Would you please send my address to a few of the members who wish postal cards.
A. M. McN. (Upton, Mass.).

I would like to correspond with members of "Each and All" and to exchange fancy postal cards.
P. H. McD. (Atlantic City, N. J.).

Will you let me ask in the paper if any one will correspond with me in German, schrift preferred?
M. (Philadelphia).

I would like to exchange postals with some of the members.
N. A. U. (Olney, Pa.).

I will be glad to exchange postal cards with other members of the society.
H. P. (Reading, Pa.)

I would be very glad to exchange postals with any of the girls who wish to. Our Plymouth cards are very pretty and interesting. Sincerely, your friend,
N. P. H. (Plymouth, Mass.).

I, too, am making a collection of postal cards. Will you give my name to other girls who may wish to exchange with some one?
B. B. F. (Camden, N. J.).

I should like to correspond with any one interested in oil painting.
J. M. H. (Atlantic, Mass.).

I am a collector of postal cards, and would like to exchange. I wonder if some of your correspondents could tell me what a country girl can do to earn a little money. I am 16 years old, and live on a large farm, three miles from the nearest village. I would like to earn enough to help me through the next year at high school, if it is possible. Would prefer copying letters or addressing envelopes or anything that can be done at home.
E. L. P. (Saunderstown, R. I.).

I would like very much to correspond with some of your girls. I am 20 years old.

Would any one like to write to me in Spanish? I have a limited knowledge of that language, as I have lived in old Mexico several years.

For those of us who live where it is impossible to form a sub-club, how would a chain letter club do? They are very entertaining.
DOLORES THIRD (Las Vegas, Nev.).

I am interested in music, painting, literature, and, especially in antiques of every kind, and have dabbled a little in each. If I could obtain the addresses of members of "Each and All" who desire to exchange postal cards I would exchange with them, as I am collecting.
SPHINX (Melrose Highlands, Mass.).

I like to read my Bible, and I would like other people to tell me some nice lesson to study, and would like the members of "Each and All" to mention in some of their letters the chapters or verses that they find comfort in. It will give us more to think of and perhaps cause some of us to read more of our good book.

When things don't please me and people cross me, I just repeat the fifteenth chapter of Proverbs, first verse, and then, as soon as I can I read the chapter, and it helps me to hold my tongue.

I think there are so many others, and I am anxious to learn more each day, and try to do better and also to do something for some one.
Mrs. A. L. T. (Bethlehem, Pa.).

As I live in the suburbs, and have a lovely country home, I devote my time outside of my household duties to poultry raising and flowers. I love housekeeping, dearly love it, and at present am putting up pears and peaches grown on the place. I am setting some fall chickens, and would love to correspond with any one interested in the raising of poultry.
M. M. (St. Matthews, Ky.).

I would like to be able to help somebody, and also to exchange post cards. If you will give my address to some of the girls I will gladly exchange with them.
GLADYS M. E. (Liverpool, Ohio).

Will you please put my name in the paper as one who would exchange postal cards?
CHESSIE (Coatesville, Pa.).

I send my name now to be entered on the "post card exchange" list. You may give my name to any one who may wish it.
FANNIE W. (Providence, R. I.).

Would you please let me correspond with some of the girls?
A. H. (Weatherly, Pa.).

I am a girl of 18 years, light, and am a milliner. I wish to exchange postals with the girls.
E. M. B. (Reading, Pa.).

I am only 14 years of age, but am very anxious to become one of your girls. May I? I also am collecting souvenir postals, and would like to exchange with any of your girls. Please give my address to girls who would like it. Won't girls of my age please correspond with me?
BEULAH (Lowell, Mass.).

I am a collector of souvenir postals, and would like to exchange with members of the club. I prefer unused, colored views, and will exchange as many as are sent me.
SUSIE F. (South Boston, Mass.).

I read of girls who wish to exchange souvenir postal cards. Will you please give my address to such girls?

I am a graduate of the high school of this city, and expect to become a school teacher in a few years.
THE LITTLE GIRL (Reading, Pa.).

I am 16, and go to high school. Any of the girls may have my address if they want it.
FREDERICA H. (Pride's Crossing, Mass.).

We would be glad if you would give our addresses to any of the girls about 13 years old, especially those who like to play games, something like basketball.
V. E. and I. G., Los Angeles, Cal.

I am very anxious to procure souvenir post cards, so please send me addresses of the girls who would like to exchange and give mine to them. E. W., Newfield, N. J.

I am very much interested in collecting souvenir postals, and should like to have the addresses of those who will exchange.

This is a very pretty little city, and the souvenir cards are very attractive, so I feel sure whoever exchanges with me will feel satisfied.
E. G. B., York, Pa.

As I see that several girls would like French correspondence, you may give them my address. Being French myself, I may be of some help to them.
FLORIDA, Biddeford, Maine.

Will you please give my name and address to some girl of 14 or thereabouts whom you think I would like to correspond with, and also to exchange souvenir postal cards? I am getting a collection of them.
GLADYS D., Fall River, Mass.

I am 15 years old, and would love to hear from the girls and help them in any way I could. A. H., Piru, Cal.

I am 12 years old and live on a bleak mountain called "Torrey," but that is no reason why I should not write to you. I also have a friend who is writing to you now. I would love to have any of the girls of my age to write to me.
M. MAC, Piru, Cal.

I would like to correspond with any of the girls who are interested in music, particularly the girls who live in the country in New Jersey or Philadelphia.
EURYDORE, Gloucester, N. J.

Do you not think it would be great to send one's photographs in the first or second letter, so as to become better acquainted with one's fellow-members? Girls, how many of you agree?

I would like very much to exchange souvenir postal cards with other girls who are collecting. If girls would like something to do in spare hours, they could do as I have just tried—they could go to the mills or factory and get work to bring home, such as neckpieces, stocks, turnovers and collars. They are so much a dozen, and it is nice, clean work, also very easily done.
BLUE IRISH EYES, Philadelphia.

I am also very lonesome at times, as I have no girl friends. I would be very thankful to you if you would give my address to one of your girls to correspond with a lonely girl.
K. W., Lowell, Mass.

I am collecting postal cards, and would like to exchange with some of your Eastern girls.
A WESTERN COWGIRL (Santa Barbara, Cal.).

I am 13 years old, and a lover of music. I would like to correspond with the girls, and would also like to send them souvenir postals.
EVA D. H. (Columbia, Pa.).

I would like to correspond with any of the girls who are interested in theatricals. I would like to join a sub-club of amateur theatricals. If any of the girls would like to know anything about housekeeping, I can tell them quite a good bit, as I have been at it a long time.
CARLOTTA (Reading, Pa.).

I can sympathize with all in trouble, and being practical and experienced, may be able to "lend a hand"—at all events, I am willing—wherever I can help in any way, call on me. Should any one wish to write me, will answer promptly.
B. L. M. (Louisville, Ky.).

I do not have time to get lonesome myself, but as many of your girls do, you might send my address to any who would care for a correspondent.

I am 18, fair, 5 feet 7; can turn my hand to almost anything.
H. C. (Los Angeles, Cal.).

I think to exchange souvenir postals is just the thing for us girls. Tell the girls I will exchange with them all if they wish. It would be so nice to have a large bundle of cards just from the girls in the Each and All Club.
ELEANOR (Lowell, Mass.).

I am married and have a little girl 8 months old. I am only 19 myself. I would like to change post cards with some of the girls. I would also like to correspond with them.
Mrs. MABEL L. E. (Wedgmoor, Mass.).

MRS. HERRICK'S ANSWERS TO MEMBERS' LETTERS

MAY I beg for your patience, my dear girls? Hardly a mail comes to me which does not contain a complaint of the delay in the arrival of a membership card or a query why a letter has not been answered or a criticism—kindly, perhaps, but none the less a criticism—of my tardiness in forwarding a list or a name. Let me say that I answer all letters as promptly as possible. I not only have an enormous mail, but the papers that print our page are so widely scattered that it takes time for your letters to come to me and mine to reach you. Bear this in mind, please, and recollect also to inclose a stamped and self-addressed envelope if you wish a reply by mail.

Are some of you "bees" interested in the Audubon Society and the local Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals? Will you refuse to wear the plumage of any bird, and thus aid the Audubon Society? Please protect the dear little birds that are unable to defend themselves against cruel cats and fiends in human form. Don't let any one kill an English sparrow "because it is only a sparrow." Life is as sweet to the little creature as it is to you or me.

If women would refuse to ride behind dock-tailed horses, these blots on the landscape would soon disappear. There is nothing more pathetic-looking than a dock-tailed horse in fly time. Their heads are held up in the air by a cruel check rein, and they have no tails to brush the flies away. It is no wonder that the poor creatures are driven frantic and often run away.

Dear girls, let us try to help all dumb, helpless creatures around us. I speak for those that cannot speak for themselves.
A MARBLEHEAD BEE (Marblehead, Mass.).

Such work as this should surely come within at least one clause of the Each and All aim—"To make the world a sweeter place to live in." How do our other girls stand on this subject?

I want to thank you for the membership card which you so kindly sent me. I keep it on my dressing table, and read it every morning as a sort of "reminder."
J. A. S. (Dorchester, Mass.).

Are there many of our other girls who do this? It is a good plan.

I would like to form a sub-club here, but there are only three other girls in the place, so you see that puts us at a disadvantage.

I would like to correspond with some of the girls who are sophomores at high school.

Perhaps, when school begins in September, I can get some of my friends to form a club. I'll try, anyway. My mother and aunt are very much pleased with "Each and All," and I think every one who reads about it must be.
E. L. F. (Saunderstown, R. I.).

I hope that there will be many more school sub-clubs.

I received the pin the Saturday before we left home, and I am perfectly delighted with it. I wear it night and day, to bed and everywhere else. No matter what my costume, I always find a place for the dear bee.

The badge means so much more to me than merely a pretty ornament. I try to remember my dues, and to carry them out at every opportunity.
E. P. D. (Aspinwall, Pa.).

This is the spirit we wish to see in every member of Each and All.

I wonder if some of the "Each and All" girls could help me. I do so want to spend the winter in Philadelphia, and take special treatment there.

I would have to earn my board while there.

My specialty is dressmaking and millinery, but the former is too hard for me.

I would like to correspond with some girl in Philadelphia, with a view to joining them in millinery work for the winter. I would give and require good reference, for I would be leaving a good home. I have quite set my heart on this, and it means so much to me.

If I could just meet some nice girl with refined tastes, for I would be a comparative stranger in Philadelphia.
C. B. R. (Pittsburg, Pa.).

I have no doubt some of us could help this correspondent if she had given her full name, instead of only her initials. I do not even know if she is a member of Each and All. Should she be this, will she not write to me again and supply her name?

I am 24 years old, and would like to correspond with some of the girls in the East.

I am a lover of music, and I am now working in the aquarium here to help pay for my music when we move from the island. This is my first trial at working away from my mother, and the first week was very hard. As I have lots of spare time, will some one suggest some kind of work to do?

I have a camera, but do not have very good luck with my pictures, and would be thankful for any suggestions from any one.
R. J. S. (Avalon, Cal.).

Send a stamp for a membership card, and I will gladly help you. It pleases me to help all in need, but my Each and All girls have the first and strongest claim.

I am going to ask for help. I belong to a society which has just been formed about six or eight months. The society is in connection with a new church, which has just been completed about two years. The expense was very great, but it has all been paid for, and now a large parochial school is in the process of construction, and consequently there is very little means for a library, which we want very much.

Can you suggest any way around the difficulty? There are about fifty in the society. If you can help us we will be very happy.

If I can give any one any information or pleasure concerning Los Angeles or surrounding climates for sickness or lung troubles I will be pleased to do so.
M. E. A. (Los Angeles, Cal.).

I am sure there are some girls with heads full of ideas who can give valuable suggestions to "M. E. A."

I would like to help the girls all I can, so if there is any way will you let me know? I am very fond of reading, fiction and history. I know quite a few books, and would be glad to tell the names to any of the girls. I read a great deal. I am also fond of outdoor sports. I can ride and drive, play tennis, row, swim and love to walk.

I am afraid none of these things will be of use to the girls, though, except if any of your invalids or shut-ins would like to receive long letters telling about the different trips I have taken. I would try to make the letters interesting to them and cheery. I could also send some of the kodak pictures I have taken.
A WESTERN COWGIRL (Santa Barbara, Cal.).

This is a generous and attractive offer.

I should like to meet girls of the high order, those who wish to make something of themselves. Music is my love of all, French next.
M. G. M. (Winthrop Centre, Mass.).

We have many girls of the "high order." Who wish "M. G. M.'s" address?

I received my pin, and am very much pleased with it. I wear it constantly, and you ought to know the help it is to me, because every time I look at the bee it reminds me of my pledge. I am trying to get my friends to join, as I would like to start a sub-club.

One of your bees,
J. M. S. (Pottsville, Pa.).

The more such members we have, the better for Each and All.

Perhaps you will be surprised to know I am an invalid, never having walked in my life, and am now [illegible] years. I just love to be busy, doing all the sewing for mamma and us three girls, besides keeping up with the reading of the day, writing to my many "shut-ins," doing anything I am able to. I suffer all the time with my spine and nerves.

In the house I go on my knees, but use a chair for the street.

Do you think any of your girls would like to write to me? Being in the house so much, I enjoy my "pen friends," and am always glad of a letter. I would be glad if you know of any one who would want dolls dressed. I am good at such work, and anxious to earn money. I make very pretty fancy work, bags, fancy aprons and other fancy things.

Any reading any of the members have to pass on I would enjoy, and could then pass it on to some shut-in.
M. I. V. (Philadelphia).

Here is an example of cheerful courage, and I am sure many of our girls will be glad to write to this plucky minded. Send stamped and self-addressed envelope for her address.

I am much interested in music, especially as this is my graduating year at the Philadelphia Musical Academy. I would like, if I could, to join a club or make up one of, say, six young ladies, all of Philadelphia, and spend a pleasant musical evening together once a week.
E. S. (Philadelphia).

Who wishes to help "E. S." make up such a club as this? I have her address.

Will you please put in your valuable paper how to make a clipping book? I have all kinds of recipes, and I would like to paste them in, because it gets all wet, and then I cannot read them.
KATHRYN (Philadelphia).

"Kathryn" did not give her address, but if some good suggestions come for preserving clippings I will put them on the page.

I would like very much for you to help me earn a little money at home. I do embroidery and have some very pretty pillow tops. I would like to get some work to do for some of the members. I would do it very reasonably.

I have a lace loom on which can be made hand-made torchon lace, for which I paid $5, which I will sell much cheaper; also I have seventy-two copies of the history of our country, for which I paid 25 cents a copy, making a total of $18. I will also sell them much cheaper. I need the money to furnish my home. I am one of the young married members, and hope some of the members will correspond with me.
MARRIED MEMBER (Hyde Park, Mass.).

Send a stamped and self-addressed envelope if you wish name of "Married Member."

I would be glad if you would print on your page my desire for home retouching, or for a number of girls with capital and some knowledge to start a studio, and I do the retouching and assist. I do not mean a bare studio, but a homelike room and furnishing, where one would feel natural, make a specialty of children in all their cute attitudes, not always fussed up, but when playing, dressed up. There is an unlimited field for women in that line.
ELIZABETH S. (Bristol, Mass.).

I have printed a communication from this member before this, and I hope she may hear from both of these.

I have taken music lessons for three years, and am willing to help all I can some girl like "G. J. G." If answering questions and sending old music to her will do good.

I am 13 years old. If this is put in the paper, I should like to say that anybody whom I can help I will be glad to. I would like very much to correspond with some girl about my own age from Maine. I go to high school next year.
M. A. P. (Bangor, Maine).

Here is a chance for some musical girl who needs help.

I want a badge so badly, but have not had the 50 cents to spare. If I could do something for some of the girls to earn some I would be very glad. I make pretty collars of strips of goods, herringboned together. They are neat and nice and washable, for 25 cents apiece. I would like to sell a few to some of the members.
M. C. (Newport News, Va.).

Who wishes to order a collar and thus help "M. C." to purchase a badge? Send stamped and self-addressed envelope for her address.

I am a girl much interested in piano music, as I have studied some years. I am more than anxious to be able to practice with a young lady violinist or one who plays some other instrument, just for the pleasure and benefit to be derived. I am also interested in forming a sub-club. If there are any members in Los Angeles who would enjoy practicing with me I hope to hear from them.
E. L. D. (Los Angeles, Cal.).

Is there not some musical girl in Los Angeles who would like to practice with "E. L. D."?

Should a young lady invite a young man to call, or should she invite a young man who escorts her home to call?
UNDECIDED.

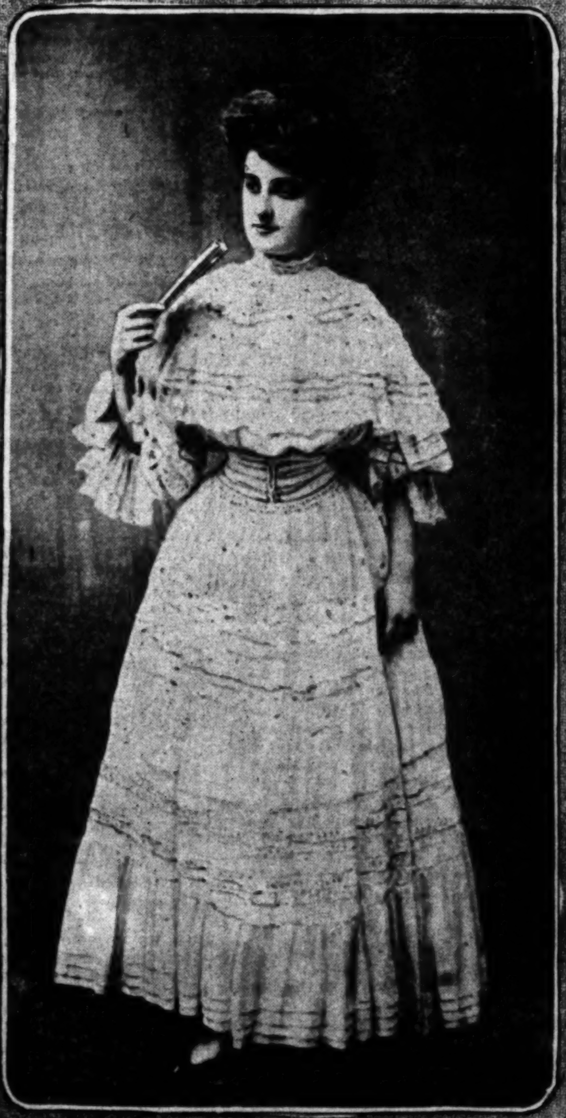
1. I suppose you wish to know if it is the part of the young woman to invite the man to call, instead of the young man to ask permission. In my part of the world it falls to the young woman to invite the young man after she has known him a suitable length of time. I take it that it is the custom in most places.

2. A girl should not accept a young man's escort home unless she knows him well enough to invite him to call. She certainly should not do so unless she has met him more than once or knows all about him through common friends.

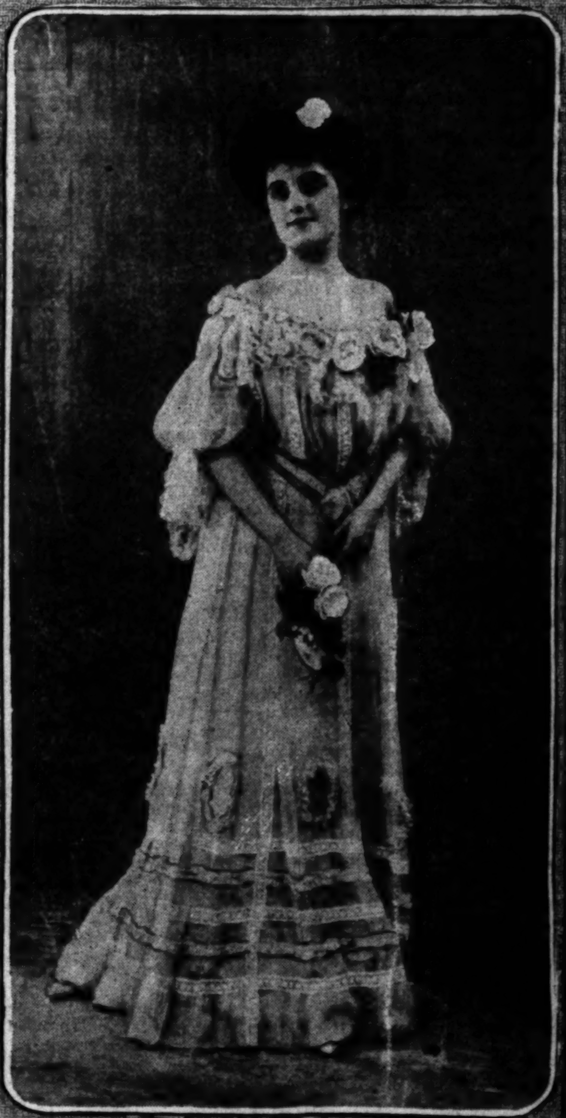
No dress can set well over bunchy underclothes.

Without a bit of unnecessary fulness.

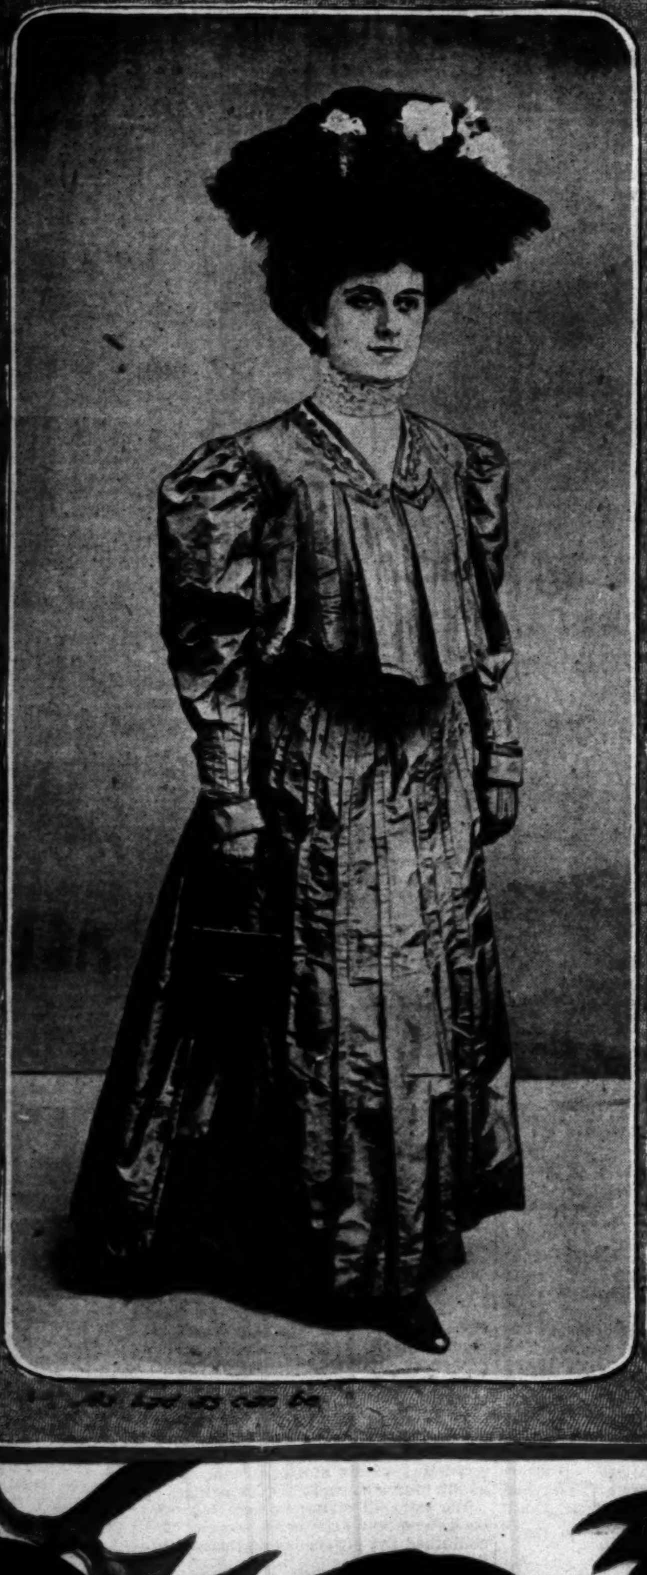
Dressing A Short Figure Aright



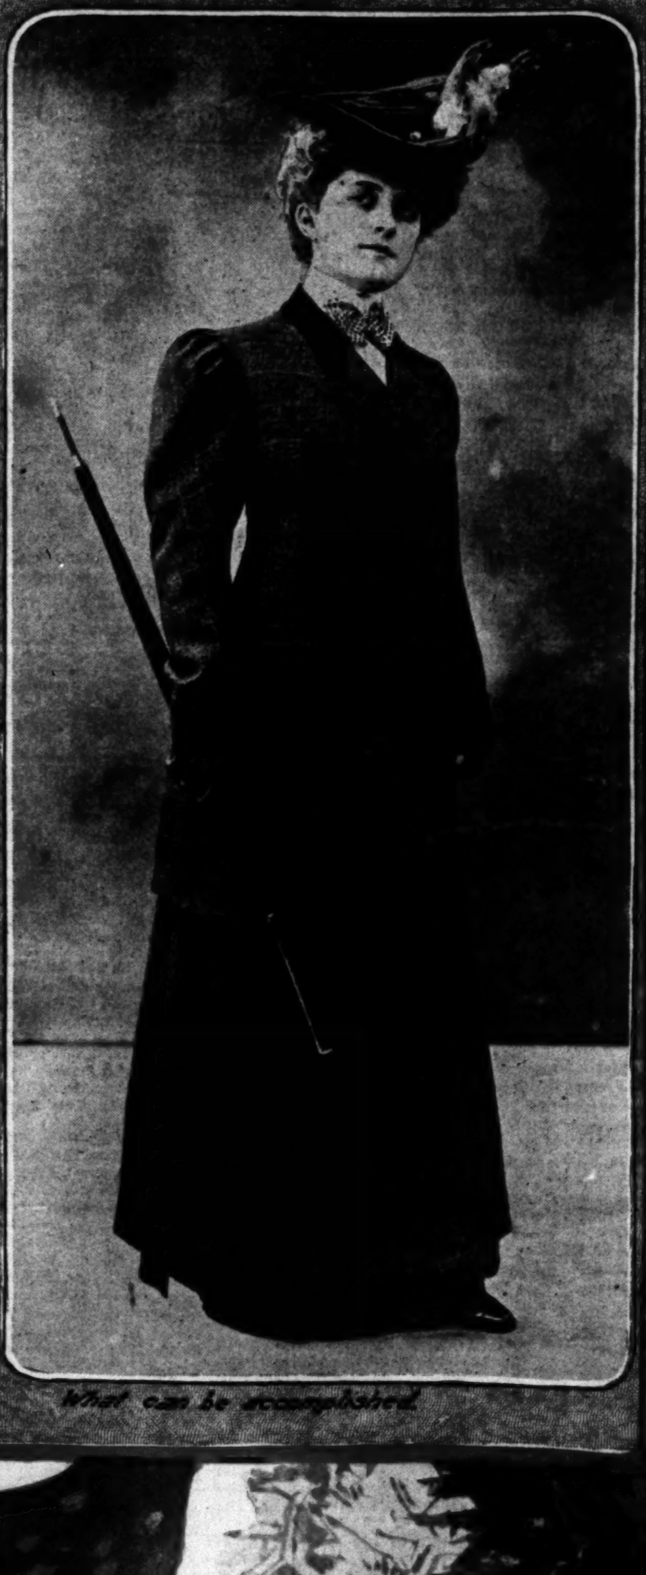
Frills around berthas, short skirts and horizontal trimmings.



Lines that lengthen the figure.



As bad as can be.



What can be accomplished.

ONLY in the past [illegible] have styles been varied [illegible] to permit the short wom[illegible] dress herself in a way that robs her [illegible] of dumpiness.

Her suits and [illegible] should be built on long, straight lines; a long skirt, especially if it train a little, adding a world of dignity and grace by virtue of its length of line.

Trimmings that run around skirt or waist are to be avoided, unless they are near the bottom of the skirt and have other trimmings running down from waist to hem to break the effect. Instead of allowing belt or girdle to run straight around the waist, it should be tilted down a little in front.

Berthas and big sleeves and any sort of trimming that tends to broaden the figure should be got away from. Even when very big sleeves were in fashion there were ways of adapting them to suit different sorts of dress, and the same rules can be followed to adapt them to suit a small figure. Trimmings that run around are as much to be avoided on full sleeves as upon skirts and waists.

Hats come under the same general rules as dresses and suits. Nothing that is generally big and flat and broad is good, while the smaller hats, with a bit of high trimming, do wonderful things toward adding a bit to your stature. A clever milliner will aid and abet you wonderfully if you take her into your confidence. Wings or quills or any of the other countless so-called "high" trimmings, can be juggled with to accomplish almost any effect. Tall women can wear them without seeming to accentuate their height at all, yet with just a little shifting of the angles they can be made to add definitely to a short woman's height.

And corsets and lingerie—there's all the difference in the world between the right and the wrong kinds! No dress can set well over bunchy underclothes; and the only marvel is that when bunchy underclothes are absolutely unnecessary any short woman would so disfigure herself by wearing them.

The "tailored" sorts of lingerie are best; almost everything cut on the lines of the figure—easy everywhere, but without a particle of unnecessary fulness. And corsets can help still further.

THE VERDICT OF THE GODS.

By Sarath Kumar Ghosh.

PROLOGUE.

THE Great King lay sick upon his crystal couch; his hand beat weary time upon the silken sheets; a soft-handed slave held a goblet of cool sherbet; another a dish of scented pan; another a tray of delicate sweetmeats. And another, standing at the head of the couch, wafted a fan of fragrant kuskus to soothe his fevered brow.

But the Great King was sick unto death.

A hundred beautiful handmaids had sung to him from behind pinjra-lattice with esthraj, saringi and sethar. A hundred lordlings had come to him and upon their knees had praised the virtues of his four-score ancestors, saying that he was the Son of the Gods. A hundred sages had gathered round him and quoted the sacred Vedas, saying that the Son of the Gods was also the Son of Immortality and could never die.

But the Great King was sick unto death.

Then, at the hour of night, the royal physician bethought him of a wondrous cure. There dwelt by the palace gate a white-haired man—a skillful weaver of pearls of words and an enchanter of the mind. He sent for the Storyteller to beguile the Great King in his weary hours. The Great King was sick unto death, his heart full of thoughts of death. Perchance the Storyteller might send new hope into his heart.

"Tell me, O Wise One," asked the King from his pillow, "the most wonderful tale thou knowest of human peril. The nine rows of pearls around my neck shall be thy reward."

"To hear is to obey, O Light of the Universe!" replied the Storyteller, bowing his head even to the fringe of the golden quilt. Then seating himself upon the carpet, he began this tale. I, the faithful chronicler of the Great King, listening from the other side of the couch, have written it here in such words as you may understand, O best beloved readers!

CHAPTER I.

IN THE GARDEN OF THE PALACE.

Know, O Splendor of the Earth, that when thy slave was but a youth, there dwelt on the thrice-blessed land that lies between the sacred waters of the Jumna and the Ganges, a king who had an only child, a daughter, who was unto him as the apple of his eye.

The Princess Devala was a wondrous beauty; a houri of paradise, a peri of Indra's court. At her birth the Goddesses Parvathi, Sarasathi, and Lakshmi had endowed her with their celestial gifts. Her eyes were like black diamonds, her lips like red rubies; her face shone like creamy gold, and her hair like a raven's wing.

The King swore by the ashes of his forefathers that no prince was yet born worthy to mate with her. So he kept her in her maidenhood till past her seventeenth year. She played with her maids in the champak groves and lotus beds that surrounded the garden-house of the palace. But no face of man had she seen—save her father's.

Then the King, going forth one evening to gaze upon the setting sun, stood by a pool adjoining his daughter's apartments. His bosom was smooth as the water at his feet. But suddenly it became a raging sea. Chancing to look upon the pool somewhat on one side he saw the reflection of a scene—something that went like a sword to his heart, something that dried up the blood in his face.

He looked up and saw. There stood the Princess Devala at her unbarred window—alone—unveiled. There was a smile upon her lips and a love-light in her eyes.

Beneath the window stood a young man, his face uplifted, his hands upon his breast. Eyes calling to eyes, heart yearning for heart. Enough!

The cry of anguish that broke from the King made the Princess turn. She threw up her hands suddenly, as if to avert some impending doom—then fell back fainting.

The young man came and knelt by the King. He thrust out his neck and awaited the blow. But the King still played with the hilt of his sword.

Strike, O King!" cried out the youth in the agony of suspense. "Why dost thou not strike?"

"Fear not, O miserable one!" spoke the King, in a level voice. "The earth will soon drink thy blood! But it is not meet that my untarnished blade should spill it."

He clapped his hands, and a dozen guards appeared.

"Draw thy tulwar," he bade the foremost, "and sever that head."

The menial swung his heavy tulwar, held it aloft a moment—then suddenly dropped the point to the ground.

"I cannot!" he muttered between his teeth. "This man hath a charm!"

The King silently motioned to the second guard. But he likewise could not strike, crying out: "This man is protected by a spirit!"

And so the third and the fourth, and all the rest unto the twelfth. Some mystic force held their arms—so they averred. Perchance it was merely that they had recognized the man.

He was Narayan Lal, the juggler of the King; his father, the great Hira Lal of Benares, had been the court juggler before him. Thus perchance by his arts had he effected the meeting with the Princess, which no other man could; and thus also, perhaps, had he now infused some subtle fear into the hearts of his executioners.

"Give me thy sword," the King bade the nearest guard; "myself will deal the blow."

But the youth raised his head and said to the King.

"Strike with thine own blade, O King! I am of Kshattric blood!"

"It is false! Thou art the son, the unworthy son, of Hira Lal, my bondsman."

"The reputed son, O King! A Rajput father gave me life!" He flung back his head, and looked his master full in the face. Even a King could not spill Rajput blood in ignominy.

"But I nursed thee at my bosom, fed thee with my smiles, and clothed thee with my favours. And thou are a traitor most perjured. Thou hast brought shame upon my beard."

This was his first allusion to the crime of the youth that the by-standers could divine.

"The full moon may shine upon an earthworm, O King."

"But the earthworm may not cry out to the full moon!"

He was not an earthworm. He called himself that to measure his lot by that of the Princess.

"The Kshattrics are of royal caste, O King!" The words rang out like a heron's cry. They were full of a sudden pride that no shame could subdue.

This was his last hope. It was a challenge upon whose issue depended more than life. The laws of caste were above royal caprice. They were the hall-mark of fate, the destiny of the gods.

The King stood aghast in speechless wrath, as if a thunder-bolt from the blue had fallen upon him.

"Prove it, thou presumptuous dog! Prove thy Kshattric blood!"

"That is my prayer."

The young man paused awhile to give time for the shot to rankle. The King himself had cried for proof. His word was passed. Proof he would have.

"Put me to the ordeal," spoke the youth, arising from his knees and standing face to face; "it is a Rajput's right. If I die, I have lied. If I escape unscathed, I am innocent of thy charge. And may Parameshwar* decide between me and my King."

"So be it. Not once, but six times, shalt thou face death and taste of its agony. Thy blood be upon thy head. Upon the Tower of Victory shalt thou meet thy fate. I have spoken."

"And my reward, if not once, but six times, I am victor over death?" It was a bold bid that only a doomed man would have dared to make.

"Thy Kshattric blood will find its own reward," answered the King, with a smile of unfathomable bitterness, as he went into the palace.

Was this a tantalizing hope to dangle before his glazing eyes as he lay gasping out his last breath? Did the King mean these words? He clutched at the hope with a frantic grasp—

But the guards fell upon him, and binding him with many chains, carried him within the palace walls. Yet, when passing a dark corridor, a small treble voice called out after them—no man knew from where:

"Fear not! Wait—watch—hope!"

That night, as they sat by the palace gate, one guard asked of another:

"Brother, whose voice was that?"

"A boy's, surely," answered the other, knowing nothing of the prisoner's crime.

"Pardon, good sirs, it was a woman's!" whispered a man as he passed by the gate.

They looked at him keenly. His head was shaven, but for a tuft at the crown. His naked breast and arms were scarred with self-inflicted wounds and upon his forehead was painted in vermilion the broad trident of Vishnu. Perchance he had heard from the other guards the tale of the King's wrath.

They recognised him. Seventeen years before had he suddenly come amongst them—the same year that Hira Lal, of Benares, had entered the King's service. No man knew who he was, who his father, or his father's father. They called him Rama Krishna, for he was a devotee of Vishnu that was incarnated as Krishna and Rama.

He was wont to mingle with the poor and outcast, and eat of a beggar's gift. Yet sometimes in the midst of a half-spoken word they had noted the voice of a man born to command, and in his eye had seen the piercing gaze before which the greatest in the land had quailed with fear. But now he was the devotee, the teacher of the people.

He held a withered forefinger to his overhanging eyebrow, and smiled grimly at the two.

"They are all alike, good sirs. Women ever preferred a handsome face to a wise head. This one will surely be heard again."

Then before they could ask him to unravel his mysterious words, he vanished into the dark.

"A pundit and a philosopher," spoke the first guard. "We may see him yet at the ordeal."

"Ay—unto the sixth!" answered back a deep guttural voice from the darkness of night.

Within curtained walls there was the sound of weeping and wailing by night, and the silence of the grave by day. From within palace walls all peace was fled, all joy, all happiness. Deep sorrow reigned in the heart of the King—the heart of the father. For seventeen years had he loved and cherished this child of his latter days; had concentrated upon her the last frenzy of an old and barren and widowed heart. For seventeen years had he dreamt of the coming of a prince worthy to mate with his daughter and perpetuate his ancient race; a prince that was destined to become a King among Kings, a hero among a galaxy of heroes. * * * And instead he had found his daughter's heart given to a menial at his door—for verily he could not be a prince—to one that seemed to him to have violated every law of gratitude and of loyalty, of sanctuary itself, to gain her heart.

The soul of the King was steeped in the waters of bitterness. The heart of the father was bereft of its only love.

And within the inner palace the soul of the Princess was pining with love—with filial love that had been to her a lifelong heritage and a moral law; was pining with unrequited love, because the answering love was now denied her by her father.

But the heart of the maiden, as woman, not as princess—with all the passion of womanhood, its yearnings, its subtlest joys—was all aglow with another love, a new-born love; a love greater far than filial love.

She too had dreamed dreams. For three long years since the dawn of her womanhood—the years that had seemed to her the sweetest part of her life—she too had rocked herself to sleep each night, dreaming of a hero that would dare all things for the love of her: would imperil his life, would fight the world in arms—yea, brave the anger of the gods themselves—for the love of her. Thus in that hour her heart was full of joy. For she had found her hero at last!

Would he fulfill her promise—the promise that she had vowed within her own heart? Would he dare these things, to prove his love—or die in the strife? (Less than that she would not have; more than that was beyond human ambition.) She doubted not he would; doubted not that if ever man could prove his love for woman, heaven and earth notwithstanding, her beloved would. And thus in her own heart she vowed to aid him, succor him, comfort him—or die with him.

She sat by the palace window at early dawn the next day. All night she had lain awake, praying for light. She felt in her inmost soul that her lover was innocent of guilt. Who he was by the right of his birth she knew not—yet felt with dumb instinct that there was something within him, something that had revealed itself outwardly in response to her love, that must needs be of royal heritage. Was he but a juggler to the world? Verily to her he was a prince. Was he not a prince? Who but a prince would have sought death when he had seen the hopelessness of his love—and death from the hand of the King himself?

Thus believing, she prayed for light; prayed to Sarasathi to illumine her path that she might walk in the way of her loves, the old love and the new; prayed for guidance that she might keep her father's love, yet retain the greater love that was now begotten in her heart.

She sat by the window wrapped in thought. The unwonted silence of the palace grew upon her consciousness. Something had struck her heart from the first with dumb apprehension, a vague premonition of coming sorrow—then had grown to shape as the silence had continued and her hungry ears had still pined for the sound that for years past had heralded the coming of her father. Now she realized with a shock: he would not come to her!

For the first time the father had denied his face to the daughter. The conflict had indeed begun!

Suddenly the curtains at the further end parted. In mingled fear and hope she turned. Then the hope died away from her eyes. It was not her father, but the mistress of the household; she that had power over all who served the princess. A woman of dignity, for she was the wife of a warrior high in command, and the mother of five others that had proved their valor on the field of battle.

She stood at the curtain gazing before her. Contending emotions were battling within her. She had her duty to fulfill to the King, cost what it might. Yet, for years past she had served the princess with the deepest affection. Now for the first time in her life she was bidden to guard her and—watch her; to be her jailer!

She bowed to the princess, with hands pressed to her brow. Then standing erect, she spoke.

"Sahiba, I await thy pleasure—thy command." And there was a sudden huskiness in her voice at the old familiar phrase.

"My father!" The words were scarce uttered with the lips; rather, it was an unspoken cry that needed no utterance.

But the other shook her head sadly. "He sends his peace and greetings. He regrets that urgent affairs of state at the dewan-i-kas (hall of audience) require his presence this day."

This day? Too well the maiden knew how long that day would last! Should she see her father again, till—till—

"Sahiba, the garden-house is closed. But these apartments—" She hesitated. How could she convey the cruel message?

"Yes? Do not fear. My father's wish is my wish." The calm dignity of the maiden helped the matron.

"These apartments are—at thy command." Which meant that henceforth the princess should be a prisoner within them!

"How long?"

"Unto the—end!" And the matron turned away her face lest perchance she should betray her trust.

"And then?"

"Thy destiny, Sahiba. What is written upon thy brow from thy birth."

Her destiny? What was that? For three long years had she prayed to Lakshmi to reveal to her that destiny; for three long years since the dawn of her womanhood had she prayed the benign goddess to tell her what joy, what glory, awaited her on this earth. At her birth had she not been promised a life of perpetual happiness with her heart's beloved? * * * But instead what was in store for her? What was to be the end of all her hopes and fears? * * * Was it to be—death? Death for her love? Death for having dared to love? * * * But lo, that also would be Fate. It would, at least, be death with her loved one. (She made that vow within her heart in that moment.) Then so let it be. Mingling their hearts' blood together, they would die. What finer death could she have than that? * * *

"Sahiba, thy command!"

"This message: 'The daughter of a belted queen sends homage to her King, obedience to her father. But her inmost heart she retains for her own.' I have spoken."

The matron bowed. But at the curtain she paused and hesitated. A strange softness came into her eyes. Had she not herself loved in her own youth?

"Sahiba, it is my duty to place someone with thee ceaselessly—to serve thee." (She could not find it in her heart to say "to watch thee.") "But it shall be Leila; for of all the household she loves thee best. * * * And if Parameshwar chooses her to be the instrument of thy destiny, then I shall bow to the will of Parameshwar—my duty to my King notwithstanding." She added that as she departed. For there was a hidden meaning in her words that was at once full of hope and comfort; perhaps also some daring suggestion that the princess should fight her battle with such weapons as Parameshwar sent her.

A while after there was a flash of drapery at the parted curtain—and the swift-coming shadow reached the princess and lay prostrate at her feet. There was a strangled cry that was not spoken words. For the handmaid was but seventeen herself, and her heart was soft.

"Do not weep. Dost thou love me, Leila? Then do not weep. All things will come right; shall come right." As a princess she could not mention her sorrow to her handmaid—the love that had caused that sorrow; for princesses may neither love nor speak of love. But seeing that this simple maiden had guessed her secret, and now gave her the sympathy of her tears, she accepted that homage. Likewise she accepted the offer of aid that it tacitly implied

"And now robe me in my best." She almost said, "As for a bridal."

Then the handmaid robed her. It was a sari of the loveliest Dacca brocade embroidered with alternate stars and moons in gold and silver, and draped lightly with Dacca's "evening-dew"—a white transparent gauze as fine as gossamer lines.

Over the head and shoulders of the princess she placed a soft delicate shawl, fastening one end to the waist on the left side, and letting the other end hang loose over the right arm. And upon her brow she placed the "frost-flowers" of Cuttack—a star of diamonds and rubies, with forty fringes of alternate diamonds and pearls that hung down to her eyelashes. And around her neck she placed nine rows of pearls, and around her right wrist a Rampur bracelet from which nine diverging rows of pearls radiated, to converge upon the necklace—so that with each movement of her right arm a thousand pearls floated in the air.

"But why so early, O Heaven-born?" There was wonder in the handmaid's voice; for verily the Princess Devala had never been thus adorned till the hour of sunset. And then was it not to receive her father, the King?

"To remind me every hour that I am the daughter of a belted queen."

Then the handmaid understood. The Princess Devala drew her blood from a noble ancestress that had done battle for her lover with sword and lance—yea, astride his corpse. From that hour the Princess Devala had vowed within her heart a twofold vow: to obey her father—and yet to do battle for her lover.

That night the princess stood at her window—to think, to hope, to pray for light and guidance. Within these prison walls she must play her part; if needs be, prove the blood of a belted queen within her veins.

Beneath her lay the city wall; beyond it the fields. A hundred cubits to the left, facing westward, was the Tower of Victory. Yes, upon it her lover must meet his fate! How, she knew not yet. What could the nature of the trial be? Lo, she was only a maiden, wrapped up in silks and pearls. Would that she were a man! Then indeed would she discover the secret of her father's heart and the nature of the peril that awaited her beloved—and thus perchance warn him of it. Being only a maiden, she could but pray for guidance.

Suddenly, when the stillness of night was creeping over the earth, she saw a faint glimmering light far away to the right. What omen was this? What omen of hope?

The light vanished. It was but a flash.

Her heart sank within her. Was it but a coinage of her brain, or rather the manifestation of some benevolent power working of her hope? . . . Thus, O Morning Star of Life (said the Story-teller unto the Great King) doth the human heart clutch at a will-o'-the wisp in the hour of its darkness.

But the next night, at the self-same hour, she saw the light again. She thought she saw it. She sat still, in fear and hope.

Two hundred cubits to the right were the ruins of an ancient palace. Upon it she had seen the light. Was it the spirit of the dead that had once dwelt therein sending her a message from beyond the borderland?

And upon the third night and the fourth and the fifth she saw the self-same light.

But upon the sixth, turning her eyes to the pillar on the left, she saw it glimmer at its base. And a while after, upon its pinnacle.

With a blanched face she rose upon the morn.

"Dost thou love me, Leila? Dost thou love me more than all things"

And for an answer the poor girl clung to her hand, bathing it in tears.

"Then go forth into the city and find the wisest man that dwelleth there. To him put this riddle: 'Is the light human or divine?' "

And the handmaid went forth and searched the city. At eve she returned with this message written upon a palm-leaf:

"Both human and divine. Five times upon the ruins; the sixth upon the pillar—first at its base, then upon the pinnacle. Thus five times shall there be suspense; then triumph; but triumph beginning with despair. For the base comes before the pinnacle.—Rama Krishna."

Then the Princess Devala knew that in Rama Krishna she had a friend—perchance the chosen instrument of the gods. A new light was dawning within her heart, even like unto the light that had shone without; for the one was but a symbol of the other. With new-born hope in her heart she turned to rest, awaiting the morrow. For the morrow was the day of the trial. . . . She knew not that even now the hand of Fate was creeping up to her beloved!

At the third watch that night a veiled form stole up to the guard at the palace dungeon. A mere youth, though of good birth, he was yet the captain of the palace guards. At this the critical hour of the night preceding the day of trial, he had deemed it his duty to his king to guard the dungeon in person. Twice he had opened the door at regular intervals to see that his prisoner still slept within. And now even as he had opened it for the third time, the veiled form reached his side.

She held out to him a tray upon which was a dish of delicate sweetmeats and a goblet of cool sherbet. But Harnam Das smiled grimly. Though young in years, he was old in wisdom: he knew that palace sweetmeats had power to send one to sleep.

"I have made these with my own hands. Eat and drink," she whispered softly.

And at the sound of the voice the guard started, clutched at his breath—feeling the blood surge thick through his throbbing heart. Long had he nursed a secret love in his heart, but had never dared to reveal it—to raise his eyes to her that was the favorite maiden of the palace, the sweetest, the loveliest of them all that served the princess. . . . And now the maiden herself stood before him!

He took the tray from her, and laid it upon a tripod beside him. He lifted the goblet, and held it to his lips, saying: "Sweeten it first."

Without a word Leila raised her veil and sipped the sherbet; and after her the youth drank it down as if it were the nectar of the gods.

Then thus encouraged he brought his hand to her hand, and drew her gently to him. With a sigh she yielded herself up to him—a sigh of mingled fear and hope, of love and peace and contentment; for she returned his love. Yet must she do her duty to her mistress—nevertheless spare her lover the betrayal of his duty to his master.

She raised her other hand from beneath the folds of his sari, and coiled it around him. Then lifting her head she kissed him suddenly—thus drowning a soft thud behind that in the ecstasy of the moment he could not hear.

The crumpled palm-leaf shot from her hand through the open door and fell upon the breast of the sleeper within. She saw him awake, gaze at the message, seize it. Then even as she saw it safe in Narayan Lal's belt, she suddenly released the enraptured guard from her embrace and glided away into the corridor beyond.

The guard awoke from his transient dream, and, suddenly conscious of his duty, turned round to the door and peered at his prisoner; but seeing him still locked in slumber, he softly closed the door—thanking the gods that he had not failed in his trust even in the dalliance with his heart's beloved.

That instant, even as he heard the bolt close upon the door, the sleeper raised his head, took out the message from his belt and held it to the glimmering light of the little oil chirag in the corner of his cell. Thus it ran:

"The instrument of the gods awaits thee. In the hour of trial await him. Upon the pinnacle lies death; beneath the sand life. Watch and hope."

And Leila, who for the love of her mistress had delivered this message at the peril of her life, fled through the corridor with a panting heart. But even as she was about to reach the inner palace (the harem) she heard a cat-like tread. Something glistened before her; vanished. In sudden terror she recoiled; found shelter behind a pillar. Long she waited, holding her breath. The footsteps died away. Still she waited.

The silence of the night now grew around her. Then she emerged from the shelter of the pillar. The harem door lay ten cubits afar; one deep breath, and she would be behind the curtain—undetected, her mission fulfilled.

That instant a muffled form leaped out from a side passage; seized her fiercely.

"Now I have thee!" he hissed between his teeth. With bleary bloodshot eyes he peered into hers, and bringing his thick hemp-sodden lips to her mouth, fastened them upon it like a vampire sucking the sweetness of her tender flesh.

A strangled cry, a stifled shriek—her right hand shot from her bosom. There was a flash of white, and the jewelled stiletto come straight for her captor's face—missed his eye, but pierced his ear; passed beyond, and was transfixed upon the sandal pillar.

With a muttered curse he put up his hands. In the momentary respite she slipped away from him, and fled into the harem like a frightened deer.

Binding up his ear with the end of his turban, the man stuck the stiletto in his belt. "My pretty bird, once again hast thou escaped me; but the next time I shall have my fill. Then I shall cast thee from me, and gloat over thee and thy lover—ay, over thy mistress and her lover in their ignoble doom."

It was the challenge of a demon to the message of hope of the instrument of the gods.

GOOD CHEER CORNER.

A Good Boy.

I woke before the morning, I was happy all the day,
I never said an ugly word, but smiled and stuck to play.

And now at last the sun is going down behind the wood,
And I am very happy, for I know that I've been good.

My bed is waiting cool and fresh, with linen smooth and fair,
And I must off to sleepsin-by, and not forget my prayer.

I know that, till tomorrow I shall see the sun arise,
No ugly dream shall fright my mind no ugly sight my eyes.

But slumber hold me tightly till I waken in the dawn ,
And hear the thrushes singing in the lilacs round the lawn.

At Catalina.

Dear Editor Good Cheer Corner: I am a Los Angeles girl of twelve years. I will tell the readers of the Good Cheer about a trip I had to Catalina. I went in bathing every day; the water is so nice. They have no breakers there. I have learned how to swim fine.

We would get a number of girls and go out climbing the mountains. We could see herds of sheep. One day we all went to the isthmus in a boat. There we had a fine barbecued dinner; it was the best dinner I had ever eaten. We gathered a good many shells. Then we came home.

Next day we went in the glass bottom boat. The first we could see was the "Tin Can Alley;" then the Marine gardens. We saw all the shells and fish. I was very sea-sick going over, and coming, but would like to go again next vacation. Hoping this letter is a success, I will remain, yours truly,

AGNES KLAGER.

We were very glad to her from you, Agnes, so you may consider your letter a "success." Come again.

A Fairy Story.

Dear Editor:—I am a little girl thirteen years old. I live in Los Angeles. I thought I would write you a letter about a little girl I know. Her name is Helen, she was a sweet, pretty girl, but did not like to work.

One day, a long time ago, she was told by her aunt to sweep the floors. She was lying in the hammock, reading, and did not care to move. She was real interested in the story, and went to sleep with book in hand.

She had not been asleep long, when she began to dream. She dreamt she was walking in the woods one spring morning, when she met an old lady. The old lady said to her, "I am trying to find the best little girl worker in the world."

So Helen sat down and said, "May I go with you to find the little girl?"

The old woman said, "Why, of course you may."

So Helen went with her, and they found one little girl that never played, but worked all the time. The old lady took her home with her, and bought her the best of everything ,and gave her some pretty jewels. Then she said to Helen, "Some day I will come and get you and give you the same, if you will go home and work."

Helen awoke, and ran and did her work. She works all the time now, and the old woman has not come yet. Helen says she don't believe in dreams. Yours respectfully,

HENRIETTA NEWMAN.

A pretty little story—but think of working all the time! That's as bad as playing all the time!

A Trip to California.

Dear Editor Good Cheer Corner:—I would like to tell you about our trip to California. We left Chicago on Tuesday evening, and were very glad to arrive at Los Angeles (But I saw some very pleasant sights.)

We did not see very much until after we left Kansas City. We had some very nice people on the cars.

We saw Devil's Cañon, and Starvation Peak, which was very interesting, and also Johnson's Cañon; and then we came to the bottomless pit, a little ways from the track, and they say it cannot be filled up; it made us shudder to think of the depth.

When we arrived at Colorado there was about six inches of snow, and as our train was delayed a few hours, we all got off to have our last snowball fight, or at least for some time to come, for I like California and don't want to go back to Pennsylvania, although I enjoyed the skating. I would just as soon skate on roller skates in California, yours truly,

SARAH ALGEO.
(Age. 11.)

You seem to have had a very pleasant trip. Come and see us again.

More About Catalina.

Dear Editor of Good Cheer Corner:—I have been reading the different letters of girls and boys who write for the Good Cheer Corner, and I thought you might like to hear about my trip to Catalina.

California is a beautiful place to see, any way, but the island and its wonders were beautiful beyond description.

Twelve in number, we started from Los Angeles, August the fifth, about half past five. From the Pacific Electric Building, we took the San Pedro car, and after a delightful hour's ride, we arrived at the beach, from where we took our steamer direct for Avalon.

I had never before been on the water, but we all proved good sailors and thoroughly enjoyed the lovely moonlight ride. I'll confess that I did feel lonely, when all sight of land was invisible, but I soon got over that.

Hungry and tired, we landed at Avalon, and began at once to search for something to eat. We soon found something that satisfied our appetite, and started immediately for the Land of Nod. The next morning excitement woke us early, and we soon found ourselves oh-ing and ah-ing at some very large fish down on the beach. After examining these, we bought some curios, visited Canvas City, and then went back to the hotel and ate some breakfast.

Soon after nine o'clock we took the glass bottom power boat, and reached Moonstone Beach by riding over the marine gardens.

This was the greatest event of the day, seeing the forest of seaweed, abalone shells, fish and different beautiful things. During the day we took many pictures, especially at Seal Rocks. The animals greeted us with their mournful cries, and each family gradually disappeared into the water, as our boat came nearer.

Six o'clock came very quick, and we were all sorry to leave Catalina, but decided to go again.

Hoping my letter will interest you, and that it is not too long, I remain, yours truly

MARY GOSNEY.

A very interesting letter, and not at all too long. Come again.

Camping in Colorado.

Dear Editor Good Cheer Corner: I came from Colorado, and am a newcomer here.

I have read the letters of the Good Cheer Corner with great interest and would like to write about one of our numerous camping trips in Colorado.

We lived in Glenwood Springs, a town of about three thousand inhabitants.

One morning, about the first of June, nineteen hundred and three, a party consisting of six started from there about four o'clock in the morning.

We were all riding horses but the cook, who was driving the wagon that contained the provisions and camp outfit.

We knew the sun would rise about six thirty and we had a hard day's ride before us, so we thought it best to travel as far as possible until then, for after it rose we could not travel very fast, for it would be too warm.

About twelve o'clock we ate our lunch, and rested awhile before we continued our journey.

Abut four o'clock we came to a forest

FACT AND COMMENT.

Wanted, common honesty in public places. This is about the longest-felt want in the world. Intelligence is also a long and acutely-felt want in public office. Sad it is, but true it is, that lack of honesty and lack of intelligence are very often twin evils in public places. Perhaps it is only because there are more subordinates than heads of departments that these twin evils are most frequently felt in subordinate places. The ratio may or may not be in favor of the fellow in the lower rounds of the ladder. Statistics are not full enough to decide.

—o—

Dishonesty Expensive.

Lack of intelligence and honesty create an awful expense bill against the public. Time was when a property owner could get an ordinary sidewalk where there was not much grading to do laid for 10 cents a square foot. Now it costs about 15 cents where the grading is light, up to 22 cents where the grading is moderately heavy. Curbs formerly cost 30 cents. Now this work runs at 35 to 40 cents. And this increased cost is largely the fruit borne of a "graft" set in by dishonest or incompetent men put in subordinate positions in the several departments of the city government. Specifications are made in the City Hall for all such work. Contractors bid on these specifications. Time was when all called for was sharp sand and gravel in certain proportions mixed with a given quantity of cement and laid in a workmanlike manner. That was the gist of the specifications. Lack of honesty on the part of some contractors made it necessary that inspectors be appointed to see that the work was properly done. It is seldom hard to get such a provision made in the City Hall. The elective officers have to have many friends or they would not be elected. These friends are often most friendly to their own interests. They want a plum out of the public pie. It is a nice job to sit on a barrel in the shade and whittle a stick at snug wages, more than the men get who do the work.

—o—

[illegible] Grafted.

[illegible] as these inspectors did their work intelligently and honestly, good sidewalks were made under these specifications. But some of the "friends" who secured the nice billet were not honest. Some were too sharp to be honest and others were too stupid to be [illegible]. The upshot, whether because of lack of intelligence or of honesty, was that so much poor work was done on the sidewalks that the specifications had to be changed. Perhaps the real estate boomers who lay out new tracts to be put on the market were too anxious to get the work done cheap, not caring how soon it went to pieces after they had unloaded on the public. The specifications call for crushed rock mixed with sharp sand in certain proportions. If gravel is used it has to be screened, the sand has to be sifted separately and then the two mixed in proper proportions. The result is higher cost for every sidewalk put down in [illegible]

—o—

Specifications Suggested.

[illegible] of the officials freely acknowledge that under the old specifications where the contractor was honest and the inspector honest and intelligent, good sidewalks were made. Those who understand the matter best think it might be well to have two series of specifications, one for the business center and the other for residence portions of the city. In the business center there is heavy traffic and it works great inconvenience where the sidewalks and curbs have to be torn up. This has to be done often enough under the most perfect system. Here the broken rock is best, because it lasts longest. But in the residence portions of the city, if the work is done honestly under the old specifications, a sidewalk will last for years. Those who have to pay for sidewalks find the present tax a heavy one. It certainly would be well to lighten the burden if it can properly be done.

—o—

[illegible] Anyway.

As to the dishonest inspector, he is a necessary evil to a certain degree. That degree ought to be reduced to a minimum. It is so easy to say that. But it is exceedingly hard to do it. The "grafter" will graft under any set of specifications that can be written. It is very lamentable that men who will put "friends" in under them, not because they are fit for the place, but often in the face of their unfitness, even in the face of unfitness because of dishonesty. We shall have to wait a long time before stupid fellows who happen to be able to make those who want office believe they control votes can be kept away from the "pie counter." It will be longer before the cunning fellow who really does control more or less votes, and who does it by dishonesty, can be kept away. There is a great deal of myth about this controlling of votes. But there is a little truth. Those who pay for sidewalks might be reconciled to high prices if they got the worth of their money. It is exasperating to pay a high price and then find that your inspector has made his graft in spite of all, and that specifications calling for high-cost work produce cheap work.

—o—

[illegible] in This.

[illegible] sent to The Times a few [illegible] needs no comment to introduce it. It explains itself. It runs as [illegible]

"Los Angeles, Oct. 3.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I have been here in this city about three weeks, a [illegible] from the East, and have seen [illegible] of your real estate firms, and [illegible] has either taken me out [illegible] southwest, as they call it, or [illegible] Heights to sell me a place for [illegible] as a speculation. Those are [illegible], no doubt, but let me ask [illegible] it is that right back of the [illegible] fifteen minutes' walk west [illegible] of your business streets, [illegible] some of your nicest lots in [illegible] that I ever saw, and [illegible] your business center, I cannot understand it that not one of your real estate agents has offered to sell or show me a lot over there. Now, I have on several mornings all by myself walked through the tunnel and around the hills, and I think there is no finer place in the city for a home than right there on those hills, and so close in, it surprises me that it is not built up more. I have only looked around and expect to leave for home in a few days, and when I come back this winter I expect to locate there on the hills and live there and do business in the city, where I can walk to and from my home to business.

—o—

The City Beautiful.

San Francisco has taken up the work for a city beautiful. Daniel H. Burnham, a landscape architect, so to speak, has paid that city a visit and has submitted plans for the beautifying of the Bay City. Most of the proposed work is inapplicable to Los Angeles for the reason that it contemplates the water views afforded by the harbor. But here is a portion of the plan directly of interest to our situation: "The Outer Boulevard has been planned to overcome the difficulties of communication caused by the rectangular street system of San Francisco, as well as to give a city a driveway of the kind found in certain cities of the Old World. It is to be a broad, dignified and continuous boulevard, skirting the water edge and completely encircling the city. Its entire length will be close to thirty miles. Several streets and parkways already in use will be incorporated in it, and it is recommended that the connecting links be built as soon as possible."

—o—

Now the Time.

The plan outlined for San Francisco for a boulevard is all-embracing, taking in the whole circuit of the city. In places the road will have to run over the tops of buildings. This is because of the great cost of obtaining rights of way on the street levels. Had San Francisco done this work forty years ago, a boulevard along the surface could have been had at small expense. Now is the time to act in Los Angeles. The time is none too soon. The San Francisco adornment is in the hands of a large committee composed of the best-known men there. They have a sub-committee of distinguished citizens who carry out the plans decided upon. Such a committee would be timely here. The Chamber of Commerce is always in the lead in such good works. Has it a committee on the City Beautiful? Has it any committee like this? If not, will it create one? There is a great deal of work ready to be done in this line. The Park Committee of the City Council should coöperate with any such committee. The parks are the spots on which to press work for the present, and any boulevard plan made now, or that may be made, will be very faulty unless it embraces the parks one after another as it encircles the city. The parks in the center should connect with the outside boulevard by short arms of sufficient width. Los Angeles will be a great city at the first quarter mark of the century. Unless the work of providing a great boulevard shall have been accomplished the cry for it then will be loud, but it will be too late to get an answer. The opportunity is here in every element for the most beautiful city under the sun. And, by the way, The Times Magazine has a new feature under the heading of "The City Beautiful."

—o—

Real Estate Commissions.

An evening paper in its real-estate department is authority for the report that real estate agents are doing business in a very improper manner. The statement is made that it is a somewhat common thing for agents to take property to sell at a net price, then get all they can above that figure and pocket the difference. It is playing with edged tools, and some one will get badly cut. He may find he is up against a buzz saw in the form of a hard-hearted court, who will regard nothing but the law and the fact. The law is very explicit about the relations of principal and agent. It recognizes the broad principle that one should get nothing for nothing, but pay for what he gets. If a dealer pays a sum of money, be it $1 or any higher sum, and takes an option in writing on a piece of property he is within the law. If he has some verbal agreement with a client to sell property at any net price and keeps all he gets above that figure, it is almost certain that the court would hold him as an embezzler, if he tried to "get away" with more than his commission. He is an agent in such a sale, and all he is entitled to is his commission. The reason is obvious. An owner gives an agent property to sell at a fixed price. The owner wishes to sell, or the property would not be on the market. If the agent is to get all above a fixed price, he may, then, if he likes, put the price so high, in his greed to get rich quick, as to prevent a sale. He is tempted to misrepresent and do all sorts of crooked work on such a basis.

—o—

Other Agents Suffer.

An agent some days ago went out to find a piece of property for a client. Another agent gave him a suitable piece at $7000. He had the sale about made when his client came back snorting at him. A third agent had offered the same piece at $6500. It took a lot of explaining for that agent to put himself right with his client. The second agent got the lot from the third one and tried to make $500 out of the crowd. There is only one right way to sell property on commission, that is on commission. Whatever the property sells for belongs to the owner, less the regular commission. If a dealer wants to make more than that let him put up a substantial consideration and get an option for a specified time. Then he may ask what he thinks wise, and if he asks too much and fails to make ends meet, he loses his money paid for the option, which goes to the owner to compensate for tying up the property.

BEAUTIFUL HOLLYWOOD.

Three Charming Homes Under Shadows of Lofty Hills and Beautiful With Foliage and Bloom.

The picture is one of rare beauty, yet fails to convey more than a hint of what it represents. The vine-clad house of Mrs. E. G. Waldon has been built only about three years. When work was begun on this pretty home the land had been used for ordinary farming purposes. It is now decked with ivy reaching to the chimney-top. The entrance is a pretty shaded porch, delightful on a warm day when the south side is all aglow with sunlight. From this entrance the view looks right up to the mountains a mile or two away on which the lights and shadows play hide and seek from sunrise to sunset, and softer, more specter-like when the moon looks down on this scene, not surpassed in the circuit of the globe.

On the same corner of the street is the home of Sanford Rich, built later than its neighbor. But see how the Bouganvillea has climbed to the very chimney-pot and covered the whole side of the house in splendid color. It is all a matter of sun and soil. The life-giving beams of the sun are not wanting there fifteen days out of the year, and the soil is as rich twenty-five feet down as at the surface.

The mission style house is for the home of E. D. Sturtevant. He is a newcomer. Nearly twenty years ago he selected this sunny hill for his home. He made there a triangular lake and proceeded to grow the lotus flower sacred in Egypt from immemorial ages, pond lilies of every shape and hue, and the giant Victoria regia from the low banks of the tropical Amazon River. These flowers are as large as a plate, as crimson as sin, or as small as a snowflake and as spotless white, too. He has one called the snowflake and right closely it resembles a December product when the skies are cold enough. But these tiny products of the pond revel in semi-tropical sunlight and heat.

Mr. Sturtevant is producing here an ideal suburban home. The plaster is a new thing in building, called Roman plaster, made of ground marble and linseed oil. It is elastic, lasting, needs no painting, and is a quiet gray shade, grateful to the eye. The inside is very artistic, but not a point sacrificed from comfort. The great granite mantel in the living room is a very pleasing feature, and it is fitted with a patent grate which combines a furnace to serve the whole house with heat. The view from this point on Franklin avenue right down to the mountains is very beautiful, stretching over the whole Hollywood plane away to the city and also to the sea.

A BEAUTIFUL HOME.
A BEAUTIFUL HOME.

On Beacon street, on a beautiful east-front lot, 70x160. This magnificent home is in one of the most aristocratic locations in the city, surrounded by beautiful homes. Large, cheerful rooms throughout the house; entire lower floor in solid oak finish; beautiful parlor, commodious living-room (21x18,) elegant reception hall, with beamed ceilings (25x17;) large dining-room, paneled walls (22x16.) There is a beautiful mantel in each of foregoing rooms, each by itself being a work of art, artistic wall and ceiling decorations, large, well arranged kitchen with large pantry and cold-storage room. The upstairs is finished on the same magnificent plan as the lower floor; large room on third floor can be used as gymnasium, children's playroom and billiard room, large basement with furnace, automatic hot water heater, fuel room, storeroom, wineroom, etc. This house was built by the owner of his home, and expense was not thought of in making it one of the best-built structures in the city. Owner has retired from business, and is going to travel for several years, and has authorized us to sell this beautiful home.

FOR SALE—3424 GLEN ALBYN DRIVE, 5-room cottage, modern and well built; the rooms are large and well lighted, the bedrooms having the sun all day. The lot is large, being about 50x300 feet, facing on two streets. This fine home is situated on the hills west of Highland Park, about a block and a half from the University-Garvanza car line, giving a service of less than 20 minutes to the center of town. A fine view of the town and surrounding mountains can be had and the location is such that it cannot be shut off by other buildings. The air is always clear and fresh, there being hardly any fog and no smoke or dust. I will sell for cash or make very easy terms to party making small cash payment. This property must be looked over to be appreciated. Take University-Garvanza car to Anabel st. and go up hill to the white house on the top. This is absolutely the best bargain in that part of town. 8

FINE RESIDENCE ON CORNER LOT. ONE BLOCK FROM ADAMS ST.

A beautiful eight-room modern house on large lot, nice lawn and flowers; large reception hall with beamed ceilings, and artistic arches opening into dining and drawing-room; dining-room paneled and finished in Flemish, with elegant built-in buffet; drawing-room handsomely decorated, massive pressed brick fireplace with heavy wrought iron andirons; very cosy den in the rear of the drawing-room. All these rooms have electric polished maple floors and the most expensive hammered brass combination lighting fixtures.

The staircase is mission finish, very attractive in design, with large landing and window seat half way up. Bedrooms are extra large, finished in white enamel, with large closets lined inside with cedar; fine large bathroom, as large as a bedroom in an ordinary house, with door leading out to sun porch.

There is a large hall upstairs equipped with built-in linen press and other conveniences. From one of the large front bedrooms there is a door leading out onto a narrow Spanish-style balcony that is all inclosed with clinker brick side walls and arches.

There is room on the third story for a large billiard room or two bedrooms. The basement is of brick and cement with furnace and gas water heater, which furnishes hot water for the whole house.

This house was built for a home by the present owners and owing to illness they are compelled to dispose of it for very much less than cost. This place is very cheap and just the thing for a conservative buyer.

WESTLAKE DISTRICT.

Beautifully situated nine-room new and modern residence, located in one of our nicest residence sections. There are five chambers upstairs with an elegant bathroom; all woodwork downstairs has mahogany finish, hardwood floors and finest of decorating; large reception hall with pressed brick fireplace; dining-room has handsome built-in buffet. There is also a fine drawing-room and den artistically finished and decorated.

Large basement with furnace; large lot, 60x155. Conservative homeseekers and investors, investigate this.

CITY RESIDENCES THAT ARE DESIRABLE HOMES, AND SUBSTANTIAL INVESTMENTS.

We don't believe we have ever published a more attractive list of fine city residences than those included in the list below; now is the TIME to buy for investment. Look over the descriptions. Notice the special features.

VERY PRETTY BUNGALOW.

DINING-ROOM IS PARTICULARLY ATTRACTIVE.

One of the daintiest 6-room bungalows in Los Angeles; description of the dining-room follows:

Five-foot paneling; attractive plate rail, beamed ceilings, quarter-sawed oak floors, beautiful plate-glass window, 5x6; casement windows; built-in seats, attractive buffet with leaded art glass; mission-style mantel also in this apartment; antique oak woodwork, hand finished; few houses contain a more delightful dining-room.

House is situated on a fine large lot, only 1 block from Adams st.; street 80 feet wide and finely shaded; house is surrounded by elegant homes; has 6 rooms, fine reception hall, modern bath; first story has oak floors; beautifully polished floors in bedrooms; artistic lighting fixtures; screen porch; large kitchen laundry; house well lighted by numerous large windows; lot 50x150 to an alley; a fine opportunity for profitable investment.

NO BETTER BUNGALOW IN WESTLAKE FOR THE MONEY.

IDEAL LIVING-ROOM.

This handsome bungalow has the cosiest living-room imaginable; it extends across the whole front of the house; has 6 large windows, affording plenty of light; quarter-sawed oak floors, waxed and polished; beamed ceilings; walls paneled up 5 feet; piano finished woodwork; mantel built of old-gold bricks; open fireplace; attractive lighting fixtures. This living-room will appeal at sight to a woman's artistic sense. We want you to see it.

The house is desirably located in a fine section of the Westlake district; lot 50x150 to an alley; 7 cheerful rooms; pretty reception hall; quarter-sawed oak floors; large dining-room; built-in buffet; plate rail; large closets; 2 toilets; commodious laundry; fine cement work; auto barn; this house is offered at a price considerably below its actual value. Come and see us if you are interested. Glad to show you the property at once.

LOW PRICED, WELL LOCATED, MISSION RESIDENCE.

HAS BEAUTIFUL RECEPTION HALL.

Few houses contain a prettier reception hall than the one included in this beautiful mission residence; quarter-sawed oak woodwork; attractive winding staircase; built-in seats; beveled glass side lights; handsome door with beveled art glass; quarter-sawed oak floors; large closet under staircase; large window at stair landing; what is more desirable in a home than a really attractive reception hall? You'll find this room a model of beauty.

The house is built in the characteristic mission style; situated on a well-elevated corner; 9 large rooms, 2 baths; paneled walls; casement windows; kitchen is well arranged; handsome lighting fixtures; 5 bedrooms; waxed hard-wood floors; cold type can't properly convince you of the merits of this house. You ought to visit the place. As an investment we know of nothing better.

NO INVESTMENT MORE PROFITABLE THAN WESTLAKE RESIDENCES.

HANDSOME LIVING-ROOM IN THIS HOME.

We will describe the living-room and den of this residence in detail, and describe the rest of the house in a general way. The two rooms are connected by a handsome archway; heavy beamed ceilings; hardwood floors; beautiful old-gold brick mantel with low fireplace; living-room attractively paneled; 2 handsome plate-glass windows in this room; comfortable built-in seats, book-cases; fine center and side lighting fixtures; these two rooms alone will make you feel like buying this superb home.

House contains 9 rooms; is located on 60x143½ lot; house was built by skilled workmen; reception hall is very attractive; dining-room is well located, light and cheerful and is beamed and paneled; plate rail and built-in buffet; well equipped kitchen and pantries; basement and furnace-room; 4 bed chambers with stationary lavatories; hot and cold water system; large closets; modern bath; 3 porches; lighting fixtures of special design; auto barn, carriage-room and box stall; $850 worth of cement work on the premises; we are authorized to quote a special low price on this worthy property; why not look at the property? See us as early as possible.

HIGHLY ATTRACTIVE DINING-ROOM IN THIS FINE RESIDENCE.

Description of this beautiful room is as follows: Room is extra large; has artistic mantel of quarter-sawed oak, with beveled mirror; colonial pillars guard this fine mantel on either side; carved lions' heads at top; artistic buffet built of quarter-sawed oak; sides of the room handsomely paneled with pressed leather, which extends to the plate rail; quartered-oak floors; novel lighting fixtures; imposing dome in center of ceiling; side lights also adorn the room. The large east windows render this apartment a most attractive living-room.

The house contains 10 spacious rooms; parlor finished in birds-eye maple; open fireplace in living-room; music room; comfortable bedrooms, modern bath; numerous closets; beautiful grounds; broad walks, driveways; fine stable accommodations. Lot is 100x140. House is located in a fashionable district in the beautiful southwest section of the city. The price is moderate and is consistent with the numerous costly improvements.

FOR SALE— Houses.

FOR SALE—HOUSES.
WE HAVE TALKED
a great deal during the past four years about home building, and during that time we have convinced a great many wide awake people that our plan of building houses is just about the proper thing.

NEVERTHELESS
there are a few remaining who have not heard of us, and of the thoroughly modern houses that we design and build.

It seems to us that our plan once explained to you would immediately appeal to you. We will build for cash after plans and specifications that you furnish, or better still, if you will come to the office and tell us what you want, the number of rooms, etc., we will guarantee to get you out one of the neatest and best arranged plans for a home that you have seen, and we will write the specifications to meet the requirements and furnish the entire cost of the house, if you want it, and you can repay us as you see fit. We charge nothing for the plans and specifications.

Come in and see us and let us convince you that in Los Angeles our houses are in demand.

BOTH PHONES 29.

THERE ARE SPLENDID HOUSES, WELL LOCATED IN THE BEST PART OF THE SOUTHWEST. IF YOU SEE THEM, YOU WILL BE CONVINCED THERE IS NOTHING SO GOOD FOR SALE IN THE CITY.

$3250.

$800 cash, and $30 per mo. and interest. This, we confidently believe, is the most charming home of 5 rooms to be found in the city. Lot 50x131, a north front, pretty neighborhood, southwest; large rooms, oak floors, latest built-in appointments, rich finish; new and a beauty.

$3750.

$750 cash, and $25 per month and interest. We have not been able to build these elegant semi-bungalow cottages of 6 rooms fast enough to supply the demand. Every one is different. Large lot, generous rooms, oak floors, Flemish oak finish, outside chimney, all built-in appointments complete, deep veranda, large bedrooms and good bath. It is a poem of cosy simplicity.

$4250.

This handsome 7-room home is on Dalton ave., near Adams st., an east front, the lot is 50x150 to alley, with lawn, fences, flowers, etc.; pretty veranda and front and rear balconies; hardwood floors below stairs with diamond inlaid borders; charming reception hall, cosy den with large brick mantel and built-in seats and bookcases; very generous parlor and dining-room; 3 large sleeping-rooms and large bath; all full height. This property is worth $4750.

$4750.

$1000 cash, and $35 per month. This is a large, attractive 7-room home in a quiet southwest neighborhood. There are few handsomer roof plans in the city. Below stairs are 4 rooms with large reception hall, opening on wide veranda; oak floors throughout below stairs; expensive fixtures; elegant buffet, mantel in library, which also has a unique corner seat built in; pass pantry, very complete kitchen and basement. The three sleeping-rooms are especially large with many closets.

$5000.

$1000 cash, and $35 per month. Here is one of those altogether charming 8-room homes with sweeping gables, wide veranda, balconies, etc., etc., which add so much to the beauty of our city. It sits on corner lot, 50x121 ft., southwest, in fine neighborhood; above stairs are 4 handsome sleeping-rooms, one with large alcove; large bath and roomy closets; combination stairs, oak floors, all built-in appointments, basement and furnace pipes; large mantel with outside chimney.

$8500.

Here is a splendid home for someone who appreciates wide, beautiful grounds. The location is on Arapahoe st. at its highest point, and the lot is 67½ ft. frontage, with retaining wall, drive, rose arbor and abundance of fruit and flowers. The residence is strikingly beautiful, imposing, and contains 7 very large rooms, large veranda, immense rear balcony; bath like an eighth room, basement under entire house, furnace, large inglenook, etc., etc. One of the completest homes in the city. The actual cost was $4000 and the grounds would be cheap at $3250. Fine barn and carriage house in the rear.

$7500.

Large, artistic home of 10 beautiful rooms, located near Palm Place, among all-two-story surroundings; very large drawing-room, large library and dining-room, very complete kitchen and pantries; basement, furnace, set tub, large barn; above stairs are 4 fine bedrooms, and in attic servant's room and large billiard-room finished. This is splendid property, little more than a year old, completely modern, beautifully finished throughout and fitted with handsome fixtures and all built-in appointments.

$11,500.

Splendid commodious 12-room residence of three full stories at this sacrifice figure. The lot is 75x175 on the high ground, with wide mountain view, fine grounds, well improved, and large barn. House is elegantly arranged for entertainment. The enrance is to a spacious hall, with very large dining-room on the left, fine drawing-room and roomy library on the right; den on the rear. The second floor has 4 large sleeping-rooms, and the third floor 3, all spacious and airy, with many windows; all woodwork is carefully done, with much paneling, and built-in appointments. This property would be cheap at $2000 more than is asked.

—$12,000—

A 9-room mansion on Burlington near [illegible]. The lot is 50x150. This is a very beautiful home and to see it is to make an offer for it. This location speaks for itself. [illegible]

—$9000—

This is a 10-room, 2-story residence, on Wilton ave., near 16th st. The lot is a very large one, 74x178. The large and roomy bedrooms and hallways upstairs are finished in white enamel, the floors are hardwood, and the house is arranged to suit the most elaborate taste. This is a brand new, strictly modern, and in every way an up-to-date residence property and can be purchased for half cash, balance long terms. This is certainly a rich house at a cheap price.

—$10,000—

We can deliver for this week a 9-room, 2-story, furnace-heated house in Wilton Place, near 10th st. car line. This has a beautiful lawn and mammoth back yard, the lot 74x178. This is one of the swellest houses in the Nevin tract. It has just been completed. The interior is finished beautifully with white enamel upstairs, and dark [illegible] downstairs. The floors are all finely [illegible] hardwood, and the arrangement of the house is the result of most careful and thoughtful study of architecture. If you want something good and you are awfully hard to please, we shall take a pride in showing you this property, because to see it is to buy it.

—$9000—

We are going to make a special price of [illegible] on our beautiful W. Adams st. home. This home has 11 large rooms, beautifully finished and tinted walls, coved ceilings, built-in [illegible], gas and electricity; in fact, just what an Adams-st. home ought to be, and the lot is large, too, 50x150. There is a nice sun parlor, and, best of all, a cement basement [illegible] cool place for your servants to do their work in the hot weather. The comfort of its occupants is also well attended to in winter time by a furnace, which keeps the temperature of the house just right. We want to show you this house and YOU want [illegible]

—$8000—

[illegible] say "it cannot be true," be[illegible] it true. Yes, sir, this magnificent absolutely modern house on Rampart [illegible] Seventh st., finished in Flemish oak, [illegible] to you if you look at the house. The lot alone is almost worth the [illegible] for the house and lot.

—$9000—

[illegible] 2-story, absolutely new and modern home, on beautiful Westlake [illegible] Fifth st., on a lot, 50x155, for only [illegible]

—$13,000—

[illegible] man pays as much as $13,000 for a [illegible] wants to get a good house, doesn't [illegible] our endeavor to supply that want [illegible] think we can do it with a 12-room, [illegible] house on S. Burlington near Seventh [illegible] lot 50x140. This 12-room residence [illegible] bedrooms, is absolutely modern; hardwood [illegible] built-in buffet, fireplace and everything you would expect to get in a beautiful [illegible] for $13,000. We want to show you [illegible]

—$6000—

[illegible] want to buy something "dead swell" [illegible] pay $6000 for it, let us show you this [illegible] on Thompson st., which is only [illegible] Adams st., and only 1 block from [illegible] St. James Park. This is a new and [illegible] residence, finished in Flemish oak and [illegible] floors. A large press-brick mantel [illegible] of the features of this house. The [illegible] exquisitely tinted and the arrange[illegible] all its appointments are convenient. [illegible] lot is large, being 50x180 to a 20-[illegible]. There are 12 fruit trees in the [illegible] and nicely fenced chicken yard. [illegible] is well set back from the street [illegible] beautiful lawn and many flowers, adding [illegible] its attractiveness.

—$8000—

[illegible] house on Hobart blvd. near Washington, on a lot 55x162, is a bargain awaiting [illegible] who wants a very swell house at a [illegible] price, in a very good neighborhood.

—$6000—

[illegible] think of only paying $6000 for a beautiful [illegible] residence, finished in redwood, [illegible] beautiful lawn and a fine two-story [illegible] in the rear, and you only have to pay [illegible] down, balance on terms to suit. [illegible] home is on W. Fourth st. [illegible] very well located. There is a joint [illegible] which adds to the value of the [illegible] house has sewer connections, two [illegible] and excellent plumbing.

This is absolutely one of the best buys in Los Angeles. A magnificent and palatial 13-room residence in fashionable St. Andrews Place finished in the most magnificent style. $1000 improvements have been lately put in the kitchen and the floors are all of polished hard wood. The fixtures are all of the very best and the arrangement is most convenient. The house is furnace heated and it contains 8 large airy bedrooms. This house is absolutely new and modern; it has never been lived in. It is worth every penny we ask for it and many more. You will never be able to sleep well after seeing this house if you do not buy it at this price.

SNAPS IN BUNGALOWS.

We have a great many very swell bungalows that can be purchased on reasonable terms, viz: $300 to $500 down and balance on rental payments. Space will not permit of our elaborating upon the several bargains we can deliver, but if you will call at our office any time during the week we will try to please you in style of bungalow, price, location and terms.

DO NOT BUY A HOME UNTIL YOU HAVE SEEN SOME OF THE BARGAINS WE HAVE TO OFFER. CALL AND SEE IF WE HAVE JUST WHAT YOU WANT, AND REMEMBER THAT SPACE PERMITS OF OUR INFORMING THE PUBLIC OF ONLY A FEW OF THE MANY GOOD THINGS WE HAVE.

In Original Sunnyside, every pleasing feature of situation, view, water, soil, transportation and modern improvements is embodied. No purchaser can make a mistake buying in this ideal tract. Every contemplated improvement tends to higher and better values. The electric car service is being rapidly improved since Mr. Huntington's purchase. There will be double tracks on the Redondo Electric line via Gardena, which passes the property. The time, which is not more than 25 minutes now, will be materially reduced and the facilities increased. The building in that section is steady and of a substantial character. There are stores and schools near, and, in fact, residents there have every advantage of the city added to the charms of suburban life.

FOR SALE—
"A STRAIGHT TALK."

Several times we have advertised the northwest corner of Boylston and West Fourth sts., 100x116, for $6000. We have stated in these ads. that after Oct. 10 the price would go to $7500; therefore this is your last chance on this beautiful corner, for $6000; this being the case, let us call your attention to a few FACTS which will surely make this one of the most valuable CLOSE-IN CORNERS ON THE HILL. In the first place, Klondike Hill which faces this corner and greatly obstructs the city view, IS COMING DOWN to street level. Second, the 80-foot tunnel through Fourth street to Flower is a NECESSITY and almost sure to be built. Third, the Third-street car line is within 200 feet of the corner; the Sixth-street line now built to corner of Sixth and Boylston will SOON be in operation. Fourth, Boylston, which is to be changed to St. Paul avenue, is an 80-foot street, and will make one of the finest boulevards in the city. Take these things into consideration; also the fine view of city from this corner, and you will agree with us that the price, $60 per foot, is RIDICULOUSLY low. Compare it with anything offered SO CLOSE IN. KEEP this ad. for reference in two years from date.

FOR SALE—
ROWLAND HEIGHTS.
40 lots of the Rowland Heights tract are now on the market, the remaining hundred we expect to have ready within 60 days.
This tract is situated on Sunset blvd., 4 blocks west of Echo Park.
Anyone having a preference for hill property, with as beautiful an outlook as there is from any lot in the city, should see this property before buying anywhere.
We have so graded this tract that our purchasers can reach lots by an 8-per-cent. grade, from which you can see Hollywood, the mountains and the ocean.
Our building restrictions are rigid. We are not selling this property through agents, th s enabling us to come in contact with every purchaser so that we may satisfy ourselves he is a person we want in our tract. By taking these and many other precautions we hope to make Rowland Heights one of the most attractive subdivisions on Sunset blvd.
Buy where you can get good drainage, good air and a beautiful view.

FOR SALE—
—$41,000—
7 PER CENT. NET.

82 feet, substantially improved, on the south side of Aliso st., between Los Angeles and Alameda sts.; average depth of lot 165 feet; nearly 15,000 square feet, entirely covered with 2-story brick building, massively and expensively constructed for wholesale or warehouse purposes, two freight elevators; building can be divided and leased to 2 tenants.

Improvements could not be reproduced for $35,000, and are as good as new; property rents for $300 per month; will pay 7 per cent. net on investment.

This property will sell for a big advance over present price as soon as San Pedro st. is cut through to Aliso street. Property will be within 50 feet of San Pedro st., when street work is completed.

This is a good conservative investment, pays an exceptionally good rate of interest and will get better every year.

If you want something good, let us show you this; we can deliver the property. Agents who have clients for this class of property will receive proper compensation for making sale.

MANUFACTURING.
—$10,000—

Here is absolutely the cheapest piece of property in the city of Los Angeles for warehouse or manufacturing purposes.

17 lots, 40x140 to 20-foot alley, (which can be closed) being 300 feet on Tenth st.; 268 feet on 11th street, and over 300 feet on Santa Fe right of way; over 100,000 square feet in property; we can deliver this property for a few days for $10,000, which is less than 10c per square foot, or less than $15 per front foot, for the 10th and 11th-st. frontages.

This property is in one of the finest locations in the city; 300 feet front, 9th and 500 on Santa Fe avenue, both of which are 80-ft. streets, and being paved, making an easy and short run into the business center of the city.

This property will sell for $20,000 before one year and can be leased at once to pay interest on that sum. This is the last opportunity you will have to get such excellent property below its actual value.

Let us take you down and show you the property and convince you that it is all and more than we have claimed for it.

Agents get busy. We can deliver the property and pay for making a sale.

Another hill opportunity.
West 2nd st., two fine strictly modern houses. One is of unique design as flats; 12 rooms, handsome ground floor, verandas and reception rooms; paneling in burlap and moulding; hall seats, oak floors, cove ceilings, fine tinting, elaborate plumbing, two instantaneous heaters, two gas ranges, four beautiful mantels, six bay windows, two large plastered half basements, four enameled laundry tubs, screen porches, expensive retaining walls; everything new and convenient.
The other house contains eight rooms, reception hall, bath and two toilets; instantaneous heater, gas and electricity, cove ceilings, three bay windows, veranda and retaining walls. These two properties are on a fine double lot, 80x120 feet. As a whole, for a short time, we can deliver them at $14,000, with reasonable terms. Call and let us show them.

Here is an opportunity for $5000 profit immediately. A double frontage of 186½ feet on the two most popular streets in the Westlake district; cement walks and stone retaining walls, beautiful trees and shrubbery, substantial, modern, 7-room house, with large basement, large barn, lawn, flowers. This property has an average depth of 200 feet, and can be divided into eight fine lots, which will readily sell at from $3000 to $3500 each; price $21,500. Reasonable terms.

You know 7th street, the best near-in cross street in the city. For a short time we can deliver 55x130 feet, close in, on W. 7th st., improved with elegant flat building, consisting of 20 living-rooms; strictly modern, always rented. Flats built 18 months ago at a cost of more than $7000. Property in this vicinity firm at $250 per front foot. Seventh street soon to be paved; then prices advance. Act quickly if you want a bargain; $15,000; terms.

Towne avenue, near Fourth st., 50x110 ft., 15-ft. alley on side. Property in this block $500 per front foot. Improvements nominal. Price $10,000; terms.

Temple st., shaped as a large T, 50 feet on Temple, depth 150 feet, 45½ feet on a fine hill street, depth 198½ feet to another street about to be cut through. The side of this lot is on a 20-foot court or alley at the edge of the hill, thus giving a total frontage of 297 feet; a well-built 10-room house and large barn on property; within three blocks of Courthouse. This section has been overlooked. The new postoffice is to be only four blocks away. We can deliver this at an amazingly low figure; must be sold.

Close-in corner on W. 11th st., 55x63 ft. frontage. Improved with fine mission style building almost new; 8 apartments in all; each containing instantaneous heater, porcelain bath, bowl, etc. Best construction and open nickel plumbing. Pays 12 per cent. Our option soon expires, then owner will not deliver at this figure; $15,500. Terms.

FOR SALE—
BUSINESS PROPERTY.
The N. W. corner of 16th and Georgia sts., 125 ft. front on 16th, 100 feet on Georgia and 100 feet on Delong. There is a good income from 3 houses and a fine vacant corner at the transfer point. There is something doing on 16th, and this double corner is the cream of the situation; it is well worth $200 per front foot, or $25,000, but for a short time we can deliver it for only $20,000, and it takes but $8000 cash to handle it.
S. K. LINDLEY & SON, sole agents,
8 700 H. W. Hellman Bldg.

FOR SALE—
"IT PAYS TO SEE US."
We are all sold out of unimproved property on Central avenue, having sold over $76,000 worth in ten days.
We have one piece, improved with brick building, well rented, which we can deliver $10 a foot less than vacant lots adjoining on either side, and the building thrown in. It will pay now 8 per cent on the price.

FOR SALE—
MAIN STREET,
BETWEEN NINTH AND TENTH.
West side, running to alley.
$1500 per foot.
Broadway frontage in same block is held at $2000.
I consider Main st. here a good deal better than the same block on Broadway.
REASONS:
Main st., between Ninth and Tenth, gets all the traffic, going and coming, of both Spring and Main sts.
It is like the confluence of two mighty streams.
The proof of the pudding is in the eating.
Stores in this block on Main st. and on the east side at that, rent readily at $1000 per month.
Stores on Broadway in this block rent with difficulty, if at all.
I own 122 feet on the northwest corner of 10th and Main.
I will sell off part of it and will build at once on the remaining corner.
M. LISSNER,
8 322 Douglas Bldg.

PERSONAL—

MRS. MASSON,
the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at her offices, 322 S. SPRING ST., (Suite 17,)
by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND RELIABLE HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

These readings will assist you in the struggle for recognition by teaching you your possibilities and limitations; save you years of fruitless struggles in the wrong vocation by pointing out the line of work you are best fitted for, and LEAD YOU TO WEALTH THROUGH INFORMATION AS TO INVESTMENTS AND ENTERPRISES QUITE UNOBTAINABLE THROUGH OTHER SOURCES.

Change of business, losses and gains, lawsuits, deaths, marriages, separations, and in fact all that life holds for you is plainly written in your hand; it is simply a question of correct interpretation.

Mrs. Masson's methods of hand-reading do not require that the names of her patrons shall be disclosed, nor does she seek to discover the identity of her clients; they may, therefore, rest assured that no publicity whatever attends upon her readings, and that their confidence will be maintained inviolate.

HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.
(Daily and evenings; Sundays, 9 to 3.) 8

PERSONAL—AAA.

MME. LE PIERRO.

Scientific palmist and psychic life reader; born with double veil; may be consulted on all affairs; all hidden mystery revealed; she will show how to overcome your enemies and unite the separated; tells your entire life. Self-knowledge is the key to success—the most valuable life acquisition. Nothing else can bestow as much happiness or prevent as much failure in life. Every man and woman should have their life read, as most all bad luck and poverty arises from persons remaining in the wrong business, while good luck comes if we work at what we are best adapted to do. Everybody is good for something, yet how many make life a failure just because the right man does not find the right place. Do you want to understand your own character? Go to the renowned Mme. Le Pierro. She will tell you just what are your faults, your excellences, what business to follow, the proper person to marry, and how to find the right companion much easier and sooner. I will tell you whether fitted for a doctor, preacher or the law, how from your faults you may be freed, and in what trade or business you may succeed. Also advice as to health and marriage adaptation.

PERSONAL — HAVE YOUR HANDS HONestly read and the many future events of your life accurately prognosticated by the celebrated, skillful, SCIENTIFIC PALMIST, acknowledged by hundreds of the best intellects—his patrons, as the finest and most remarkable reader of hands in this country, and pronounced superior to Cheiro.

PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE,

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S readings, which are thorough and scientific, have nothing in common whatever with the fictitious readings of illiterate humbug palmists, life readers, psychics, fortune tellers, etc., who scarcely know one line or mount from the other. A satisfactory reading can only be had from one who has thoroughly mastered the laws of this wonderful science through years of critical study, with large experience, trained judgment, etc.

With astonishing accuracy health defects are pointed out. Careful advice given in domestic, love affairs, etc.; also of financial success or failure, changes, deaths, investments, vocation in life, and many other important things you should know.

PROF. ALTHOUSE stands at the very head of his profession, having read the hands of more celebrated persons—distinguished people all over the world—than any other palmist in this country. E. H. Sothern says: "I find your reading coincides with Cheiro's." And, "I am greatly interested in scientific palmistry." Paul Gilmore, actor, says: "I want to express to you my keen appreciation of your reading; it is by far the most scientific I have ever had." Juliet Crosby, actress, says: "Prof. Althouse has given me a most helpful, complete and satisfactory reading." Tod Sloan (famous jockey,) formerly read by Cheiro, says: "Your (Prof. Althouse's) reading is the most complete I have ever had, and can say for your work that it is wonderful." Burton Holmes, formerly read by Cheiro, says: "Your (Prof. Althouse's) reading is the most interesting I have yet had." G. A. Hall, shipping merchant, says: "The reading you gave me was a very valuable one." Also read the hands of Admiral Schley, Senators Clark and Pettigrew, Gov. Pardee, Baron Rothschild, Ysaye, Fritz Kreisler, Susan B. Anthony, Rev. Anna H. Shaw, Sousa, Innes, Kryl, Creatore, Chiaffarelli, Modjeska, Marlowe, Caruso, Sembrich, Gadski, Warde, Kidder, Jefferson, Edison, Hobson, Wilton Lackaye, Jane Oker, Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott, Anna Held, Wm. Desmond and hundreds of others. ALL READINGS ARE STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL.

ASTROLOGY AND THE HOROSCOPE.

PROF. ALTHOUSE has also given many years of careful study to, and is an experienced practitioner in, the science of astrology, having had MUCH EXPERIENCE IN THE CASTING OF HOROSCOPES—on which he gives expert judgment. The events of our lives are brought about by fixed planetary laws—through the influence of the planets, which stamp our lives at birth, and indicating exactly what the future has in store for us; therefore every person should have a delineated horoscope.

THE HOROSCOPE is decidedly a GUIDE IN LIFE, and shows remarkable—almost incredible things, when properly cast, as it tells all about diseases, finances, love and the marriage partner, etc., children, changes of all kinds, deaths, talents, and many other important things which cannot be mentioned here—in fact, tells everything about one's self worth knowing, being in truth, one of the best investments the world offers. YOUR HOROSCOPE is also a key to the character of OTHERS, and in this respect can be of the utmost use to you.

Scientific predictions—embracing ALL QUESTIONS OF LIFE—new undertakings—or information desired—for the present, immediate future and events up to the close of life, made by this science—WILL STAGGER THE SENSES. Mail orders promptly attended to.

PROF. ALTHOUSE, in his large and successful practice, has acquired a very varied experience of the anxieties, struggles, etc., of his fellow-men in life. HIS WONDERFUL PROFICIENCY IN HAND READING AND CASTING OF HOROSCOPES enables him to see for the future, both the good and evil. THE MOST PRIVATE CONFIDENCES ARE REPOSED IN HIM, AND HIS ADVICE IS SOUGHT IN THE MOST DIFFICULT AND CRITICAL CIRCUMSTANCES.

Daily and evenings, Sunday 11 to 3.
8 STUDIO, 432 S. BROADWAY.

PERSONAL—MARVELOUS REVELATIONS. Wonderful psychic reader and soothsayer. She calls your full name, she answers sealed questions. Visit her and be convinced. Sigma is the greatest exponent of occult arts who has ever visited this city, and a visit will repay you many times over. Her wonderful gifts and powers have astounded thousands of people both in America and European and Asiatic countries, and she comes to you armed with guaranteed testimonials from all parts of the country. Her knowledge of the past will convince you that she cannot be wrong in regard to the future. She is not an ignorant pretender, but an educated and refined lady who receives her callers with an innate courtesy born of the Orient, which is her native element. She is an adept in the science of palmistry, foretells the future from the cards and reads the stars like a book. She is here to benefit and help you; if you need her advice you can visit her without fear of imposition. DO YOU WANT BUSINESS IN BUSTLING, GROWING LOS ANGELES?

We handle only approved and audited propositions. They are really "Business certainties instead of "Business Chances."

If you are "from Missouri" we can show you and we handle no "junk."

Our investment department carefully inspects every proposition before presenting it to our clients, and it must be high-grade.

We have many good openings for investments or partnerships in retail, wholesale or manufacturing plants, with or without services.

We refer to any bank, commercial agency or business house in Los Angeles.

IS YOUR BUSINESS FOR SALE?

Do you want a partner?

Have you a dividend stock to market?

Have you a good lease to dispose of?

We have the clients all the time who are looking for guaranteed investments. If your proposition is right and will stand our investigation, we can sell it.

Call on our investment department and call at once. List whatever you have for sale that is square. We will do the rest.

We don't handle laundry routes, cigar stands, second-hand stores or small restaurants, only select and selected investments.

"If we present it, it is right."

"Opportunity, Master of Human Destinies, Am I."

If you want to get into a good-paying business at a minimum investment, I can serve you to advantage. Everything in the following list has been subjected to the Pollock system of severe personal investigation. Every one will be found to be a bona fide BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY. Come and see me as early as possible if you find something that looks especially good to you.

$4000 BUYS FINE MFG. BUSINESS.

A hustler at the head of this business will simply coin money. Sales the past year amounted to $6000. Assets $35,000. You may find it profitable to look into this bright little proposition. Net profit for the year was $1900—think of it.

BIG-PAYING MFG. BUSINESS—$10,000.

Concern is now doing business of $1000 a month, with net profit of $300. Established 17 years. The man of energy and ability can make a big fortune in this business. It's certainly worth a careful investigation—and will stand all you can give it. Let me tell you more about it.

$15,000—½ INTEREST IN FINE BUSINESS.

The man with $15,000 to invest will find it to his financial advantage to snap up this money-maker. Nothing can equal it in Los Angeles for the money. Buyer will have entire control of all receipts and disbursements. Have gone carefully into all the details.

PROFIT-MAKING GROCERY—$2000.

An interesting bargain this. Store is located in a prosperous suburb; building is new; 3 years' lease; rent only $25. Store includes hardware stock. Daily business of $50 in the dullest season. Capable of extensive development. All details at my office.

$2500—MEN'S FURNISHINGS.

Business will be sold at inventory. Doing nice, profitable business. The right man will make big dividends on this small investment.

FINE GROCERY AT $3000.

This store enjoys a good healthy trade and has practically no competition. Will be sold at inventory. Anyone familiar with the grocery business can make good profits with this store. A better value never was offered for $3000.

$3000 FOR THIS GROCERY.

This price covers a two-story building and a well-selected grocery stock—also horse, wagon, harness, wood and hay. The price quoted is for cash only. A fine chance to make a substantial income.

MONEY-MAKING CIGAR STAND.

Well-stocked stand in a good location. Present income $150 per month—good opportunity to make more. Very low rent. Can be purchased for considerably less than its actual value.

$14,000 BUYS ½ HARDWARE STOCK.

Substantial incorporated company. Business clears $20,000 yearly. Has been established for many years. Half the stock may be purchased for from $12,000 to $14,000—value based on inventory. I have never listed a better investment opportunity at this price. Will be glad to furnish you with all details.

$7000—HARDWARE OPPORTUNITY.

Fine selected stock. Daily sales from $25 to $30. Low rent on a 3-years' lease. Something really worth investigating. Can strongly recommend this opportunity.

$7000—MFG. BUSINESS.

Only $3000 cash is necessary to secure this thriving business, remaining $4000 payable in 13 months. Business now nets $350 monthly profit.

GROCERY CHANCE—$3000.

An unusual opportunity; store is just outside of the city; price includes 2-story building on lot 50x150; fine stock and horse and wagon.

$2000—FURNITURE STORE.

Furniture and house furnishing goods. Will inventory at $2500. Sales amount to $650 to $800 per month; rent $35. Ill-health compels owner to retire. An opportune buy.

PROFITABLE GROCERY—$3500.

A well-established store, doing monthly business of $2500. Very low rent. Business forging ahead. Owner is going East and must sell at once. Profits now amount to $2000 per year. Excellent future. An opportunity in a thousand.

GOOD CONCERN WANTS PARTNER.

Well-established construction company—builds and sells homes on installment plan. Business actually makes 50 per cent. profit on every transaction. Everything secured by equities in real estate. Business can be doubled with $10,000 additional capital. A capable, industrious man is wanted. A grand opportunity to land a fortune in the next 36 months.

LADIES' FURNISHINGS STOCK.

Stock will inventory at $8000. This is an extraordinary chance for the person who understands the business. Can be purchased today below its actual cost. Stock is new and well selected.

FINE RESTAURANT, $8000.

Located in one of Southern California's most progressive cities. Income now exceeds $600 a month. Receipts for last 4 months $15,258. Profits will double with the advent of the busy tourist season. Rent $100 a month. Original Lease expires 2 years from next May. Original investment was $10,000. This is a gilt-edge business proposition. No risk or speculation here. I can't emphasize the value too strongly.

SANITARIUM FOR PHYSICIAN.

$3000 to $5000 will enable a competent physician to obtain a good opening in a well-located foothill sanitarium. Quick communication with Los Angeles. Competent, agreeable hotel man of 20 years' experience to manage the catering and lodging end of the business. Amount paid by physician will be expended in equipping the institution. Will discuss the matter at length with any doctor who has the required amount of capital. No section of the United States is better adapted for a concern of this nature than Southern California.

CARRIAGE AND AUTO BUSINESS.

A very profitable business in this section of the United States. This concern has been established several years. Clears $4000 to $5000 yearly. Half interest may be purchased for $6000. A good safe money-making proposition. Will gladly give details.

GROCERY AT $1050.

Excellent store. Stock and fixtures inventory from $1100 to $1200. Will sell at inventory or $1050 as a whole. Rent only $15, on two-years' lease. Old-established store in an excellent location. I can strongly indorse this bargain.

PATENT INTEREST FOR SALE.

$1250 buys a 1-10 interest in a newly-patented article in general use. Investment will bring big returns. Can state conservatively that you will get "TEN dollars for every ONE you put in"—within 36 months.

PLANING MILL—$15,000.

Planing mill with large lot. The plant and real estate will be sold for $15,000 or will inventory the machinery at value. The lumber in the yards will inventory from $7000 to $10,000. This is a plant only recently established, has a good trade and every potential for enlargement. A practical millman will make enormous profits with this establishment.

BILLIARD PARLOR.

Have just listed a billiard parlor and cigar stand. The price is too high and I am negotiating with the owner for a reduction in price to its real worth. If I succeed in getting the proper price on this, it will be a splendid opening in that line.

I have a 5-years' lease on an apartment-house, just completed, at a reasonable rent. The tenant will have to buy the furniture at a lump price of $1500, or will inventory. The apartments are nearly all occupied and will yield a net income of over $100 a month on the investment of $1500, and there will be very little labor connected with the house.

WE SELL THE EARTH—
BASSETT & SMITH.
BUSINESS OPENING.
Reader, if you are looking for a business we would be pleased to give you the details of what we believe is the best opening in the mercantile line in California; sales last year nearly $80,000; profits about 25 per cent. net. Good reason for selling. Will give you full details if you call at our office, or if you desire will call on you.
BASSETT & SMITH,
10 202½ S. Broadway.

I HAVE A SECRET PROCESS FOR MANUfacture fuel; it is hotter than coal, lasts longer, makes no smoke, has no odor, and will not stain or color your hands; will cost but $2 per ton. This is one of the greatest discoveries of the age; you will not be asked to invest one cent until the above facts are positively proven; the Standard Oil Co. and the Coal Trust cannot compete with this scientific and cheap process of manufacturing fuel. If you want to get in on the ground floor, address or call at my office. DR. M'DOUGAL, 722½ W. Jefferson st., Los Angeles, Cal. 8

BUSINESS CHANCES— Miscellaneous.

SANDERCOOK.

I AM STRONG
—ON—BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES.

I have them, they are not snaps, but gilt-edge opportunities, the kind you face but a few times in a lifetime.

TOGO SAYS,

The secret of success in commercial as well as military life, is quick action—take pointers from Togo. The opportunities I present today are not such as hang in easy reach like a navel orange on a tree—they are as rare as lucrative.

I can show you where your entire investment will be repaid to you in profits within 18 months or 2 years, some of them have done so in the past and are doing so now. Please understand my business is conducted in the same confidential manner as is your banking business, I must therefore satisfy myself as to you willingness and ability to handle, before imparting particulars.

HERE IS WHAT I HAVE.

An established Broadway business, the best of its kind; long lease at a low rental; is clearing $1000 per month during present dull season, in busy season has cleared over $2000 per month. A legitimate well-established money-making business, which will require an investment of less than $30,000.

MY NEXT OFFER.

Is a half interest in a high-class wholesale and retail grocery, bakery and confectionery manufacturing business; located in a Pacific Coast city; this concern does a business of $200,000 a year, and less than $15,000 is required for half interest.

I have one of the finest confectionery stores in Los Angeles; this is high class, splendidly located, and will cost about $15,000 to handle. I also have another business of the same kind, which will cost not less than half this amount; both these stores are well established and handling a very prosperous trade.

AND NOW WE HAVE

A butcher shop, located on E. Seventh st., doing a nice clean cash business of about $1200 per month, with no soliciting or delivering; good lease at a low rental; this can be handled for $1500.

IN THE RETAIL GROCERY LINE.

I can show you a half dozen or more, located both in Los Angeles and in near-by beach towns that will be well worthy of your consideration. If interested don't fail to see me regarding those.

IF YOU WOULD LIKE SOME FACTS AND FIGURES

Respecting the candy manufacturing business, I can show you a very profitable one, provided you would care to go in as an active partner; this requires investment of between $15,000 and $20,000, according to invoice.

I have a splendidly-located wholesale liquor business which carries a low rental and a long lease; less than $15,000 will handle this business, and the showing is a yearly profit of from $6000 to $7000, which can be largely increased.

In the same line I have a saloon business and restaurant, which is netting a profit of about $1200 per month; long lease at a low rental; stock, fixtures, good will, etc., and will require less than $25,000 to handle.

LAST BUT NOT LEAST.

You know those machines for which you pay 5 cents per ride while you circulate in the air. I have a new one, complete in every detail, in first-class working order, and $2200 buys it. Profits on this class of business depends upon location; it is, of course, portable; present profit is from $7 to $10 per day.

SEARCHLIGHT—
Over $7,000,000 in ore reserves alone is what the wonderful Quartette mine has; this mine is situated in the famous Searchlight mineral zone, being located about three-quarters of a mile from the Searchlight-Parallel, which company is now operating with their new powerful hoisting plant. We handle most of the best stocks of companies operating in this famous district. The Quartette is now paying handsome dividends; other companies are expected to do the same shortly; for a meritorious investment call or write us about the shares in Searchlight companies.

SAW SCENES, DID M'COMAS.

And Coney Island Crabs Made Judge Sad.

Broke Law Every Time He Drew His Breath.

Corpse Tried to Shake the Prosecutor's Hand.

After a series of wild and thrilling escapes, Hon. C. C. McComas, the veteran prosecutor of the District Attorney's office, has escaped from New York. He is home again.

They say that a medical specialist always dies of the disease that has been his life study. Having sent most of the male population of the Western States to prison at one time or another, the judge's triumphal tour was one long succession of hairbreadth "shaves" from jail.

Every time he drew a breath he found he was breaking some law.

But, nevertheless, he acquired adventures that will form the text of many of his celebrated orations to spell-bound juries in the future.

The effect of his trip is already noticeable in the increased elegance of his manner of sweeping his famous scalp lock over his bald spot and by the acquired nattiness of the angle at which he cocks his Perfecto into the corner side of his face.

"May the Lord save the Dutch," exclaimed the judge, yesterday, excitedly reaching for a spittoon, "Brethren and ladies, I saw sights and scenes."

The judge snatched the silk handkerchief off his glistening shirt front and swooped into a recital of his mad adventures on Coney Island and rounding the Flat Iron building.

AT GAY CONEY ISLAND.

"Lordy, Lordy, did I go to Coney Island?" asked the judge.

Words failed him; he gave vent to his emotion in a long-excited spit. There was a thud and then a splash as the cuspidor, twenty feet away, was squarely hit.

"The first thing we did was to have a shore dinner. When there are any more shore dinners, by thunder and Betsy, I want to be excused.

"I didn't know what a shore dinner was. I don't think much of clams. They had little neck clams and fat necks and some more; I guess they must a' been rubber necks. But anyhow I didn't think much of clams.

"After awhile they brought on some other things. I thought at first it was chicken and s-a-y, brothers, I began to expand.

"What was it?" asked someone softly.

An expression of extreme and immeasurable disgust came over the judge's face. "It was crab," he said, with sour dignity.

"I didn't know what to eat on a crab; they weren't any 'eat here' signs on the critter; so I just chawed up the whole works, legs, and that pocket-book stomach piece."

The judge looked far away and pensive.

"I don't think much of crab," the judge said, at last. "And the crab and those necky clams didn't seem to get on very well. "They all left me kind of sudden," he added.

"The waiter brought me out some of that red wine; but I just waved him aside.

"I said, 'look a' here Colonel, I don't feed on that dago red; you can just bring me a pot of coffee.'

"I guess it made the feller kind of hot; he went back in the kitchen and brought me out a big tin pot full of coffee. Say, brethren, that tin pot would have held coffee enough to have drowned Pharoah's army. But he couldn't bluff me. No siree, I told him to put it down and I tried to forget that crab.

SET A-DRIFTING.

"After we got those crabs aboard, we went out to see the sights. Some feller hung a long ticket on us and set us drifting.

"We went up on a thing they call the Ferris wheel. You could see all the kingdoms of the earth.

"And let me tell you—Say, did you ever see the smoke stack of John D. Rockefeller's refinery in Jersey. Well sir, you can see that before the Goddess of Liberty. It must be the first thing you see coming to America.

"Then the girls dragged us into an augur upside down where its slippery and you sit down and slide. Yes sir, and you came tother end all tangled in a family like ham comes out of one of those sausage machines.

Well sir, and then they put us in a car. I think they called the thing the robbers swoop or something. I forget the name of it, but, Gosh, all hemlock, we went diving down through the earth and whooping up through the air and I thought the next would be hell for sartin, when we got out where we started. Sure as you're a foot high.

CORPSEY HANDSHAKE.

"After a while we went down into a place where there were dead men and dancing skeletons. Then a corpse came up and wanted to shake hands with me. I said to my son-in-law, "Let's get out of this goddam place; I don't want to see any dam catacombs."

The judge says that when he finally escaped from Coney Island, they took him down to see the Goddess of Liberty and Ellis Island.

"There was a feller there who said he would take us inside the Goddess and up into her head for a consideration; he said 'twas allowed, but I told him it wouldn't be delicate. I didn't know how they looked at it, I said, in New York, but it wouldn't go in Canfornia.

"We got lost from my son-in-law going down Broadway. The first thing I knew we got around the corner of the Flat Iron building."

The judge smoked fast and furiously for a minute in silence. Then he said pensively, "Well, brethren, it sure does blow coming round that corner. Dern my skin, if my hair didn't go swashwallering over my face and I had to give a boy 10 cents to chase my hat.

"And," continued the judge, shamefacedly, "you ought to have seen the women's clothes. Just swept right up and up, and—er— down again; yes, sir."

JUST BLATTED IN.

The judge said he didn't think much of emigrants at Ellis Island. That was the first place he got into trouble. "I saw them separating the sheep from goats in pens there. So I just blatted right in. Some feller touched me on the arm and said I'd have to get out quick. So I says, 'All right, colonel. All right, boss,' and I got right out.

"A while after that I went down to Trinity and was sitting there in the yard on a three-cornered stone when a feller came along and told me it was against the law. I again apologized and got out.

"I went up in the Adirondacks and a galoot came around where I was chopping down a dead tree and told me I was breaking a law.

"But I had her pretty near chopped. So I gave her another lick and all the people were coming to their tent doors. So I just hollered out, 'All right; salvation's free and wood's free today,' and they all came out and grabbed the wood. But they didn't do anything to me.

"I went down an hour after that and caught a speckled trout. This time an old lady rushed up and said I had broke some law about the trout being too short to go. But I cut off the head and tail. I just made up my mind if any other galoot came round and objected, I would expatiate on the length that head and tail had been. Yes, brethren, I resolved to bar down on the head and tail. But once again I escaped."

There is another chapter about the first experience of the judge with an Adirondack canoe, but this must be reserved, space lacking.

ALL FOR THREE DOLLARS!

"I stopped at Niagara coming back," said the judge, musingly. "There was a feller, a guide, took me round there and told me not to fall in the Whirlpool Rapids and charged me $3.

"He said that he had taken earls and kings and dukes and Lord knows what all to that spot and photographed them with the Whirlpool Rapids for a background, and he wanted me to have my picture taken.

"Yes, sir," said the judge firmly. "And he yawed and yawed about the King of this and that Duke of that.

"At last I looked him severely in the eye and said, 'Brother, do you know what would happen to me if I had my picture taken there? Well, sir, the people out in my Congress district are so gol darn down on kings and dukes that they don't wear crowns in their own hats.' Yes, sir, that's what I told him. 'And,' I said, 'if I was to have my picture taken in that duke place I'd be snowed clear out of office.'

"That," said the judge, taking another shot at the cuspidor, "was just what I told the feller."

PEACEFUL SOLUTION IN SIGHT.

Opposing Factions in Austria-Hungary Secure Services of Ambassador to Act as Mediator.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

VIENNA, Oct. 7.—For the first time since the outbreak of the Hungarian crisis two prominent coalitionists, Francis Kossuth and Gezade Polonyi, have taken an active step with a view toward an adjustment of the situation. This morning they wired to Herr Von Szigyeny-Marich, the Ambassador at Berlin, who at present is on his estate at Czor Hungary asking him to receive them. The Ambassador answered in the affirmative and Kossuth and Polonyi hastened to Czor and had a long conference with the diplomat. Kossuth submitted a plan to appease Hungarian feelings and simultaneously to remove Emperor Francis Joseph's scruples.

Herr Von Sczgoyeny-Marich promised to act as mediator between the crown and the coalitionists by requesting the King-Emperor to grant an audience for an explanation of Kossuth's plans. At the same time he warned Kossuth and Polonyi of the risk of not informing the other leaders of the coalitionists and said if the effort failed it would likely be construed as an attempt to cover the retreat of the coalition.

Austrian circles are not hopeful of a peaceful solution of the move.

Count Andrassy was today entrusted by the coalitionists with the task of moving an impeachment of the cabinet.

CHAMPIONSHIP GAMES.

PLANS FOR CONTEST.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CINCINNATI, Oct. 7.—Chairman Hermann of the National Baseball Commission, makes public today an announcement of the championship series at Chicago.

Under an agreement drawn up between the respective presidents of the Chicago National and American League clubs a series of games is to be played between these two clubs commencing October 10, 1905, to determine the championship of the city of Chicago.

J. E. Johnstone and Thomas Connelly will act as umpires.

Supplemental rules for the world's championship games were announced by Chairman Hermann as follows:

All games in Philadelphia and New York will commence at 3 o'clock, instead of 3:30, as heretofore announced.

The official ball of the National League will be used in all games on National league grounds, and the official ball of the American League in all games on American League grounds. A meeting of the commission and the umpires selected will be held on Monday, October 9, at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia, at 11 o'clock a.m.

DAN PATCH'S RECORD.

BEATS HIS OWN TIME.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

LEXINGTON (Ky.) Oct. 7.—Dan Patch, king of pacers today, clipped three quarters of a second from his own world's record, going the mile in 1:55¼. A crowd of 10,000 was already in a high state of enthusiasm over the smashing of the 1905 race record of the world's three heat record successively, and when Dan Patch's time was given out excitement approached frenzy. Cheering people threw hats and wraps in the air and swarmed into the track despite the efforts of policemen the ovation continuing several minutes. The great son of Joe Patchen and Zelika appeared for his trial at 4 o'clock. The track was lightning fast and there was no wind and the weather conditions were ideal. Scott Hudson was behind the pacemaker. A strip of cloth between the wheels of the forward sulky to prevent dirt being thrown behind was the only suggestion of a wind shield. Hersey was behind Dan Patch. The books offered 4 to 5 either way on the result of the effort. There were cheers when 29¼ was hung out for the first quarter. Dan Ptach's nose was almost against Hudson's coat and the crowd began vainly yelling to Hudson to move up. Hope was stimulated when 57½ was posted for the half. Excitement became intense when the three-quarters was passed in 1:26¼ and the spectators began shouting encouragement to the drivers. Into the stretch the great pacer, still keeping his own seemingly effortless stride, the runner at his sulk wheel began to crawl up. Then Hudson gave a little more rein, but Hersey sat like a statue not urging his charge with whip or word. Patch made no last supreme effort. He just finished the mile as he had begun it. He had scarcely broken into a sweat when led back to receive the plaudits of the crowd.

M. W. Savage, his owner, had the announcer publicly thank Hudson for his work as a pacemaker. He also announced that Dan Patch on Wednesday would be sent against the record of 1:59¼ made without a dust shield.

The three fastest heats ever paced marked the 2:04 event and the average time for the total heats of the day was the fastest on record. In the initial heat of the 2:04 pace Hazel Patch gave the Lexington track the 1905 race record of 2:02¾. The next heat was won by Laconda in 2:02 flat. He likewise covered the third heat in 2:04¾. The three finishes were pronounced the most heart-breaking seen this year. Nathan Straus was the favorite throughout though field sold at from 60 to 50 to 50 to 30, and had to be content with third money. The betting on the event was the heaviest of the meeting. Every favorit was beaten today. Results:

The Wilson stake, $2000, 2:20 pace: Bolivar won three straight heats in 2:07¾, 2:09¾, 2:09¼. Bonnie Wilkes, Ed Patch and Cash Wood also started.

The 2:08 trotting purse, $1200: Kid Shay won two straight heats in 2:08¾, 2:07¼. Angiola, Mazetto, Rediac, Direct View, Robert Mc. and High Seven also started.

The 2:04 class pace, purse $1500: Laconda won second and third heats in 2:02, 2:04¾. Hazel Patch won first heat in 2:02¾. Nathan Straus, Nervola, Major C, Pan Michael and Baron Gratan also started.

RUSS LUCKY HIT.

PREVENTS A SHUTOUT.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SEATTLE, Oct. 7.—Russ Hall's hit in the last of the ninth, today, saved a shutout and brought in Seattle's only run. The Oaklands had pushed three men across the plate on bunched hits. Just as the game finished a pouring rain started and it is probable that the game today will be the last on Seattle grounds this year. Score:

Seattle 11, hits 9, errors 2.
Oakland 3, hits 8, errors 0.
Batteries: Miller and Blankenship; Graham and Hackett.
Umpire: Howletts.

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

BERNARD HARD HIT.

FIELDER PITCHES WELL.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 7.—St. Louis lost the first game of a double-header with Chicago today on Rockenfeld's error, but succeeded in ticing the second after Buchanan had been pounded for what appeared to be a commanding lead. The second contest uncovered a new pitcher for McAleer. Van Zandt, who relieved Buchanan and who has been the local's utility outfielder all season, displayed excellent control and held Chicago to two hits. Attendance, 4300. Scores:

First game.
St. Louis, 1; hits, 9; errors, 3.
Chicago, 2; hits, 5; errors, 0.

Big Offer for Dan.

LEXINGTON (Ky.) Oct. 7.—W. M. Savage tonight confirmed the report that a New York syndicate had offered him $180,000 for Dan Patch, who today paced a mile in the record breaking time of 1:55 1-4.

BOXING IN CHICAGO.

SPORT STARTS AGAIN.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—Boxing contests were resumed in Chicago tonight, after having been under the ban of the police for many months. Five contests of six rounds each were carded at the Chicago Athletic Club. The main event was between Honey Melody of Boston and Dick Fitzpatrick of Chicago, which was declared a draw. Fitzpatrick was hog fat, outweighing Melody by at least twenty pounds. Both men were considerably punished.

TIE GAME.

BERKELEY HELD DOWN.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BERKELEY, Oct. 7.—In a fast game of football on the California field this afternoon the University of Willamette, Oregon eleven, tied the California 'Varsity by the score of 0 to 0. The Willamette team was much heavier than the Blue and Gold, but the latter made up by speedier playing. At the end of each half, the ball was on the 33-yard line in Willamette territory in possession of California players, but at no time in the game could the Berkeley players get within scoring distance. The game was devoid of sensational features.

SOLDIERS SNOWED.

STANFORD HAS WALKOVER.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Oct. 7.—The football game today between the Stanford 'Varsity team and the eleven from the Fifteenth Infantry of Monterey resulted in the defeat of the soldiers by a score of 51 to 0. The playing of the soldiers was so weak that the game was not a test of the strength of the victers. The Stanford Freshmen defeated the University of The Pacific team 10 to 0.

P.H.S. WINS.

STARTS FOOTBALL.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

POMONA, Oct. 7.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In their first football game of the season, the Pomona High School eleven defeated the team from the Covina high school by a score of 28 to 0. A closer game was expected. The local eleven is playing in strong form and has hopes of winning the interscholastic championship of Southern California.

RED-HOT SHOT ON RAIL RATES.

SANTA BARBARA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE ON RECORD.

Adopts Resolutions Denouncing the Methods of Companies—Naval Commander Bull Declares Transfer from Transport is More of Reward Than Reprimand—Hint of Lost Will.

SANTA BARBARA, Oct. 7.—The Chamber of Commerce has placed itself on record as being in favor of the work of the Interstate Commerce Law convention. At last night's meeting of the chamber resolutions, which were sweeping in their denunciation of the methods of the railroads and were of the bombastic, red-hot order, were passed. The resolutions were introduced by Director Rasey, who was seconded by Director Thomas. F. E. Kellogg spoke in favor of them and L. Richardson, the city agent of the Southern Pacific Railroad, opposed the passage and took exception to some of Mr. Kellogg's remarks, a heated discussion following.

COMMANDER BULL TALKS.

Commander J. H. bull, of the United States Navy, in command of the transport Solace, who has recently received a transfer to the command of the supply ship Celtic, denies the story published in San Francisco papers that the change was made as a reprimand to him and to Executive Officer J. J. Knapp, who was transferred with him. It was reported that the change was made as a result of the complaints against these two officers by Mrs. Costello, the wife of a civilian master boiler-maker of the navy, who asserts that she was not treated courteously during her voyage on the Solace to Cavite, where her husband was stationed. Commander Bull acknowledges that such complaints were made last February, but were not acted upon, and that his late detail to the Celtic had nothing to do with these charges, and is in fact more of a promotion than a reprimand. Commander Bull is now in this city with his wife. They have purchased a block of land here and are building several cottages.

HINTS AT LOST WILL.

The latest sensation in the Carenga case is the intimation brought out in the examination of Ramon F. Carenga, a brother of the late Juan B. Carenga, who was asked on the witness stand if his brother had not left a will with his effects, which had never come to light. It was claimed that this instrument was drawn up before Attorney Dorn of San Luis Obispo. Ramon claimed to know nothing about it.

FLASHES FROM THE WIRES.

The American Line steamer Philadelphia, which sailed yesterday from Southampton for America, had on board Lieut.-Gen. Adna R. Chaffee and Mrs. Chaffee, Brig.-Gen. Franklin Bell and Mrs. Bell; Brig.-Gen. James Crosier and the staffs of the three generals.

Driven mad over the refusal of a young woman to marry him, Fred Freerer, chef in a restaurant, fatally wounded Mrs. Violet J. Lonsdale at St. Joseph, Michigan, yesterday, and then killed himself.

Governor Pardee yesterday reappointed N. Blackstock of Ventura a member of the Board of Bank Commissioners.

The September statement of the Board of Trade of London shows an increase of $13,293,000 in imports and $17,109,000 in exports.

FOR SALE—OR EXCHANGE. MY BEAUTIFUL home in North Glendale, right up at the foothills, corner two public driveways overlooking the whole valley. A magnificent view, 2½ acres as fine lemon grove as there is in this county; 30 minutes on electric car from center of city. This place has a modern 7-room, 2-story house with oak floors, two mantels, 4 porches, modern plumbing, porcelain tub, marble wash basins, hot and cold water, electric lights, telephone, cement walks, tank and tank-house, good 2-story barn, carriage-house and large cement packing-house; remember that if you have lemons, you have money, as one of my neighbors has 40 acres for which he got $8000 net to him for one picking. Mine was under contract for a less figure, so I didn't do as well. This is as fine home as anyone could ask for. All the conveniences of the city and the comforts of a country home. Pure air and good water. For health, it can't be beat in Southern California. Situated ½ mile west of car line at North Glendale. Price $12,500.

FOR SALE—
STRAND
STRAND
STRAND
We have some of the choicest lots on the Ocean Park Strand facing the lagoon; understand these lots are between the lagoon and the ocean, they range in width from 45 to 75 feet, and can be purchased at a price per foot which is less than regular 35 foot lots are offered for. Having frontage on both the lagoon and the avenue, they are particularly attractive to cut up into two or three lots. The great charm about these lots to the investor is that they can be carried for less cash than the small lots. For instance—one lot with a frontage of 46 feet, which we offer for $3000, can be carried for $850.00 cash, whereas the average 35-foot lot which sells for $1500.00 take about $1200.00 to carry it. In four years the public have bought and built upon one-half the sand lots in Ocean Park. The laws of supply and demand establish prices. Here the supply is limited. You cannot make a mistake by buying sand lots in Ocean Park.

OCEAN PARK.

FOR SALE—
HAS MANY THINGS IN EMBRYO.
A common salutation now is, are you going to spend your winter at Ocean Park?

Those who have spent former winters at this beautiful town by the sea positively say that the temperature is more equable, the evenings are nice and warm; one can any evening after dinner promenade on the board walk and be very comfortable; how isn't that quite an inducement? While most of people are sitting in their Los Angeles homes trying to keep warm those of Ocean Park are walking to and fro, enjoying the sea breeze. The town will soon be well lighted with numerous electric lights; a pleasure park of 70 acres, taking in clubhouse, grounds, racing, course, baseball grounds, etc., is being made for the enjoyment of the public. This park will be set thickly with palms and all kinds of beautiful shrubbery and numerous driveways.

There is nothing that the public-spirited citizens of Ocean Park will forget when it comes to making their town one of the most, if not the most attractive seaside resort. There are yet many good things in embryo. The attraction at the clubhouses is whist every Wednesday night; ladies' card party Wednesday afternoon, at which time refreshments are served; Saturday nights dancing; only members of the club and their friends by invitation attend these gatherings.

When at Ocean Park don't forget to call at THE SMITH REALTY CO., room 4, Casino Bldg., and get good prices on all real estate. It is no trouble for them to drive you around and show you the good buys; their prices will astonish you. Call and see them. 8

SANTA MONICA.

SANTA MONICA CLIMATE.
BEAUTIFUL IN MARCH AS WELL AS JULY.

With the winter season comes that ever-perplexing question, where shall we spend the season—in the city, or go to the beach? The people of Santa Monica can safely say come to our town, where the climate is delightful all the year round. People used to think that winter at the seashore was cold and gloomy. Now they are beginning to know that the ocean tempers the atmosphere so that the climate of the beach is as beautiful in March as it is in July. The inland cities are delightful in winter, but Santa Monica is one of the few places in the entire world which has no unpleasant seasons. The doctors will tell you by all means try the bracing air of the beach. Great numbers of people suffering from the terribly prevalent affliction, the cure of our modern life, nervous prostration, finds at Santa Monica the restful quiet and the soothing potion which brings them repose and a return of the old vitality and strength of brain and body. One can easily understand why the doctors are so enthusiastic over the value of Santa Monica climate, and the waters of the Pacific.

FOR EXCHANGE—
SANDERCOOK.

Don't hesitate about investing in Los Angeles real estate; the fever germs will keep the eastern tourist from going South this year. They are all coming to California, and as you know, a good many remain here and invest; hence, I believe a very active demand for all kinds of property will soon be in evidence. I have some good offers which I present today, with a full knowledge as to their values.

Near the Hotel Pepper in the Westlake district, I have a magnificent residence, beautifully located on a large lot; interior as well as exterior marks this mansion as being a particularly high-class home. In fact, there are few better in the city of Los Angeles. The price is very reasonable, only $13,000 required, half cash, and balance terms.

Here is a nice cottage, 6 rooms, modern; fine exterior appearance and interior beautifully finished. The price is reasonable, $3000; $1000 cash required, and is situated on 36th st., near Main.

A CHEAP BUY.

This modern 5-room cottage, situated on 34th st. near Maple ave.; lot is 40x122, and the price is only $2300.

If you are inclined to purchase a bungalow, I have a new modern one, 5 rooms, everything first-class and up to date, and this is really a good buy for $3100; $1300 must be cash; the location on Fedora st., is splendid, and it stands on a lot 46x128.

WEST 30TH STREET.

Is a nice street for homes, and on which I have a very fine 8-room house on a lot 64x116; reception hall, connecting rooms, and everything modern and up to date; the lawn, flowers, together with the beautiful trees, make this a particularly attractive home; the price asked is $7750, and is good value; part cash and terms.

I have a very good offer to make in a 5-room modern cottage, situated on E. Adams st., everything modern and up to date, and $2800 buys it; ½ cash and terms.

If what I advertise don't meet your requirements, come and see me. I have others.

The Skilled Physician Is Nature's Helper

Gentle Influences More Effective Than Force

Men's Diseases Permanently Cured by Dr. Joslen

I treat Men Only and treat only those Diseases which constitute my Specialty.

The human body is a most wonderful piece of mechanism. It is all the while wearing out and all the while rebuilding. When disease attacks there is extra work to be done. The natural reconstructive forces are called into more vigorous action, and effort is centered upon the affected part. Nature knows just what to do in every condition that may arise. She makes no mistakes. Her defeat never comes through error, but because the assault is overwhelming. Yet, as long as life exists, the effort to establish health continues.

The skilled physician is nature's helper. He must not attempt to be more than a helper. He must work with nature and in direct accordance with nature's plans.

DR. O. C. JOSLEN,
The Leading Specialist

I have the largest practice because I invariably fulfill my promises.

Physicians are comprehending this more fully than ever before, and as a result the advancement in medical science is toward the adoption of mild and gentle influences.

For seventeen years I have treated men's diseases exclusively. I have given all my thought to this one class of ailments. My endeavor has been to acquire accurate scientific knowledge concerning them. I realized the general lack of such knowledge, and the impossibility of successful treatment without it. I am confident that I have ascertained nature's requirements in all diseases peculiar to men. My original, safe and strikingly distinctive methods of treatment meet these requirements.

My Fees Are Fair, My Cures Permanent and You Can Pay When Satisfied That You Are Well

WEAKNESS, CONTRACTED DISORDERS, STRICTURE, VARICOCELE, HYDROCELE, SPECIFIC BLOOD POISON, PILES AND SKIN DISEASES QUICKLY CURED.

PLUCKY GIRL'S AIM WAS POOR.

FIRES THREE TIMES ON A ROBBER AT MIDNIGHT.

Miss May Watkins, With Rare Nerve, Drives Away Tough Who Demanded Admittance to Her Room — Fellow Had Demanded Money from Her on Previous Night

Three shots from a revolver of large caliber was the greeting given by pretty Miss May Watkins, nineteen years old, of No. 2120 Oak street, to a stranger of suspicious appearance who demanded admittance to the house at midnight, evidently bent on robbery. The fellow fled at the first shot, drawing his own revolver as he ran, but so hotly pressed to avoid being hit by the missiles fired by the plucky girl that he had no chance to use the gun. It is believed none of the girl's shots took effect.

MISS MAY WATKINS.

This was the second encounter Miss Watkins had with the same man. He met her late in the evening Thursday in front of her home, stepping from behind a tree and demanding money, then seizing her and holding her until she broke away and ran, calling loudly for help and arousing the neighborhood. Then the man vanished.

On Friday, Miss Watkins had entertained a young man who left shortly before midnight. He had been at the house the night before and on Friday remained late, thinking there might be another call from the stranger. Hardly had he departed, thinking the man would not repeat the robbery attempt of the night before, when there was a ring at the Watkins doorbell.

A younger girl of the family responded to the summons and opened the inner door, thinking the screen was locked. As she did so, a tall man with a slouch hat pulled well down over his forehead jerked open the screen door.

"Is any of the family at home?" he demanded.

"Just my sister and myself," was the startled reply of the young girl.

Hearing the commotion, Miss May Watkins, who was in the library, stepped into the hall.

One glance at the caller proved to her that it was the man who had seized her Thursday night.

Dashing back into the library, she seized a revolver that lay on a desk.

Running into the hall, her sister meanwhile having got behind her, she pointed the gun at the fellow and fired without parley.

Taken by surprise, the robber turned and started hastily down the front steps, drawing a revolver.

Miss Watkins followed up her advantage and ran out on to the porch, the revolver, hot and smoking, trained on the marauder.

Twisting his head around as he reached the front yard, the fellow cried "Don't shoot;" all the time continuing and accelerating his retreat.

Again Miss Watkins fired, fearing that the man might shoot, and a third time a bullet sped into the darkness, the report accompanying the pounding of the fellow's shoes as he vanished from view.

Neighbors, awakened by the firing, and a policeman who was on a passing car hurried to the place and upon learning Miss Watkin's story, made a hasty search for the robber. Other officers were summoned, but a long hunt failed to disclose any traces of the fellow.

The young woman is an excellent shot with a revolver, having been trained in its use since early childhood, and it is hard for her to understand how she came to miss her mark.

Her experience of the night before was almost as thrilling:

After accompanying a friend to a car at Twenty-third and Oak streets, half a block from her home, she walked hurriedly back toward her home. She and her companion had met a suspicious looking stranger as they passed down the street and she feared he might appear.

As she returned past the Marlborough school she suddenly was confronted by the man, who stepped from behind a tree. He demanded her money. When she denied having any he seized her; she twisted from his grasp and dashed into a yard, screaming. The uproar and the raising of windows and opening of doors in adjoining houses caused the fellow to take to his heels.

Miss Watkins, who saw the man twice on Thursday night and recognized him again Friday, has a good description of him and says she will be able to identify him if the police effect his capture.

HAD THEM GUESSING.

Woman in Cabinet in J. R. Lane Company's Show Window Kept Hundreds Inquiring About Her.

The "woman in the cabinet," displaying a new brand of corsets, has attracted hundreds of people to J. R. Lane Company's show windows during the past week.

She has kept every one guessing as to the real secrets of her art. Some judged her a mere automaton—since her figure appeared to stop at the waist—and the mystery of the thing, at the very least, has drawn scores of people to watch her at her station looking out on Broadway.

The crowd was especially large last night.

All Nations to be Represented at Hollywood.

A few of the clover leaders in the unique market.

The International Market, which will be held Saturday afternoon and evening on Ivar street, Hollywood, by the women of St. Catherine's Guild, of St. Stephen's Church, will be the largest and most brilliant event of the kind ever undertaken in the pretty foothill city.

Ivar street, from Prospect Boulevard to Ocean View avenue north, will be inclosed and nearly fifty booths will be arranged either side of this street, and east and west on Ocean View. At the entrance will be an immense arch, from which flags of all nations will wave, and in the evening the scene will be illuminated with hundreds of electric lights.

The enclosure will embrace the beautiful grounds of C. J. George, and in a deep glen south of the house the Japanese tea gardens will be conducted. Every item of preparation, from costumes to carpentry work, is being arranged with the utmost care.

The costumes are unique and beautiful. Mrs. C. J. George, as mistress of the market, will be attired in Colonial style, with powdered hair, a patch or two, and exquisite gown of brocade. She will be assisted by a group of Hollywood and Los Angeles ladies in similar attire.

In the Italian booth the services of Signor Russo, the tenor, have been secured, with a bevy of Los Angeles girls. Signor Russo will himself prepare and serve real Italian spaghetti.

In the Japanese tea gardens Mrs. Philo J. Beveridge will be hostess in Japanese costume, assisted by a company of real Japanese. From the tea gardens parties will be conducted in charge of Japanese guides on a tour of the de Longpre galleries.

The California booth, with Mrs. H J Whitley as hostess, promises to be very attractive. With Mrs. Whitley will be Mmes. Cline, Arthur Letts, J. Jepson, Misses Glass and Milnor.

Miss Perry Jones, of Los Angeles, will sell apples at the Welsh booth.

A gypsy camp with a huge camp kettle over a sure-enough fire, and three fortune tellers, will be a feature. Here gypsy maids in characteristic costumes will serve hot clam bouillon.

Every nation of consequence is to be represented, and besides there will be a postoffice with special delivery boys and a telephone, a fish-pond, a freak show, a donkey train and many other novel features.

St. Catherine's Guild is one of the largest woman's organizations in Hollywood. Mrs. E. W. Elliott is the president.

WOMEN'S CLUBS.

The Woman's Parliament has a brilliant programme ready for this week, the sessions beginning Tuesday morning at the First Congregational Church, and occupying Tuesday and Wednesday.

The first event will be an elaborate reception held at the Woman's Club House Monday evening, in honor of the speakers and delegates. A concert of a high order will be given under the direction of Mr. William J. Scholl, the following artists appearing: Miss Elizabeth Jordan, pianist; Mrs. Blanche William Robinson, accompanist; Mrs. Bidwell Bedford, vocalist: Nathrop Blumenfeld, violinist; Peje Storck, pianist, and G. Allen Hancock, cellist.

The reception and musical as well as the subsequent sessions at the First Congregational Church are open to the public.

The programme for the regular sessions is as follows:

Tuesday, 10:30 a.m.: Invocation, Rev. William Horace Day; greeting, Mrs. Lucy S. Blanchard, vice-president-at-large.

Luncheon, 2:00 p.m.: Music; "Boy Haters," George Beebe, City Prosecutor; the Permanent Art Gallery, Mrs. W. S. Taylor, Los Angeles; "Sunshine," Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden, New York, president general and founder of the International Sunshine Society.

8:00 p.m.: Music; "The Woman in Business," Mrs. Emma A. Summers, Los Angeles; "City and County Consolidation," Hon. E. W. Britt, Los Angeles; discussion, Rev. S. G. Dunham, Pasadena.

Wednesday, 10:30 a.m.: Election of officers; "One Problem in Southern California," Mrs. Mary M. Coman, Pasadena.

Luncheon, 2:00 p.m.: "Should Educational Institutions be Under Political Control," Mrs. Roy Jones, Santa Monica.

Cosmos Opening.

The initial meeting of the season for the Cosmos Club will be held next Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, in the music hall of the new Blanchard Annex, with the entrance on Hill street. Mrs. Lou V. Chapin will give a lecture on current events.

Alliance Francaise.

Owing to the elaborate preparation required for the production of "Le Juif Polonais," of Erckman-Chatrain, which will be brought out by the Alliance Francaise, the date of the affair has been postponed to the second Wednesday in November. This will be the first evening meeting of the season and the play will be brilliantly staged and presented.

FIGHT FOR JACKSON STREET.

Eighth Warders Will Carry It to City Council Tomorrow—They Want Santa Fe Trackage.

There is prospect that the Santa Fé-Southern Pacific "scrap" for the possession of Jackson street, which had a whirl before the Board of Public Works on Friday, will again present some lively phases at the meeting of the City Council tomorrow.

The property owners on Jackson street are stirred up, and they propose to be on hand with a large delegation of the petition signers to back up their request that the Santa Fé be given the right for trackage.

Unless the Southern Pacific has done some pretty shrewd work since the board meeting on Friday, it will have but three signers to show on its petition, and these with but a small minority of the frontage represented.

The object lesson which has converted the Jackson-street folk to look with favor on the incoming of the Santa Fé is the rapid jump in values which followed that road's securing the right to lay tracks on Commercial and Banning streets.

At the corner of Banning and Alameda streets M. T. Collins sold the property he had been holding at $4000 for $5500. Mrs. Mary Lynn sold an adjoining lot, which she held at $4000, for $6000. Mrs. Lanctster sold her Banning-street property, which she had been offering for $4000, at an advance of $2000; the Frazier property on Banning jumped from $3000 to $5000; five lots on Banning street, which had been covered with little cottages occupied by undesirable tenants, have been sold to the Newmark Company for $32,000, a still greater increase in valuations than the ones noted above; and adjoining the Newmark property Carl Waldenfels has purchased for $16,000 a property with 135 feet of frontage on Commercial, which could have been had at a much less price before the Santa Fé spur was laid. He has now refused $28,000 for the same property.

The Jackson-street people argue that if these changes have come because of the Banning and Commercial streets spur lines, they want it to have the right on Jackson as well.

The plea of monopoly is knocked out by the showing that the Southern Pacific could as well ask for trackage rights on Ducommun street or Turner street, as on Jackson street, where the Santa Fé first set the movement in motion. The move of the Southern Pacific people is looked upon by the Eighth Warders as an obstructionary play, and they claim they will insist on the City Council granting the trackage rights to the Santa Fé.

WESTLAKE MUSIC.

Willey's Band Will Furnish Sunday Melody for the Park During Winter Months.

Music at Westlake Park on Sundays has been missing of late, but today a new organization will enter the familiar stand. It is Willey's band, which made music at Playa Del Rey during the summer.

The musicians, numbering twenty-five, have a good contract for the winter's work, and promise to put on a repertoire of good popular music.

Several locally known soloists will be heard, among them Matt Greenan, C. L. Buratti and B. Sherril.

Down-to-Date

The official map, published in Part VII of the Sunday Times, and issued under the auspices of the Mining Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, will be reprinted on tough paper, and inclosed in a pocket-size cover. It shows the water holes, springs, desert roads and trails of this comparatively unknown region. For sale by The Times, its agents and at book stores. Price 25 cents. Postage 5 cents extra.

TOURIST HOST LOOMS MIGHTY.

RECORD-BREAKING INFLUX IS PREDICTED FOR US.

Sporting Man Says Ascot Will Draw Twenty Thousand Men of Money—Cosmopolitan Character of the Incoming Aggregation Alleged to be Very Unusual.

The hotels and the railroads—concerns and corporations who do not theorize but know—are planning for the greatest tourist season which Southern California has ever seen.

In all of the principal hotels of Los Angeles reservations have been made weeks and even months ahead. At the Van Nuys there are bookings down as far in the future as March.

A prominent sporting man, just from New York, said yesterday afternoon: "If two-thirds of the eastern horse lovers who have promised to come to Los Angeles this winter really do come, Ascot Park alone will bring 20,000 strangers with lots of money to spend. On Broadway, all during September, Los Angeles has been the sole topic of talk, and California dates are made on every hand. "Well, goodbye, old chap! See you in Los Angeles," is a common byword.

There are predictions that the Ascot crowd will be even greater. The fame of the town has spread broadcast among the pony fraternity, and trackmen everywhere look toward this city as the American center of winter sport.

TOURISTS FROM ABROAD.

For another thing, we will probably be visited by a more cosmopolitan gathering than has ever entered Los Angeles before—barring that attracted by the Methodist world-conference.

Wealthy people of England, tourists from France and globe-trotters from Germany are now including Los Angeles in their itinerary.

A large party of Italians visited Los Angeles during the summer, numbers of Teutonic travelers took the word back during the early spring, and more than a score of wealthy and influential Japanese dropped in at our hotels during the summer just past.

SUMMER BUSINESS.

The hotels report the largest summer business in the history of their organizations. When the time came for winter travel to die out utterly it only abated, and then flowed with steadily maintained curiosity and monetary results right on into July and August.

It is evident that the fame of Southern California as a summer as well as winter resort is going abroad throughout the land.

WHO COMES.

The better class of people make up, for the most part, the influx of visitors into California. This is eminently so because we are far away from any seaport touched by ships with heavy laden steerages, because there are no industries that offer unusually easy jobs and unusually high wages to an army of malcontents, and because of the storied climatic advantages which have been described around the world.

UNION DEPOT

Nearly sixty per cent. of the population of Los Angeles live East of Main Street.

"East of Main"

No city under the domain of the Stars and Stripes presents better opportunities for profitable real estate investment than Los Angeles. Land purchased in almost any section of this city will ultimately yield a good profit to the buyer. Our confidence in the future of the commercial district east of Main, including Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Streets, also San Pedro and Central Avenue, is so great that we predict a 100 per cent. increase in realty valuess within two years.

IT'S SIMPLY A MATTER OF HISTORY

That prices of property in the vicinity of the Union Depots throughout the United States have become totally prohibitive except to men of great wealth. The erection of the Los Angeles Union station is practically assured.

Improvements entailing vast expenditures have been outlined for this great coming section east of Main. Many are now in actual construction—plain evidence that the extensive development has actually begun. Those who buy in this district NOW will "get a reserved seat in Fortune's lap."

Our lists include the best buys on the best streets east of Main.

Price of Full Size Lots $300.00 Up. Only $25.00 Down

After nearly a year of costly improvement work we announce this morning the first real opening of the best real estate proposition since Los Angeles became a city. Two tracts, side by side, "Highland Villa Tract" and "Occidental Heights."

We have endeavored to combine in this opportunity, every good quality that a residence section could possess.

The lots are limited in number. The price has purposely been made very low. The terms have never been equaled on high-grade, fine property.

What we expect to accomplish is this—we want this property to earn such a splendid profit for every investor that this company will gain a wide circle of "steady" investors, and establish itself as the most important real estate concern in the community. It requires no argument to prove that these lots will immediately advance.

We make this emphatic statement, every lot is worth today 30 per cent. more than our opening prices, and in spot cash. Yet we have chosen to let the purchaser make this profit, and we furthermore will accept a payment of $25 down, or 10 per cent., and the balance at $10 monthly.

Still another car line passing directly through this property is absolutely assured, making the car service still finer and surpassing the car facilities of almost any other section of Los Angeles.

HIGHLAND VILLA TRACT AND OCCIDENTAL HEIGHTS

If you have abundance of money and seek a profitable investment, if you are a wage-earner and seek a beautiful, splendid spot where you can own your home, if you are working for a salary and seek an opening where modest savings will work for you, then you cannot pass by this proposition.

Simply visit the property, see the lots and improvements, note the quick run from the business district, and you will buy as many lots as your means will allow.

Look everywhere, compare prices and advantages, and tell us if this is not the most magnificent offer, the soundest, surest investment of them all.

Keep away from low, damp ground, keep near the city, don't pay a top price which includes the profits of half a dozen speculators.

Turn speculator yourself. Buy at first hand. If Los Angeles was to go backward instead of forward, if population should diminish instead of increase, the property at these prices would still be a good investment.

Can you say that of any other property on the market today?

Visit The Property Today.

Take the East First street car, which runs on Broadway, go to the end of the line (only 5c fare). Agents with carriages and automobiles will be ready to show you around. Don't hesitate and feel afraid that we expect you to buy; come and look. Don't buy unless you wish to. You are welcome to our time. There will be hosts of others as well as yourself.

Those who cannot be on the property today should take the first chance to run out and see these fine lots. Our main office in Mason Building, corner Fourth and Broadway, Rooms 418 to 420, is provided with maps, where reservations can be made.

We repeat:—This property is positively worth at least 30 per cent. more than the prices we ask. Houses are already being built. The improvements are not on paper but actually made. An army of workmen are rushing the final corners to completion. It is the very instant to buy. Can you afford to miss the best real estate buy on the market?

GOOD PROSPECT IN NEW YORK.

Fruit Market Better Than It Has Been for Years.

Brisk Demand for California Oranges and Lemons.

Florida and Jamaica Not in the Running Now.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 2.—Florida oranges have begun to move from the counties of the southern part of the State, and shipments are being made in car lots. For so early in the season the fruit is in excellent condition. Estimates fall far short of the estimates made at this time last year. The highest estimate made so far this season gives only 2,000,000 boxes, and many estimates fall below that figure. Last year it was estimated that the yield would be 2,250,000 to 2,500,000 boxes. The yield was actually about 2,000,000 boxes. Remembering the reduction in actual yield, compared with the estimates last year, conservative interests say that the total yield this year will not be more than 1,250,000 boxes. Prices to growers this year have averaged about $1 a box on the tree and $1.60 delivered on board cars. These prices are considered good, and are really higher than they were last season. A good deal of Florida acreage is under contract to speculators at $1.00@1.25 per box orchard run. Most growers are well enough satisfied with this figure. They say that it is better than they have done some years.

Jamaica oranges are ruling lower at the auction sales. Recent auctions have shown a price considerably below the igures of the first sales, and they re still declining. There are days when he figure runs up, but as a whole, the prices obtained are not what importers hoped at this season. The fruit s still poorly colored, must of it being so green that it is not fit for use or a week or more after it arrives. But of course it is only in this way hat the growers and importers sueed in selling their oranges at all. ater they would come in competition vith Florida oranges, and the latter re so much better than Jamaicas that he Jamaica would not bring importg charges. It is now or never with he West Indian dealers. At the last ale of the week prices were $3.50@4.25 er barrel and $1.85@$2.50 per box. Insmuch as it costs 1 cent a pound duty n imported oranges, it can be seen at the price doesn't allow much marn to the grower after all expenses e paid. It is only the first of the ason now. Later prices will rule en lower.

CALIFORNIAS IN DEMAND.

California oranges are selling at high ice. Look at the sale of Valencia tes the same day of the Jamaica sale bove mentioned. Auction prices ranged to $6.10 per box. The wholesale ice from store is up to $7 per box. hile Jamaica barrels sell for only 25 per barrel, and there are supsed to be three boxes in a barrel. doesn't look as though the trade red much for Jamaica oranges. But speaks volumes for the popularity California fruit and shows that hatever competition Californias may ve they are sure to sell at high ices.

The total arrivals during September date of California oranges are 17,-8 boxes, compared with 13,580 boxes ring the corresponding period a year ago. The total receipts during August were 35,442 boxes, compared with 29,-019 boxes during August a year ago. Yet with the receipts much larger than last year prices have ruled strong and are now higher than they were a year ago.

LEMON MARKET STRONG.

The lemon market is in strong position, with only small supplies coming from abroad, and those frequently of rather inferior quality. Auction sales show widely varying prices, though for the past week the tendency has been upward. At one sale foreign lemons advanced 25@50 cents a box, depending upon the size and quality. And jobbing prices rule so high that lemons have become almost a luxury.

The receipts of Sicily lemons during September numbered 78,400 boxes, compared with 17,068 boxes during September, 1904. Receipts from California during the month were 4176 boxes. August receipts were 71,700 boxes from Sicily and 2919 boxes from California, compared with 135,200 boxes from Sicily and 960 boxes from California during the same period last year. Total imports of Sicily lemons from November 1, 1904, to date, have been 1,451,750 boxes, compared with 1,924,668 boxes in the corresponding season of the year before. This shows a decrease this season of 473,018 boxes, a big loss, part of which has been made good by the enlarged receipts of Californias, but some of it has never been supplied. This accounts for the high prices and the scarcity of stock which has kept the market in such a state of uncertainty practically all the summer season.

The first auction sale of Almeria grapes of importance was held this week. The offerings consisted of about six thousand barrels, and despite the fact that California Tokays and Malagas have been freely distributed for some weeks, business was remarkably good. The best barrels brought $4.12½@5.25. On the next lower grade prices were $2.67½@$3.67½, and a few poor ones sold for $1.67½. Buying was chiefly for local account, though there was some buying for interior distribution. Some dealers believe that the market is going to rule strong throughout the season, notwithstanding the fact that the sales of Californias are heavy and the quality remarkably good. It is probable that more California grapes are being generally distributed than ever before, but this doesn't appear to affect the sale of Almerias. Very many prefer the Spanish fruit because it is imported, not because it is better flavored or is otherwise any more satisfactory. It is the matter of importation that influences them to buy. It has been shown that the Spanish grapes keep better outside of cold storage than the California sorts, and that has something to do with their popularity. But even with hundreds of thousands of barrels of Almerias coming in there is nothing for California growers to fear. They will have a sale at good prices for every grape they ship to New York.

GOOD FRUIT SEASON.

The season which has just passed has been a good one for most sorts of fruits, and California growers appear to have been especially favored with practically everything they had to offer. Their oranges did not have to compete with Florida. The Porto Rico crop amounted to nothing and Jamaica imports were cut to practically no receipts at all. This left the market practically bare for Californias, and they sold at high prices throughout the season. There is nothing in the future to indicate that the competition of any other variety will do any particular injury. The Florida crop having begun to move will get out of the way before the California fruit begins to come very freely. The Jamaica crop is not selling well and probably will not during the remainder of the season. Porto Rico is an unknown quantity, but there is no indication that the output will interfere with anything else. Consequently the California grower will have it all his own way this year and his fruit will bring uniformly high prices.

NEW VILLE DE PARIS.

Great New Store, Just Opened, is a Model of Beauty and Business Utility.

October 6, 1893, the Ville de Paris opened on Broadway to the dry goods business with a little store of twenty-nine feet frontage in the Potomac block; yesterday the same firm opened the largest dry goods floor west of the Rocky Mountains—still on Broadway, but now in the remodelled Laughlin building. The present quarters of Fusenot front 110 feet on Broadway, 110 feet on Hill street, and run the entire length of the block, 326 feet.

The vista which greets the eye on entering this huge emporium is at once simple and massive. Every line of the store's construction seems to have been carried to completion by the designing artist, and first impression is one unusual in stores of retail character—unlimited room, unlimited airspace and an extraordinary amount of good, healthy daylight.

Down the center aisle of the store sweeps a wide "boulevard," from which departments, with broad counters and low shelving, open up on either side. This central thoroughfare is a distinctly new idea here.

Shelving and counters, made in simple lines as described, combining massiveness, beauty and utility, are all in mahogany finish, giving an unusual aspect of richness to the whole store.

A little more than half way back the main floor rises suddenly, broad stairs leading up a height of several feet to the Hill street level. Beyond these are the fitting departments, art department, and curtains and upholstery, conveniently arranged for show purposes.

An immense basement underlies the whole store, and a bargain department is to utilize the portion next the stairs. Out next to the Broadway sidewalk a convenient lunch room is placed for employés, brightly lighted by sidewalk lights, and fitted out with chairs and tables.

It is safe to say that few stores ever constructed in the West so combine utility with richness of furnishing and artistic elegance of fitting and construction.

It takes one-third the money to buy a lot here it does on Hill, Olive, Broadway and Grand avenue, but the surety of advance, the prospect of interest on the investment are east of Main. You take the Union Station, the building of large business houses, the thickly settled population, the newly arranged street car changes from Long Beach, the prospects of new lines on 6th and 7th streets, the lighting of 7th street (most all property frontage signed for it,) similar to Broadway and Spring streets, on 7th street from Figueroa to San Pedro, the nearness to the heart of our retail and wholesale district; these arguments should convince the most skeptical capitalist and investor that "now is the accepted time." Now is a golden opportunity.

DREW'S PLAY WON'T DRAW.

Dreariest of Talkee-Talkee, Says Lilian Bell.

More Commendation for Bob Edeson's "Strongheart."

This Actor's Next Venture Canadian Patois.

Lilian Bell finds many subjects for delightful gossip in New York's new theatrical affairs. Writing to The Times the first of the past week she says:

"Now I hate to say what I am going to, but the fact is that both Augustus Thomas and John Drew have made a mistake in 'De Lancey.'

"I went with a broad grin of pleased anticipation on my face. When the first act was over I said: 'Well, it will surely improve in the second.' When the second was over, two elderly ladies who sat next us, crowded past and went home, apologizing for disturbing us by saying, 'It's no use. We have admired John Drew for too many years to submit to this.'

"Still we stayed because I felt sure that so clever a man as Augustus Thomas would buck up in the third act. But he didn't, and the curtain went down at last leaving me as limp as a rag and so disappointed I could have cried.

"What under the sun is the matter with them?

"Of all the talkee-talkees I ever attended that is the worst. No action! No vitality! No plot! Why that play might have been written by W. D. Howells.

"And John Drew of all men! So clever! So restrained—usually. But how he does have to work in this play. 'So finished,' as the papers say of his acting. Well, this time Augustus Thomas has finished him.

"Think of the list of Augustus Thomas's successes: 'Arizona,' 'Alabama,' 'In Missouri,' 'On the Quiet,' 'The Earl of Pawtucket,' 'The Other Girl' and 'Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots.' And think of how John Drew scored in all his old roles, especially in 'The Second in Command.' I was with a party of friends when I saw that, and when he was left behind and his regiment sailed without him, the interest was so keen, the play so real that I was within an ace of standing up and creating a scene by shouting, 'Try the War Office, John!'

OH LOR'! "DE LANCEY."

"But, oh, Lor'! 'De Lancey!' Why nobody cares a hang whether Jacqueline marries him or whether she stays an old maid. I suppose Margaret Dale is capable of better acting and occasionally displays more magnetism than she does in this part, but it is only my lovely Christian character which makes me say that, for all she does as Jacqueline Marple is to balance from one foot to the other and [illegible] her mouth.

"And Doris Keen as Irene Millard, the friend, who cuts her out with the [illegible]—somebody must have told her that she has a beautiful throat-line, which she undoubtedly has, but one gets tired of seeing her carry her chin like the pilot of an engine through a whole play. It made my own neck ache the way it does when I see a horse checked up too tight.

"A man near me said, 'The play lacks vitality,' and I thought it was so sweet and gentle of him to say only it.

NO INTEREST.

"I say it lacks interest—it lacks cleverness, it lacks mainly an excuse for being, and I predict that as neither John Drew nor Augustus Thomas could score a failure in a city which [illegible] them both, as New York undeniably does, that at the close of the season 'De Lancey' will be numbered with those which 'did not draw,' to put it gently.

"Now as to the occasional clever lines in it. Did you ever drag a cat across the carpet by the tail? Well, that is about the easy gait by which the cleverness gets in. The only thing I even smiled at was when the actress says to her lover, 'You are [illegible]!' and John Drew replies: 'No, I am not!' 'Then why do your friends bring you whisky?' says she. 'Because they are my friends,' says he.

"STRONGHEART."

"William De Mille's great play of 'Strongheart' with Robert Edeson in the title role, is nearing the end of its second run in New York, and starts on its tour next week.

"This play will be a real treat. It might well be called a, if not the, typical American play, as it is the only play I know of which has an aboriginal American for its hero. It is an original idea to make a hero of a full-blooded American Indian, and the treatment is spirited, dignified and thoroughly consistent throughout.

"It combines the Indian and the college interests in a way particularly satisfactory to those who think that the ordinary run of undergraduates of modern colleges are Indians anyway.

"Columbia is the college honored in this way and there is a killing scene in the rooms of one of the boys just before the football game.

"Football is a never failing source of interest to collegians and their friends, and there is a breathless scene just off the field when Strongheart describes the game which he can see, but we can't. He does it so naturally that I found myself continually trying to see around the corner into the field, so that I could watch the game,

"And oh, Billy and his slang are so delightful! And I suppose a college man would understand his love making in the vernacular. It would need an interpreter to some.

NEXT ATTEMPT.

"His next attempt will be in a dramatization of Gilbert Parker's 'Pierre' [illegible], in which he will play the part of a French Canadian. This is undoubtedly an outcome of his success in 'Strongheart,' but so thoroughly do his managers believe in his possibilities that Sir Gilbert Parker is to meet him in America to arrange the final details in the near future.

"It will surely be an interesting experiment and one I look forward to with keen interest.

PEARL AND PUMPKINS.

"'The Pearl and the Pumpkin' is one of those beautiful extravaganzas with a monstrosity for a hero, expensively mounted at an enormous expense, with any number of pretty and graceful dancers and one good trio composed of Edwin Stevens, [illegible] MacDonough and George Richards, who are so naturally funny that I wish the text gave them a better opportunity to show how well they [illegible] were a little extra cleverness interpolated.

"For instance, I would suggest, as a [illegible], where an expected laugh fails to materialize, that in order to [illegible] they should be allowed to—but [illegible]. Why should I waste my [illegible]? Let them be satisfied with the knowledge that they furnish all [illegible] there is."

HEARTBREAK THE MESSAGE.

Girl Comes to Wed, Finds Her Lover Dead.

Pathos in Great Work of Train Deaconesses.

Incidents and Trials of a Day at the Station.

"Say, missus, I'll carry your bundles for nothin', 'cause you're a deaconess," exclaimed a little roustabout who was playing near the Southern Pacific depot as a sweet-faced young woman wearing the garb of a Protestant Sister of Charity emerged from the waiting-room with her arms full of bundles and carrying a heavy valise.

Every day as the great trains come thundering into the stations, bringing hundreds of tourists, pleasure seekers, home seekers, invalids in search of health, and prosperous people in search of wealth, there is some one there to greet and welcome the lowliest and most friendless one who arrives. It is the deaconess of the Travelers' Aid Department, maintained by the Young Woman's Christian Association. Yesterday a Times reporter accompanied her and spent the day watching the restless tide of humanity as it ebbed and flowed through the great station, and was a witness to the work of the energetic little deaconess.

Miss Pratt and Miss Steele, Y. W. C. A. deaconesses, Travelers' Aid Department.

The first arrival to need her assistance was a friendless woman suffering with a tubercular knee, who came in on the overland train from the North and was bound for Phoenix, Ariz., with the resource of exactly 50 cents besides her railroad ticket. She had required medical attention in Ogden, and a heartless doctor charged her $7 for the service, which so depleted her slender purse that she had denied herself food and was almost starved, but, clinging to the last 50 cents with a grim grit that commanded admiration. The little deaconess took the case in charge, got the woman across the street to the rest room maintained by the Y.W.C.A., telephoned for one of the young doctors who render service free to needy cases in connection with the deaconess work, took money from the emergency fund for the purpose and bought the needful medicine, fixed up a lunch and saw her patient on the out-going train for Phoenix. As she helped her on the train the sick woman said: "I think your work is just lovely. I never expect to be well and fit for much, but when I get better I want to be a deaconess."

Of course, this was meant for a compliment, but the fact that she took it for granted that an invalid could perform the duties of a deaconess was little short of amusing.

DIDN'T KNOW JOHN HAYES!

Immediately after this the St. Louis special came rushing in, and among the throng was a little old woman—very little, very old, and very much bewildered. The deaconess spied her at once and hastened to her side, reached out a friendly hand and said: "What can I do for you?" The anxious look faded from the wrinkled, care-worn face and the old lady responded: "Do you know John Hayes?" The deaconess confessed she didn't. The little old lady looked surprised and remarked: "How long have you lived here?" "About three years," replied the deaconess. "And you don't know John Hayes?" ejaculated the old lady, in astonishment. "No," said the deaconess, "but I think I can find him," hopefully, and she led the way to a quiet corner of the waiting room, where, by skilful questioning she drew out the story. A few years ago the only son of the little mother came to California to escape the dread disease, consumption, but, like many others, he came too late and died and was buried here. Ever since, the little old lady has been taking in washing back there in the Missouri town and laying aside her earnings with one purpose in her soul—she would see her boy's grave some day. Steadily the fund grew until there was enough to buy the ticket, and the little mother started. "John Hayes, our old neighbor, thought a lot of my boy," she confided to the little deaconess, "and he knows just the spot where he lies. No, I didn't write him that I was coming, for I wasn't just sure when I could start," she replied, "and I knew I could find him without any trouble, for he is so well known. He kept a grocery in Missouri. It's queer you don't happen to know him, dear, and you've been here three years, did you say?"

FOUND, AFTER ALL.

Nothing daunted, the little deaconess had recourse to the directory, but found so many pages of "John Hayes" that it looked as if it was almost a case of finding John Smith. The old lady did not know whether he spelled his name with an "e" or not, which complicated matters still more. However, at length, the deaconess selected six "John Hayes" in the long list of identical names, as the ones most likely to be correct. Appealing again to the old lady for any clew, the little mother glanced along the list of addresses and said, artlessly: "Well, dear, you see John isn't a very young man now, so we'll take the name of the oldest one in the lot and look him up."

Well, it actually happened that the John Hayes wanted was located within a very few hours, and he gave the little mother a glad, warm welcome, and she is with him and his family now.

At this season, when the cheap tourists rates are in effect, many people are emigrating to California and bringing as many of their household goods as they can conveniently carry. One such family passed through the station. They were from Indiana and had apparently brought most of their goods and chattels along, as each member of the family was literally loaded to the neck with hand baggage. The youngest boy was lugging a basket, and sitting demurely in it, gazing pensively and reflectively about, was a pet hen, on her nest of straw. "Yes," explained the busy mother, "Johnnie was bound to bring 'er along and she was a-settin', so he fetched her, nest and all, but if them aigs hain't addled before we git through with this trip I'll lose my guess."

THE PATHOS OF IT.

The other day a message was left at the Deaconess Home asking that the deaconess meet a delayed overland train which was due at 8 o'clock in the morning, but would not arrive till midnight. On board was a young lady coming to meet her lover. They had been engaged for several years and were to have been married before, but a severe attack of typhoid fever had prevented the prospective groom from going East to claim his bride at the appointed time, so she had come on here to join him. The little home was all ready and the marriage ceremony was to take place immediately on her arrival. Just at the time that she left her eastern home, her lover suffered a relapse and died within a few hours. He had no immediate friends here, but the people with whom he boarded had become very much attached to him and it was they who notified the little deaconess of the sad duty that awaited her. So when, in the still watches of the night, the train rumbled into the station and the beautiful girl stepped from it with a smile on her lips and a radiant look in her eyes to meet her lover, there was only a black-robed, soft-voiced, tender little woman there to meet her and tell her as best she could the heart-breaking truth. She was taken at once to the Deaconess Home and all the rest of the night they ministered to her needs.

A GREAT WORK.

During the past year one of the two deaconesses employed in this work has directed over 1500 persons to boarding-houses and nearly 300 have been cared for at the rest room of the association at No. 540 Central avenue, where a large room, fitted up with lavatories, couches, easy chairs, a stove where one can make a cup of hot tea, and in short all the comforts of a quiet resting place are provided. This rest room is maintained by the Adelphian Club of the Y.W.C.A. Travelers, to the number of two or three, can be accommodated over night here in this place adjacent to the station.

Early in the morning, when the 7:05 overland train rolls in, there stands the little deaconess waiting to welcome anyone who has no one else to welcome her. Again, two hours later, at 8:55, when the next eastern train comes in—there she is, smiling and alert. Then at 11:20, and again at 12:35, when the one from the south comes in—both these trains in two sections—she is there—waiting, welcoming, helpful. The last overland for the day arrives at 2:45, except on Mondays and Fridays, when the steamer trains come up from the beach with their passengers from the coast steamers landing at San Pedro, Redondo or Santa Monica. Then, beside these eastern trains, there are the dozens of local trains—sixty-four a day, all told, during the summer, but now that the beach extras have been taken off, the number is diminished. The little deaconess frequently meets some of the local trains as well, therefore, it may be gathered that her work is not that of a semi-invalid, but rather that of a strong, robust nature, both physically, mentally and spiritually.

TAKEN FOR DISPATCHER.

"It isn't always as sad and pathetic as you have happened to see," she remarked to the Times reporter when the day was over. "We sometimes have very funny experiences and many absurd things happen. I noticed the other day an old gentleman sitting in the waiting-room. He had the appearance of a rancher and was watching the crowds come and go with great interest. Finally his gaze fell upon me, after studying me closely for some time he ventured the inquiry: "'I say, Miss, do you call out the trains?'"

They have their trials, too—these gentle deaconesses. Their proteges are not always tractable and are sometimes suspicious. "I took an old lady who was very deaf to her destination the other day," remarked one of them, "and she insisted on shouting to the conductor for the name of every street as we passed it. She was very positive that we were on the wrong car and finally became very much excited and berated the conductor soundly, shrieking: 'Are you trying to kidnap us?' 'No,' he shouted back, 'I wouldn't know what to do with you.' Another time I took an old man and his little dog home, boarding the car with the dog in my arms. The old gentleman had wandered away from his home here in the city and brought up at the station. Oh, yes, we look out for men and boys as well as girls and women. Some people take us for porters, evidently, by the way they heap their luggage upon us, but, in the main, they are appreciative and grateful for any little service we may render them. An old lady of foreign birth, who reached here ill and utterly alone, and whom we assisted to find her relatives said in broken English as I left her: 'May the gude Got upstairs reward you.'"

ACCIDENTAL DEATH.

Inquest on Death of Jules Rambaud Exonerates All Known Persons from Blame.

The Coroner's inquest in the case of Jules Rambaud, who was found in a mutilated condition on the tracks of the Southern Pacific Railroad Tuesday night, and who later died fro his injuries, was held yesterday morning at the morgue of Pierce Brothers.

The only witnesses examined were M. T. Boller, special officer of the railroad, and Detectives Smith and Dixon, who had charge of the investigation.

Smith testified that he had talked with the deceased before his death, through the medium of an interpreter, and that he said that shortly before he was found mutilated by the train he had been at the rooms of a French woman and had $160 when he left there, and that three Mexicans had got hold of him.

When taken to the Receiving Hospital he had but about $2 on his person, and his watch and part of the chain were missing.

Detective Dixon told the same story and the railroad detective knew nothing beyond the finding of the body on the tracks, and a verdict was rendered that the man came to his death through accidental causes and exonerated anybody from blame.

There was some criticism of the Coroner because the French woman, Adele Benoit, and some other witnesses who might have been found, were not summoned, but it is extremely doubtful if these could have thrown any light upon the death of the unfortunate Frenchman.

"THE SUBSTANTIAL"

INVEST NOW IN SANTA ANA REAL ESTATE

BECAUSE

SANTA ANA is founded on a substantial basis.

SANTA ANA realty is going to advance rapidly in value as soon as the new Huntington Electric line is put in operation.

SANTA ANA property is now obtainable at much lower rates than are prevalent in other similar Southern California cities.

SANTA ANA has a larger contiguous territory of farms and ranches than has any other city in Southern California.

SANTA ANA is just opening to the tourist trade and to the outside investor and capitalist.

SANTA ANA property values are based on actual worth and do not represent any inflation or false rating.

SANTA ANA is a city of prosperous homes, where each citizen is the owner of his own home.

SANTA ANA is now in the midst of extensive municipal improvements that will give an impetus to property valuations.

SANTA ANA is growing in every direction, with new tracts of land being opened up every week.

SANTA ANA furnishes the place for a safe and sane investment in property that is absolutely certain to increase in value rapidly. There is no element of doubt in an investment in Santa Ana, "THE SUBSTANTIAL,"

"House and Lot"—Weekly Review of Real Estate and Building—Continued

AMONG OWNERS AND DEALERS.

THE WEEK'S REVIEW OF PRINCIPAL TRANSACTIONS.

A Busy Week Showing No Slacking in Demand for Business Property, Present or Prospective—Residence Property Not Very Active Excepting for Homes of Moderate Cost.

During the past week the demand for business property has been active as ever. Few actual deals are reported for the reason that holders decline as a rule to put a price on their property. The leading transactions reported have been as follows in parcels in and close to the city.

Along the Outskirts.

Following are the recent transfers reported by Millsap & Maynard: G. Hage to H. B. Smith, lot in Vernon Park Tract, $1000; H. T. Johnson, lot 24 and 25, Compton Avenue Tract, $1900; Mr. Warren to A. T. Baldwin, lots 14 and 15, Moneta avenue Walnut Grove Tract, $1600; to A. H. Duvall, lots 5 and 6, Strong-Dickinson Central Park Tract, $3800; Mrs. J. Dorsey to Bowen & Dalton, 10 acres on Thirty-eighth and Compton avenue, $20,000; John Gorman to Ben Colling, lots 1 and 2, Central Park Tract, $4150; L. E. Shepherd to Bowen & Dalton, twenty-eight acres lying on Vernon avenue close to Central and running back to Thirty-eighth street, for $65,000. Mr. Shepherd purchased the tract four years ago for about $17,000, and thus clears $49,000. Ben Colling sells to A. K. Macomber, lots 1 and 2, Strong & Dickinson's Central Park Tract, for $5000.

At Hollywood.

The G. Woods Hicks Company, report the following sales in the Lemona tract, corner Sunset Boulevard and Western avenues, Hollywood: fifty-three lots ranging in price from $600 to $700, and aggregating $33,805, many of these sales representing small blocks sold to speculators. Among those who expect to improve are: Lulu L. Taft, Mary N. Blair, Miss Mary Maher, Dora E. Scollard, Edwin Booth, Mrs. E. J. Edmunds, A. L. Wilkie, Mrs. A. B. Ryan, Harry McLeod, M. Herbert Bridle, A. H. Mann, G. W. Vansyckle, Anna B. Suess, Emma Smith, Annie R. Smith.

At San Pedro.

The firm last quoted report sales in the Sea View Tract, corner of First and Gibbon avenue, San Pedro, as follows: eight lots ranging in price from $325 to $400 and aggregating $2575. The buyers were: A. Z. Tillotson, J. T. Anderson, A. Hilleary, F. L. Bedell, A. H. Mann, Mrs. J. F. Thompson. This property is on the elevated plateau west of the town and commands one of the finest marine views on the Pacific Coast.

At Long Beach.

The same sold twenty-six lots in the Furlong Home Tract, corner of Fifty-fifth and Long Beach avenue. The lots range in price from $275 to $450 and the total sales aggregate $7150. Buyers who bought to improve were: L. Pruett, Annie M. Spikes, Celia Crawford, Mrs. S. A. Johnson, H. M. Kitchen, J. F. Davis, Anna Van Buren, W. H. Meeks, J. H. Spicer, John Wortham, J. A. Williams, James Alexander, Annie Bailey, Leroy Williams, S. A. Bowling, Miss E. Harris.

Good Figueroa Street Sale.

Murray & Stewart have sold for Mrs. O. P. Posey, to Walter J. Trask, a lot 73x180 feet, with fine house thereon, 1113 South Figueroa, formerly the home of Herman Silver, for $25,000. This establishes a new plane of values on this street at that point.

A Good Bunch.

Leavitt & Geller have sold to Jennie M. Winchester for John Shingler, the northeast corner of Budlong and Thirty-ninth street, 102x145 feet, improved with modern nine-room residence, consideration $7500; also to George W. Adams for F. M. Simpson & Co., a five-room cottage at No. 3415 Hough avenue, on lot 38x70 feet, consideration $2500. They also sold for Bruce Hess and W. A. Hess and W. A. Geller, to Alice J. Loughbrough, lot 25, Harry L. Bennett's Figueroa Place, 48x135 feet, consideration $500; and to C. O. Hawley for Horace J. Cline an eight-room residence, No. 823 South Union avenue, consideration named, $3000. To W. Wilcut, for J. P. Carter, a two-story eight-room house at 213 West Thirty-ninth street, lot 50x150 feet, for $4500.

Three Good Sales.

A. T. Jargens & Co., have sold for Frank C. Blume and T. L. Patterson to Dr. Charles H. Earle, Nos. 309-311 West Temple street, improved with a two-story brick building, nominal value, for $11,000. The lot has a frontage on Temple street of thirty feet and 100 feet west of Broadway, adjoining the W.C.T.U. building. Louis Brand to C. A. Thomas and James B. Pollock, Nos. 1224-1226 West Pico street, improved with a two-story frame and pressed-brick building for $7500. Philip Pohlman and Harry Bargsman to M. M. Allen and Amelia B. Allen, 60x125 feet on the west side of Figueroa street, 240 feet south of Eighth; consideration $23,500.

Temple and Broadway.

One of the most important sales of recent weeks is the transfer of the southwest corner of Temple and Broadway, from the estate of the late John H. Redick to a local syndicate comprising Ben Kingsbaker, S. S. Federman and D. Baruch. The lot is 145x180 feet, reaching from Temple street to the Christian Church. It has belonged for years to the Redick estate, the late Judge Redick of Omaha having bought it during the boom of 1886-1888. The price paid was about $110,000. The new owners have in mind the erection of a seven-story or eight-story building, covering the whole property. It is a good corner, and at about $600 a foot, so close in for so deep a lot, the buy looks like a good one.

Half a Dozen Sales Here.

Althouse Bros. report the following sales: Frank M. Vale sells to J. H. Dewey, an unimproved lot on the northwest corner of Hill and Seventeenth street, 104x120 feet, for $23,400. A. HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION.

A New Institution With College of Physicians and Surgeons on Trinity Street.

The picture on this page shows the new Angelus Hospital which has just been completed on Trinity street between Washington and Twentieth. To the right is the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and the other cut shows the entrance to that institution. The college is in its second year, the hospital will be open for business in two or three months.

These are separate incorporations, but the incorporators are the same persons throughout. It is two years since preliminary steps were taken and now the plans are complete. The following physicians are the incorporators: Chas. B. Nichols, president of both corporations; Fred C. Shurtleff, Chas. W. Bryson, James H. Seymour and Benj. F. Church. The combined capital is $200,000, and the building, with equipment, will cost $175,000.

There are certain entirely new features about this hospital. It has a well of its own, 255 feet deep, with 175 feet of soft, pure water in the hole. For use in the hospital the water is condensed from steam and then sterilized again. This water is served at 212 degrees Fahrenheit, or cool enough to drink. There is an ice-making plant, and cold-storage room for food for many weeks. The hospital makes its own electric light and power. There is a complete laundry in the hospital. The dissecting room is complete in all the latest appliances. The building is fireproof.

The college has about thirty students and these come in about even numbers from Southern California and from outside. Some are from the far eastern States, others from the far South, some from England, and one from Japan. This Japanese is a graduate of the University of Tokio and is here to take a post-graduate course. The incorporators all fill chairs in the college, and there are other physicians from this city and from other parts of Southern California. This is the second college of this kind in Los Angeles, the medical college connected with the University of Southern California being the pioneer school of many years standing. The buildings of this school are on Buena Vista street, near College street.

The buildings shown here are solid structures, built in the best style, and the appointments are all high class. Ample room has been provided for the two institutions. They occupy a whole city block.
